PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 93^d CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE—Thursday, December 19, 1974

The Senate met at 8:30 a.m. and was called to order by Hon. HUGH SCOTT, a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

PRAYER

Almighty God, Creator and Ruler of all men, look upon this Congress and grant that it may take its rightful place in the history and heritage of the Nation. Bless all that has been done which is in accord with Thy will, overrule all mistakes and guide us by Thy wisdom to complete the unfinished task in days yet to come.

Be with those who will serve no more in this Chamber granting them hallowed memories, peace of mind, and joyful hearts.

Come near those, O Lord, who take a new oath of office and assume new powers. Invest them with a sense of servanthood and support them by Thy pervading presence.

Lead us, as shepherds and wise men of old, to the manger of Him of whom it was written "the Government shall be upon His shoulder: and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace" (Isaiah 9:6).

"Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us" (Luke 2:15). Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. EASTLAND).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D.C., December 19, 1974.

To the Senate:
Being temporarily absent from the Senate on official duties, I appoint Hon. HUGH SCOTT, a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES O. EASTLAND,
President pro tempore.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT thereupon took the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

CXX—2586—Part 31

THE JOURNAL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday, Wednesday, December 18, 1974, be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURDICK). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER THAT THE SWEARING-IN CEREMONY OF THE VICE PRESIDENT BE HELD IN LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the swearing-in ceremony to be held later today be in legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR DURING SWEARING-IN CEREMONIES OF THE VICE PRESIDENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, inasmuch as the swearing-in ceremony will be held in legislative session, that will require the presence of the Journal clerk and I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that Mr. Bernie Somers be given the privilege of the floor. There will be a space in the front of my desk here for him.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that the legislative clerk, Mr. Harold G. Ast, assistant legislative clerk, Mr. William F. Farmer, Jr., and the assistant Journal clerk, Mr. James F. Thorndike, have the privilege of the floor, with the understanding that they will not be seated at their usual places.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I also ask unanimous consent that the pages be permitted the privilege of the floor. I think that arrangements can be made for them to stand on either side against the wall.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Zweben also be given the privilege of the floor. He will not be seated at the usual place.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my executive assistant, Miss Margaret Lynch, be also allowed the privilege of the floor. She will not, of course, occupy one of the seats.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mrs. Patricia Agnew, a historian in my office, be also allowed the privilege of the floor. She will not, of course, occupy one of the seats.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two Official Reporters, Mr. G. Russell Walker and Mr. William D. Mohr and Mr. Jim Timberlake, staff assistant, be allowed the privilege of the floor during the ceremony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR DURING SWEARING-IN CEREMONIES OF THE VICE PRESIDENT

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent also that Mr. Dompiere may be accorded the privileges of the floor during the swearing-in ceremony.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I regret that I inadvertently overlooked the name of Mr. Dompiere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD subsequently said: Mr. President, I inadvertently overlooked requesting that the Chaplain of the Senate be given the privilege of the floor during the ceremony today. I make such request now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

December 19, 1974

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I believe that the distinguished Republican leader requested that two members of his personal staff be on the floor today. I will do likewise.

I ask unanimous consent that two members of my personal staff be on the floor during the ceremony today, and their names will be supplied to the Sergeant at Arms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD subsequently said: Mr. President, I also overlooked four cloakroom attendants on each side. I ask unanimous consent that they be granted the privilege of the floor during the ceremony today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have been put in the position of making these requests, but I have done so in fairness to all. We have to keep in mind that Members of the House of Representatives—and they number only 435—also will have the privilege of this floor today.

So I suggest that we not proceed with any further unanimous-consent requests that persons be allowed the privilege of the floor. The walls will be stacked several persons deep when the Members of the House arrive. I just make this announcement in the hope that there will be no requests for aids or clerks to Senators.

I would not have asked for two for myself—I never have an aid on the floor, except for a few minutes at a time—but in this instance I did ask for two, because the distinguished Republican leader asked for two, and he is entitled to two.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD subsequently said: Mr. President, I am almost at the point of apologizing for continuing to ask for additional persons on the floor today, because so many Members of the House will be on the Senate floor. However, I ask that instead of two members of my staff, only one be on the floor, and that as a substitute for the other one, Mr. Bob Dove, who is an assistant parliamentarian and who is very diligent, always very courteous, and most helpful to all Senators, be given the privilege of the floor during the ceremony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Jody Baldwin and Ned Beach may have privilege of the floor during the swearing-in ceremony. They are staff members of the Republican policy committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session to consider the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations on the Executive Calendar will be stated.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

The second assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Wilson K. Talley, of California, to be an Assistant Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are considered and confirmed en bloc.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The second assistant legislative clerk read the nominations of Edward S. King to be U.S. marshal for the western district of New York for the term of 4 years; and Ronald C. Romans, of Nebraska, to be U.S. marshal for the district of Nebraska for the term of 4 years.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are considered and confirmed en bloc.

THE JUDICIARY

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are considered and confirmed en bloc.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of all the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield such remaining time as the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON) may desire.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I thank the distinguished Senator from West Virginia.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR MARLOW W. COOK

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, a term of 6 years in the U.S. Senate offers great opportunity for an individual to serve his country, his State, and his fellow man. To be chosen by one's fellow citizens to represent them in this body is in itself a high honor and no small achievement.

My senior colleague from Kentucky, Mr. Cook, is completing his tenure. Senator Cook has served the people of Kentucky well, as those of you who have served with him know. He has diligently applied himself to the problems and issues that have confronted Congress. It is no surprise to me that Senator Cook's work here has been recognized and acknowledged in many places.

Although we are from different parties, our friendship long predates his entry into the U.S. Senate. I observed his performance in the State legislature in Kentucky and his subsequent duty as county judge of our largest county, Jefferson. Senator Cook devoted many years working for the betterment of the State prior to entering the U.S. Senate. That service was extended and expanded during his membership here.

I feel I would be remiss, if I did not here publicly acknowledge the tremendous assistance that my senior colleague and his staff have extended to me as a new Member of this body during the past 2 years, and I want to express my appreciation for that help and cooperation, and extend to him and to his family my best wishes in whatever new endeavors he undertakes.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, pending the arrival of a Senator, that there now be a brief period for the transaction of routine morning business, with statements therein limited to 2 minutes, the period not to extend beyond 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there morning business?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATOR AIKEN SAYS "THANK YOU"

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, when the Senate convened yesterday, I was attending what was probably the last executive meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in this session.

December 19, 1974

This morning, in looking over the RECORD, as I usually do, I find that several of my colleagues made rather flattering remarks concerning my senatorial career, while I was attending the meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

I hope that I am entitled to a small percentage of the nice things they said about me and my wife, Lola. I thank them for all the remarks they made at that time.

I also want to say to those of us who are attending our last session of the Senate that I think we have a lot of work to do when we get home, because there is a great deal of misunderstanding about what the work of Congress is, what the work of government is, and there is a lot of misrepresentation. It seems to me that probably those of us who are going home can do as much good there as we have been doing here in the last few years.

Anyway, on behalf of Lola and myself, I want to say, "Thank you," to those who laid it on pretty thick yesterday.

[Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I listened with great interest to my senior colleague, Senator AIKEN. We have seldom disagreed in the years we have been in this body together. That is one reason why it has been so pleasant to serve with him.

But I must disagree on one little point this morning. When he said that yesterday his colleagues "laid it on pretty thick," my feeling is very strongly that we did not.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time on the Democratic side on the continuing resolution be under the control of Mr. McCLELLAN or his designee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I hope morning business can be concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1975

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 1180, which the clerk will state by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1180) making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment on page 5, beginning with line 16, insert:

Chapter V—DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION
JOB OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAM

For Job Opportunities Program assistance as authorized by title III of the Emergency Jobs and Unemployment Assistance Act of 1974, $250,000,000, to remain available until December 31, 1975: Provided, That this appropriation shall become available only upon enactment into law of H.R. 16596 or similar legislation by the Ninety-third Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I do not have a copy of the measure before me. I think they are on their way.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Do I understand correctly, Mr. President, that House Joint Resolution 1180 is now the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I believe we have a time limitation on this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct, 20 minutes to a side, the time to be controlled equally.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, in this supplemental appropriations bill passed by the House, there are only five items. The House bill contained four items, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations has added a fifth item, which is chapter 5 in the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. President, these items total $5,074,873,000. They are composed of $4 billion for additional public service jobs and extended unemployment compensation coverage, which was authorized by a bill we passed just a few days ago. It includes $812,200,000 for increased readjustment benefits for veterans, $10,200,000 for interim operating assistance for the Penn Central Railroad under the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973; and $2,473,000 for implementation of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission Act of 1974.

The items to which I have just referred, Mr. President, were all contained in the House bill. The Senate has added this item, $250 million for job opportunities programs of the Economic Development Administration, the Department of Commerce. That was added, Mr. President, by the Committee on Appropriations. That is a program that has been in effect, as we know, for a number of years, called the EDA program, which enables the Federal Government to provide assistance to States, counties, municipalities, in construction programs, primarily, such as the building and extension of water and sewer systems, in some instances roads out to new plant construction, sometimes enlargement of jails, the enlargement of courthouses, municipal buildings, and so forth.

This is actually a public works program. That is what it amounts to, and it has been in operation for a number of years. In view of the economic situation today, there are those who felt that money to provide jobs and to provide construction work in this particular category would be economically beneficial to the communities where those projects may be constructed, and also would enhance or provide some additional jobs, and thus alleviate, to some extent—to some small degree, at least—unemployment situations that may prevail in many localities.

Mr. President, with that addition to the bill, as I said a few moments ago, of $250 million for job opportunities, the whole bill totals $5,074,873,000. I do not know, Mr. President, of any opposition to the bill unless it be opposition to that amendment.

I yield the floor to anyone who wishes to speak to it.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, it is not easy for me to vote for a supplemental appropriation bill, especially one the size of this bill. But we are in a period of inflation and depression at the same time, with about 6.5 percent of our work force unemployed. There is a budget estimate for all but $1 million of this appropriation. This bill would appropriate $5,074,000,000. The new section added by the committee for the Economic Development Administration, EDA, is $250 million; otherwise, the amount of this bill would be $150 million below the budget.

Mr. President, I do not believe it will be necessary for me to go further in discussing the details of this bill. The distinguished chairman of the committee has done that very well. I see no alternative, Mr. President, but to support this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUDDLESTON). Who yields time?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Washington

December 19, 1974

(Mr. MAGNUSON) wishes to address the Senate with respect to certain provisions in the bill, certain appropriations of $4 billion particularly, which come under the jurisdiction of his Subcommittee on Labor, Health, and Welfare.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I shall make only a few brief remarks to further elaborate upon the very adequate explanation by the chairman of the full committee, Senator McCLELLAN.

Chapter I of the "urgent supplemental" contains five Department of Labor items totaling $4 billion to provide emergency assistance to the increasing number of our citizens who find themselves without jobs. It is a sad commentary on our economy that this current recession has been allowed to deepen to the extent that we must now frame emergency measure that cost as much as the current budget for all the other activities of the Department of Labor.

Most of the money—$2.75 billion—is necessary to meet the increased costs of unemployment compensation to 5.3 million beneficiaries. Another $1 billion is needed to create over 100,000 more public service jobs—which would about double the current program. The remainder of the request—$250 million—is needed to pay for Federal and State administrative costs to process the higher volume of unemployment benefits.

Mr. President, this chapter involves an enormous amount of money—$4 billion—but it will only provide jobs for about 1 out of 25 of the unemployed. On the other hand, it is doubtful that the Labor Department can expand the public service jobs program any faster than provided for by the level of funding in this bill. In any case, the committee has acted expeditiously on this request in order to help alleviate the current unemployment situation. If the economic situation continues to deteriorate, the administration may wish to come forward with a further budget request which the Congress could consider early next year.

As the first line of defense against rapidly rising unemployment, the bill includes funding for unemployment benefits to an additional 1.9 million newly covered persons who are not otherwise eligible. This includes State and local government employees and farmworkers.

Mr. President, the committee's recommendation reflects our concern about the great number of citizens who find themselves out of work because of circumstances over which they have little or no control. The entire economy is going downhill and more and more of our citizens will be forced out of their jobs and onto the unemployment rolls. Certainly it is better to provide public service employment for such unemployed individuals, rather than to force them and their families onto the welfare rolls. Moreover, we know that the swelling unemployment means that fewer citizens will be able to pay taxes and more citizens will be on various forms of relief programs.

As I said, these unfortunate citizens can have little control over such circumstances. Consequently it seems to me that it is incumbent upon the national administration to take a more active role in ameliorating the adverse effects of the current recession. Something more is needed from the administration than the current rash of cutback proposals which can only prolong and deepen the current recession.

Sometimes I get the vague sense that we are involved in a "rob Peter to pay Paul" merry-go-round. For example, the administration tells us that we must cut back on medical research in order to balance the budget. Such cutbacks only serve to deprive our trained cadre of health researchers of gainful employment—and stall the advance of medical knowledge—with the inevitable consequence that we must then provide funds to pay their unemployment compensation or give them employment as hospital aides instead of medical researchers.

In any case, Mr. President, there is no doubt that we must enact this legislation to combat the unemployment that already exists. I wish I could be more reassured that the administration was taking a rational view of the entire state of the economy and that next year's budget will not be of such a restrictive budgetary nature as to further aggravate the already serious unemployment situation.

Mr. President, I am also aware that the state of the economy may have the effect of generating an increased demand in the work incentive—WIN—program. The Labor-HEW Appropriations Subcommittee has asked the General Accounting Office and the Congressional Research Service to examine this situation, which they are now doing. The next opportunity for Congress to consider additional funds for this program, should it become absolutely necessary, would be in a subsequent supplemental to be enacted early in the 94th Congress. I would like to reassure the Members that the committee is keeping careful watch on this program with a view to establishing whether or not additional funds may be required.

Mr. President, in closing, let me state that I believe that the amounts included in this supplemental will be sufficient to meet the needs in the area of unemployment for the months ahead; but because no one can accurately predict at this time just what the unemployment situation will be in the future, it will be necessary for the administration and the Congress to reassess the funding needs for these programs early in the 94th Congress. In the interim, I am confident that this bill provides sufficient funds to meet the necessary expenses of the Department of Labor for the months immediately ahead.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am pleased to add my strong support to House Joint Resolution 1180 as reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Yesterday I appeared before that committee and testified in support of urgent appropriations for the job opportunities program as authorized by title III of the Emergency Jobs and Unemployment Assistance Act of 1974. Other members of the Economic Development Subcommittee of the Public Works Committee, including its distinguished chairman, Senator MONROE, and its distinguished ranking minority member Senator McCLELLAN, also testified. I commend them on their leadership in working so diligently and expeditiously to bring to fruition this job assistance program only so recently authorized by the Congress.

The Senate version of the urgent supplemental appropriations resolution differs from the House version by the addition of chapter V. That chapter appropriates $250,000,000 to implement immediately the program created by title III of the Emergency Jobs and Unemployment Assistance Act of 1974. This is only one-half of the $500,000,000 authorized by that act, but it is certainly enough to get this urgently needed job opportunities program started while the normal appropriations process is followed for the remainder of the authorization.

I commend the Appropriations Committee for recognizing the urgency of the need for funding of this program and for providing funds for it in this urgent supplemental appropriations legislation.

I urge the full Senate to pass this resolution and send it to conference with the House with strong backing for chapter V. I urge the House to also recognize the critical situation to which this chapter would enable us to respond effectively and quickly so that this chapter will be retained in conference.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, if there are no further amendments, I ask for the third reading of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR VOTE ON URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1975 TO OCCUR AT 12:30 P.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, with the approval of the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the distinguished ranking member, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on passage of the urgent supplemental appropriations occurs today at the hour of 12:30 p.m., in accordance with our assurances to the Senators last night that no rollcall votes will occur today before 12:30 p.m.

UMI

December 19, 1974

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to that whatsoever. But I would like to get the third reading so that we will know there will be no more amendments, and all time is yielded back so there will be nothing to interfere with the vote at that time.

Mr. YOUNG. Yes, it is agreeable to me, Mr. President, and I will yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

All time has been yielded back, and the third reading has occurred.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the unanimous-consent request to defer the rollcall vote on it until 12:30 today.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank Mr. McCLELLAN and I thank Mr. YOUNG.

ORDER WAIVING PARAGRAPH 3 OF RULE XII

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that paragraph 3 of rule XII be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1975

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 1178, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1178) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1975, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time for debate on this resolution shall be limited to 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUE) and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG).

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, that control of time was later changed. It is Mr. McCLELLAN on this side of the aisle or his designee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Who yields time?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, we are on a time limitation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield myself, Mr. President, 5 minutes.

Mr. President, House Joint Resolution 1178, the further continuing resolution, under consideration, would extend the current continuing resolution until February 28, 1975.

It would cover the following bills which have cleared the Congress until the President signs them into law:

First. Military construction appropriation bill;

Second. Agriculture appropriation bill; and Third. Supplemental appropriation bill.

When these bills are signed into law, the continuing resolution will then cover activities for which provision was made in last year's foreign assistance appropriation bill in the absence of a new bill, as well as various programs and activities not yet funded in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Office of Economic Opportunity, and the Cabinet on Opportunities for Spanish Speaking People. These programs have no new authorization or appropriations for fiscal year 1975. In addition, the continuing resolution would cover such HEW programs for which there have been no appropriations, including emergency school aid, health grants to States, community mental health center, family planning, health manpower, construction of hospitals and medical facilities and several other programs. Also the resolution provides for continuation of the Commission of the revision of the Federal court appellate system.

The major continuing resolution activity, of course, deals with the foreign assistance appropriation bill. This funding level, under the continuing resolution, amounts to $3,481,000,000, a decrease of $2,449,000,000 below the fiscal year 1974 level, and a decrease of $1,700,000,000 below the fiscal year 1975 budget request.

In addition, the continuing resolution earmarks special items for foreign assistance as follows:

First. $150,000,000 in supporting assistance to Israel;

Second. $150,000,000 in supporting assistance to Egypt;

Third. $25,000,000 for a Middle East Special Requirements Fund;

Fourth. Additional $15,000,000 for famine and disaster relief for Cyprus;

Fifth. $10,000,000 for assistance to Palestinian refugees;

Sixth. $10,000,000 for assistance for refugees from the Soviet Union; and Seventh. $10,000,000 for Portugal and Portuguese colonies.

The continuing resolution also contains the same language dealing with suspension of military assistance to Turkey as contained in the conference report on the Foreign Assistance Act of 1974, which cleared the Senate the day before yesterday and the House yesterday. The effect of this language is to suspend all military assistance to Turkey as of February 5, 1975, unless the President certifies that several conditions have been met. I believe most Members are familiar with those provisions.

The House passed the continuing resolution before us by a vote of 272 to 122. There were two amendments adopted by the committee and recommended to the Senate. They are $10,000,000 for assistance to Palestinian refugees and $10,000,000 for assistance to Portugal and Portuguese colonies. Unless any Member has a question, I yield the floor to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, and then I will yield to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUE) can explain this bill in much more detail than I can. He has handled this bill very capably, after holding long hearings on it. I think his views are worth considering by the Members of the Senate.

We ordinarily would have had a foreign operations assistance appropriations bill, but the authorization bill was not passed in time to go that route, but I understand the money appropriated under this continuing resolution will be at a level approximately a billion dollars less than it might otherwise have been; had there been an appropriation.

Only two new items were added, $10 million for Portugal and $10 million for assistance to refugees from the Soviet Union.

Mr. President, I believe this is a necessary program. I ordinarily do not vote for foreign aid programs, but I believe this is a minimum that is needed and I believe it should be adopted.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield such time as the distinguished Senator needs.

Mr. INOUE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. President, I would like to spend a few moments describing in some detail some of the special appropriations found in this continuing resolution.

As the chairman has indicated, the committee recommends that we approve the House recommendation of $150 million for supporting assistance to Israel, a similar amount in supporting assistance to Egypt, and $25 million for the Middle East Special Requirements Fund.

As all of us are aware, these constitute the package that was submitted by the Secretary of State to assist him in seeking this rather illusive peace in the Middle East.

On the matter of Cyprus, I believe it should be noted that $10 million has already been obligated thus far in fiscal year 1975 and the recommendation of $15 million in the resolution will make a total of $25 million available for assisting refugees on this war-torn island.

The committee further wishes to point out that a specific amount for military assistance to Israel was not included in the continuing resolution because under the existing authority $300 million can be made available for military credit sales to Israel.

There are two items in this resolution which did not appear in the House version. The first is a $10 million item in assistance to Portugal and Portuguese colonies.

This $10 million was submitted to the Senate at the urgent request of the Secretary of State, and we concur with the Secretary that it is important that the United States demonstrate support for the transition to independence of Portuguese-speaking Africans, as well as indicating our friendly interest in Portugal's transition to Western democracy.

The amounts will be used for various purposes. For example, at the present time, the island of Mozambique has insufficient foreign exchange to pay for critically needed food imports and spare parts, and without this assistance Mozambique's economy, which is basically sound, will be drastically affected.

In other countries, illiquidity and lack of foreign currencies are significant factors in the rapidly worsening economic picture.

UMI

December 19, 1974

The other matter which did not appear in the House resolution is the sum of $10 million to be appropriated for the purpose of providing refugee assistance to Palestinian refugees.

Mr. President, as all of us are aware, during the past year and a half this Congress has appropriated the sum of $86.5 million to assist Soviet Jews to relocate themselves to Israel. This bill contains an additional $10 million for this purpose.

The committee felt that the Office of Migration and Refugee Affairs should provide additional assistance to Palestinian refugees through the United National Relief and Works Agency or as otherwise authorized by Public Law 87-510. Refugees from Palestine now number over 1.5 million. Unlike many other refugees who have fled from their homelands in search of safety, the Palestinians have found no refuge. Palestinians in exile continue to search for peace and safety.

Over the past 26 years, they have been caught up in the rivalry of nations in the Middle East. Too frequently have they been the pawns in the international political process, and three times they have seen their homes, schools, and hospitals destroyed by the contending armies of the Middle East states.

Often neglected, seemingly in the backwaters of international concern, the Palestinian refugees have known no peace and have had very little reason to hope. Their camps have become the focal point of discontent.

Now, however, the United States has the opportunity to encourage the emergence of new realities in the Middle East.

In addition to the inadequate programs presently under consideration for rendering assistance to governments of the area, we feel there must be more tangible evidence of concern for the plight of the Palestinian refugees.

The modest amount the committee has recommended will be instrumental in convincing the Palestinians that they are not a forgotten people, and the committee very sincerely believes that this will advance the cause of peace in the Middle East.

As the chairman has noted, the language which appeared in the authorizing bill relating to Turkey and Greece also appears in this measure. On all other items, this bill is identical to that passed by the House a few days ago.

I join my chairman and the ranking minority Member in urging this Senate to adopt and support this continuing resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I have no requests for time.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Wait a minute. It will be on someone's time. Ascertain whether there are any amendments to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Have the committee amendments been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments have not been agreed to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUBLESTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments agreed to en bloc are as follows:

On page 3, in line 3, insert:
Assistance to Portugal and Portuguese colonies, $10,000,000;

On page 3, at the end of line 6, strike out "and".

On page 3, in line 8, strike out the colon and insert a semicolon and the word "and".

On page 3, beginning in line 9, insert "Assistance to Palestine Refugees, $10,000,000:".

Mr. McCLELLAN. Is the joint resolution now open to further amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is now open to further amendment. Who yields time?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I ask that the time be equally charged against both sides.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I cannot agree. Is the Senator talking about the amendments?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No. On the resolution.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have no objection. I believe we have 1 hour on each side.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Have the amendments been adopted?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Does the Senator wish to have them treated as original text for the purpose of further amendment?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill, as amended, be regarded for the purpose of amendment as original text, provided that no point of order shall be considered to have been waived by reason of agreement to this order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask that the time be charged against both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, as I understand the parliamentary situation, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has laid before the Senate a continuing resolution, and my amendment has already been called up. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The continuing resolution is before the Senate. The amendment of the Senator has not been called up.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I send my amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we dispense with further reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS' amendment, proposed by Mr. HOLLINGS (for himself, Mr. CHILES, Mr. NUNN, Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. COOK, Mr. DOLE, Mr. DOMINICK, Mr. PROXMIER, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. ROTH, Mr. BROCK, Mr. BELLMON, and Mr. DOMINICK), to House Joint Resolution 1178, a joint resolution making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1975, and for other purposes. At the end thereof insert the following:

On page 4, after line 12.

TITLE II—REDUCTIONS IN OBLIGATIONS AND OUTLAYS

SEC. 201. In view of the developments which constitute a threat to the economy with resulting inflation, the Congress hereby finds and determines that, taking into account action on appropriation bills to date, Federal obligations and outlays in controllable programs for the fiscal year 1975 should be reduced by no less than $10,900,000,000 and $5,450,000,000, respectively, below the President's budget request. The limitations hereafter required are necessary for that purpose.

SEC. 202. (a) During the fiscal year 1975, no department or agency of the executive branch of the Government shall incur obligations in excess of the lesser of—

(1) the aggregate amount available to each such department or agency as obligatory authority in the fiscal year 1975 through appropriation Acts or other laws, or

(2) an amount determined by reducing the aggregate budget estimate of obligations for such department or agency in the fiscal year 1975 by—

(i) 2 per centum of the amount included in such estimate for personnel compensation and benefits, plus

(ii) 10 per centum of the amount included in such estimate for objects other than personnel compensation and benefits.

(b) As used in this section, the terms "obligational authority" and "budget estimate of obligations" include authority derived from, and estimates of reservations to be made and obligations to be incurred pursuant to, appropriations and authority to enter into contracts in advance of appropriations.

(c) The references in this section to budget estimates of obligations are to such estimates as contained in the Budget Appendix for the fiscal year 1975 (House Document Numbered 93-265, Ninety-third Congress, second session), as amended during the second session of the Ninety-third Congress.

SEC. 203. (a) This title shall not apply to obligations for (1) permanent appropriations, (2) trust funds, (3) items included under the heading "relatively uncontrollable" in the table appearing on page 39 of the Budget for the fiscal year 1975 (House Document Numbered 93-265, part 2, Ninety-third Congress, second session), and other items required by law in the fiscal year 1975, or (4) programs, projects, or purposes, not exceeding $300,000,000 in the aggregate, determined by the President to be vital to the national interest or security, except that no program, project, or purpose shall be funded in excess of amounts approved therefor by Congress.

(b) This title shall not be so applied as to require a reduction in obligations for national defense exceeding 10 per centum of the new obligational authority requested in the Budget for the fiscal year 1975, as amended during the second session of the Ninety-third Congress: Provided, That the President may exempt from the operation of this title any obligations for national defense which he deems to be essential for the purposes of national defense.

(c) This title shall not be so applied as to require a reduction exceeding 20 per centum of the amount specified in any appropriation provision contained in this or any other Act or any activity, program, or project within such appropriation.

SEC. 204. In the administration of any program as to which (1) the amount of obligations is limited by section 202(a) (2) of this title, and (2) the allocation, grant, apportionment, or other distribution of funds among recipients is required to be determined by application of a formula involving the amount appropriated or otherwise made available for distribution, the amount available for obligation as limited by that section or as determined by the head of the agency concerned pursuant to that section shall be substituted for the amount appropriated or otherwise made available in the application of the formula.

SEC. 205. To the maximum extent practical, reductions in obligations for personnel compensation and benefits under this title shall be accomplished by not filling vacancies. Insofar as practical, reductions in obligations for construction under this title may be made by stretching out the time schedule of starting new projects and performing on contracts so as not to require the elimination of new construction starts.

SEC. 206. The amount of any appropriation or authorization which (1) is unused because of the limitation on obligations imposed by section 202(a) (2) of this title and (2) would not be available for use after June 30, 1975, shall be used only for such purposes and in such manner and amount as may be prescribed by law in the first session of the Ninety-fourth Congress.

SEC. 207. The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall make a report to the Congress of the estimated effect of this title by department and agency within forty-five days of the enactment of this Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire of the Senator if this is the amendment on which 3 hours of debate have been ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is correct. It is 1½ hours on each side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I first want to acknowledge the support of the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. NUNN), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMINICK), both of the Senators from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT and Mr. BELLMON), the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK), the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIER), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), and the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK).

In listing these cosponsors, Mr. President, I point immediately to the bipartisan nature of the concern within Congress that we get the Government out of the money market so that we can lower the inflation rate, and lower the interest rates, by bringing the body politic in shape to be able to provide the many needed programs to face up to the recession in the ensuing year, 1975.

Mr. President, this is the last call to the 93d Congress for economy as this is the last appropriation bill. This amendment, which is virtually identical to Public Law 90-218, is designed to cut an additional $3.2 billion from the budget by reducing new budget authority by $6.4 billion.

As the Senate will recall, the President has asked us for four things in the main before we adjourn: the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller as Vice President; the public service employment program and an increase in unemployment compensation; the trade bill; and last, but by no means least, the enactment of a broad program that would reduce the budget by $4.6 billion. The Congress has responsibly acted on all of these except the program to reduce the budget—in fact, that program has not even been introduced.

At one point I was prepared to introduce the President's budget program, but after carefully reviewing all of the actions that must take place I concluded that you just cannot get there from here. Apparently, my colleagues have come to the same opinion that the President's program is unrealistic and there is no way that this Congress is going to approve the proposed changes in the social security laws, reduce the strength of the Reserves and National Guard, and the mixed bag of budget recessions and deferrals.

Mr. President, because we cannot enact the President's program is no reason for Congress to fiddle while the fires of deficit Government spending makes Uncle Sam the borrower of 62 percent of the Nation's lendable funds. In fact, just last week before the Business Advisory Council, President Ford strongly renewed his call for budget reductions and it is imperative that the Congress take some hard action to reduce Federal spending so that more capital will be available for a recovery in the vital housing industry and help to restore consumer and business confidence.

On Tuesday of this week the administration's top economic spokesman, the Honorable William E. Simon, strongly testified to the Budget Committee of the compelling need to restrain excessive Government spending. I want to quote just a few short paragraphs from his statement:

There have been significant changes in the economic situation since I appeared before you in August. These changes deserve and are receiving our close attention within the Administration. However, nothing has happened in these past few months that detracts from the necessity of bringing the entire Federal budget process under much better control. Federal expenditures have doubled in the past 8 years and have built up a powerful momentum. Even with favorable action on the President's proposed cuts in spending, Federal outlays would rise by $34 billion in the current fiscal year—a rise of 13 percent. At that rate, Federal expenditures would double again in just another 6 years. We must not allow anything like that to happen.

The problem is not only runaway Federal expenditure programs and chronic budget deficits. We are deceiving ourselves and the American public by excluding items from the budget that have a considerable impact on the economy and the American taxpayer. For example, in fiscal year 1974 the reported figure of $3 billion of Government borrowing from the public (to finance the unified budget deficit of $3.5 billion) showed only the tip of the iceberg: the net borrowing from the public to finance Federal programs outside the budget was estimated at $28 billion. During the past decade the unified budget had a cumulative deficit of $102.9 billion. But total net borrowings for off-budget programs were an even more staggering figure—$142.0 billion. The disruptive effects on the Nation's capital markets of having the government borrow one quarter of a trillion dollars in a single decade deserves much more attention. I seriously doubt that we will ever be able to have either stable housing markets or the level of savings and capital investment needed to generate the necessary jobs and economic output until we correct this serious government distortion of the financial markets.

There is much that needs to be done—and done quickly—by your Committee and the rest of us to restrain excessive Federal spending and moderate the use of Federal credit. We will not solve the problems of stagflation by opening the sluice gates of Federal spending and lending. We would only worsen our long run budgetary situation which is bad enough already.

This is exactly what the proponents of this amendment contended during the discussions of our proposal here on the Senate floor earlier in the week. We have got to reduce Government spending in order to reduce the deficit which is robbing the capital markets of the very funds American industry needs to recover from this recession, depression, or stagflation, or whatever you call it.

Mr. President, certainly the campaign and results of the election just a month ago have not been forgotten by my colleagues. The No. 1 human problem is the high cost of living. It is time we face up to it!

Before getting into the specifics of our amendment, I want to quote just once more from Secretary Simon's statement of Tuesday:

Surely the lessons are clear: First, there is no worthwhile payoff in a decision to ignore inflation and focus all policy on recession. Both are components of the same malaise. We are fighting a two-headed monster: one head is inflation and the other is recession, and the inflation has been the culprit in causing much of the recession. And the experience of the past decade clearly demonstrates that allowing inflation to accelerate so explosively does not achieve any benefits (except in the very short run) in the form of a reduced level of unemployment. Second, if we do not seize this present opportunity to pursue responsible fiscal and monetary policies, the problems of rampaging inflation and a weak economy will be even worse the next time around.

This amendment provides the Congress with the opportunity to "seize this present opportunity to pursue responsible fiscal and monetary policies" in a manner that avoids the pitfalls of the President's program. This amendment, which the Senate approved on December 12, 1967, by a vote of 74 to 0, of which 44 Senators who found it meritorious are still in the Senate, simply provides that:

During the fiscal year 1975, no department or agency of the Executive Branch of the Government shall incur obligations in excess of the lesser of—

(1) the aggregate amount available to each such department or agency as obligatory authority in the fiscal year 1975 through appropriation acts or other laws, or

- (2) an amount determined by reducing the aggregate budget estimate of obligations for such department or agency in the fiscal year 1975 by—
- (i) 2 percent of the amount included in such estimate for personnel compensation and benefits, plus
- (ii) 10 percent of the amount included in such estimate for objects other than personnel compensation and benefits.

Now that is plain enough. The controlling factors are either the amount appropriated or the amount determined by the formula, whichever is the lower amount. The formula reduces the aggregate budget authority available by 2 percent of the budgeted obligations for personnel compensation and benefits and 10 percent of the other classes of controllable obligations. Let me emphasize that the controlling factors are either the amount appropriated or the amount determined by the formula. There has been some confusion that the formula must be rigidly adhered to but that is totally false. In fact this point is part of legislative history of the predecessor legislation of Public Law 90-218. On page 5 of the conference report (H. Rept. 1011) that was filed with this legislation there was the following statement:

The substitute as agreed upon in conference is specific as to amounts of reductions to be made at the department or agency level. The allocation of the reduction within the various departments and agencies would be determined by the officials of the departments and agencies, and would be subject to the approval of the President. Personnel reductions are not absolutely mandatory, although undoubtedly in many cases reductions will be made in civilian compensation costs. Departments and agencies may choose to cut other expenses an amount equal to 2 percent of personnel services estimates and maintain personnel levels. Of course, no individual employee's salary will be reduced by the operation of this title.

This was further elaborated on by Senator Holland, the manager of that continuing resolution on the Senate floor, as follows:

Mr. President, the effect of these provisions would be to impose a ceiling on the obligation to be incurred by a department or agency—that is, by each department and by each agency separately. In other words, the reductions are not supplied to specific appropriations, but are reductions in the total obligations of the department or agency.

The argument was made yesterday in the Appropriations Committee that this amendment will displace multitudes of Federal employees while at the same time we have just appropriated $1 billion for public service jobs. That is also false. The preliminary estimate of the Civil Service Commission is that there was a 26-percent rate of turnover in Government jobs during last fiscal year. Furthermore, they estimate that about 50,000 people will be retiring at the end of this month. Certainly all those jobs are not that critical that they immediately have to be refilled. I am also reminded that the administration has a goal of reducing Federal employment by 40,000 through attrition, and that a considerable portion of the President's recessions are to be accomplished by a greater lapsing of jobs vacant through attrition. Besides, Federal employment has always been able to grow, and grow, and grow. In fact, executive branch employment grew by 58,000 over the number projected in the budget during 1968 when this amendment was law.

We have distributed to each Senator our best estimate of the effect of this amendment. I will right away acknowledge that the figures are not totally complete but are the best that could be done with the limited information available. I would prefer that they were absolutely nailed down tight but either by design or happenstance the OMB nor anyone else seems to have all the required data. We did the best we could and it is of great comfort to me that in the largest category, Defense, the staff of the Appropriations Committee is in agreement with our analysis.

The administration is actively opposing this amendment. They profess to prefer "selective" reductions that will never happen instead of a demonstrable workable procedure that avoids the entrapment of the interests opposed to each of the parts of their "selective" program.

Mr. President, this is our last opportunity to back the President by reducing Government expenditures. We are in agreement that this must be done. His plan will not work—this one will.

With all respect to our colleagues on the Appropriations Committee, on which I am honored to serve, the amendment was considered yesterday afternoon in the committee and voted down by a vote of 12 to 5.

Various points were raised. One was that the economic model of 1967 was different from that of 1974. Another view asked: what about the hard work that the committee chairman had done all during the year? Should we disregard all that hard work? What about the matter of jobs? Would it not be a rather specious move, on the one hand, to cause unemployment by a cut in each of the departments of approximately 2 percent in personnel and then, on the other hand, vote billions for public service employment?

Mr. President, these are some striking problems between what we offer today and the problem we had in 1967. At that time, we were at the height of the war in Vietnam. A budget had been proposed by President Johnson. Similarity No. 1, Congress, in trying to cut back, had the policy of guns or butter and had cut out some $5 billion. Also, we were 5 months into the fiscal year.

Some argue what a terrible trauma and exacerbation it would cause in trying to effect these particular cuts. It has been said that a 2 percent cut in personnel would be one thing at the beginning of a fiscal year, but in the middle of a fiscal year it would have to be doubled in order to be implemented. We were 5 months into the fiscal year in December 1967, and inflation was public enemy No. 1.

Here we find a difference, with the headlines and statements, but certainly not a difference within the administration.

The day before yesterday, Mr. Simon said, before a hearing of the Senate Budget Committee, "Make no mistake; inflation is the chief culprit." There is excessive spending, confiscatory Federal borrowing, whereby over the last decade, the U.S. Government has borrowed in the capital market approximately a quarter of a trillion dollars, more than $250 billion.

In fact, the distinguished Senator from Virginia (Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.) delivered a speech in August, after his research and work in the Committee on Finance, in which he told of the amount of Government participation in the capital market, approximating $100 billion at an annual rate. It nets out at $31.5 billion this year, probably $35 billion. But the actual participation, the dollars taken to be employed for Government programs, the dollars taken for the public sector, away from the private sector, away from jobs and investments and planned expansion, is a hundred billion bucks.

We had inflation in 1967 at the rate of approximately 5 percent. It had not quite reached it, but was approximating it at that time. Now we have inflation of between 11 and 12 percent, almost 3 times as much, in 1974.

To my mind, if there is any logic, that means that, as Secretary Simon says, the recession is inflation induced; and in order to take care of the problems of recession, we must first go to the cause and not the symptoms. We still have to act on stemming the tide of inflation, stemming the tide of excessive Government spending.

So even at that particular rate, President Johnson, seeing the problem, along with the leadership in Congress, moved, and they moved together. I think that is one distinct difference.

There are various opinions, but, like it or not, Lyndon Johnson was a leader. Some did not like the way he led in the war, his particular position; but when it came to congressional initiatives, when it came to budgetary matters, when it came to getting a bill through, he had no equal. When it came to putting first things first in 1967, he did it. He was not chasing around with Giscard d'Estaing of France, in Martinique, or the Chancellor of Germany, or the Prime Minister of Canada, or in Vladivostok, or in Japan at the judo games. Domestic problem No. 1 was on his mind. He did not go around all over the world, trying to fuff the problems and break down any kind of discipline we could have. We had this discipline several times before the election.

We voted in May for a $295 billion spending limit. We voted in August for a $295 billion spending limit. It seemed that we could sort of follow through on what we had pledged in the election of last month and go ahead with this thing. Instead, there is now all kinds of confusion.

President Johnson was not confused. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the chairman on Appropriations, the Bureau of the Budget, and the White House were all moving in the same direction. Without a single dissenting vote, on December 12, 1967, this little joint resolution, which is in essence the amendment at the desk today, hardly a page and a half, cut nearly $5 billion additional out of the 1968 budget.

There it was: a war in which we were spending $2 billion a month in Vietnam, with a budget of only $172 billion for fiscal 1968. And here we are, with anywhere from $305 billion on up; and there are all kinds of laments and hues and cries about how this would put people out of work, would stop Government, would take no regard of the programs. Of course, it takes no regard of the financial fact that last year we fought hard and finally succeeded in coming below President Nixon's proposed budget of $268.9 billion.

What we propose now would still allow, if this amendment were adopted, a $30 billion increase over last year, in the face of inflation.

This $300 billion is almost double, without a war in Vietnam, what we had at the height of the war 7 years ago. Therein lies the story. It took this country 185 years to reach that $100 billion budget, but it took the Republic only 9 years to reach the second $100 billion level, the $200 billion budget, from 1962 to 1971. Then, within a period of 4 short years, under President Nixon, we went to the $300 billion budget.

We are all responsible—both Houses of Congress, the President leading in that direction. We were spending hand over fist.

What we are trying to do this morning is to diminish the flames of inflation, to cut the cost of living, to get the Government out of the borrowing market, so that private capital can take over and the automobile industry, the construction industry, and other real job-producing industries can start moving again.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time, unless the distinguished Senator from Georgia would like to be heard at this time, or the distinguished Senator from New Mexico. Perhaps the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would like to be heard before we commence a colloquy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no time is yielded, the time will be charged equally to both sides.

Mr. NUNN. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. NUNN. As cosponsor of this measure, I should like to commend the Senator from South Carolina for taking the initiative, not only on this particular measure, but throughout this session and for a good many years, in trying to do something about our runaway inflation problem and our very severe budgetary difficulties.

As I understand it, this proposal calls for a 10 percent across-the-board cut in the budget authority of the various departments and agencies. Credits would be applied where cuts have already been made by the Committee on Appropriations.

Is that correct?

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is correct. There is all the flexibility possible in the judgment allowed the department head.

Mr. NUNN. As I understand it, the President has sent certain recommendations which would amount, if Congress were to approve all of them, to about $4 billion in cuts. Is that the approximate amount?

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is correct. It is slightly higher than our proposal here.

In the debate on yesterday before the Committee on Appropriations, the opposition took immediately the position that this was not in the spirit of President Ford's proposal, because in no wise would President Ford put a man out of a job, particularly from the Federal payroll.

That is not our intent, either. The fact remains that President Ford's proposal does call for a cutback of 40,000 Federal jobs, which is not difficult.

Mr. NUNN. We have a 200,000 turnover in the civilian defense personnel alone in 1 year. I do not know what the figure is for the entire Federal bureaucracy, but it can certainly vary within the Civil Service Commission levels. Theoretically, there can be a cutback of several hundred thousand without a single person losing his job. Is that a fairly accurate assessment?

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is correct. We have a 20-percent turnover in a million civilian employees in the Department of Defense. The Civil Service Commission has given us a figure of something like 26-percent turnover last year in civilian employment.

If one works on these budgets, one can always ask what positions are not filled. We find many retirements. People are leaving the Government now in droves to take the favorable retirement.

What happens is that people are not put out of jobs, they just cut back, and one can see at a glance how the Government has grown like a monster. When we had to run a war and tried to initiate the great society program, it grew, and all along, the people said, "Heavens, this is the craziest plan."

We had done everything people could think of by 1967 under President Johnson. Then, in the ensuing years, we just doubled everything, every one of the civilian programs, including defense, including the cost of the military personnel, with a volunteer army. We jumped the budget we had, when we took the same initiative. In 1967, we started with a $300 billion budget; we are over $400 billion now.

Mr. NUNN. The cost of the military alone has increased tremendously. The overall cost of the Federal Government has gone up at an astronomical rate.

I wish to take this opportunity to commend the Committee on Appropriations for the excellent work they have done this year. I have never seen a more determined effort to hold down individual items.

I do not think this amendment, certainly not as far as I am concerned, is in any way a criticism of the work already done.

In fact, the measure specifically calls for credits when an amount has already been cut from a particular department by the Committee on Appropriations.

I know the Senator from South Carolina agrees with the Senator from Georgia on the fact that we are not going to get out of this recession we are in, this inflation we are in, or this stagflation, as long as we continue to push inflation up.

The Senator from Georgia happens to be one of those, perhaps we are in the minority in this body, who believe that the inflation has caused the recession; that the inflation we have in this country has pushed consumer confidence down to a point of being so low that people have quit buying key items. I, for one, do not see how we are going to get out of this recession by stimulating the very cause of the recession, and that is inflation.

I know this body has voted, I believe on four different occasions this year, to cut the total amount of outlays down to $295 billion. Yet here we are close to the end of this session. Where is the budget now? We are up at around $301 billion. Can the Senator from South Carolina give me the total figure?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I believe the President indicated when he sent up his package that spending would total $306.8 billion without his program and $302.2 billion if it was enacted.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Will whoever has the floor yield briefly for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I am happy to yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NUNN. I am happy to yield.

URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1975

The Senate continued with the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1180) making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have been told that the House Committee on Appropriations will have difficulty getting conferees appointed on the supplemental appropriations bill unless the Senate sends that bill over quickly. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that the order for the vote to be taken at 12:30 today be vitiated and that there be a voice vote on the bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Does the Senator want unanimous consent to set this aside?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Not to set it aside, just a voice vote. It will take but 1 minute.

Mr. NUNN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President.

Mr. McCLURE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, and I shall not object, I wish to express my concern.

I recognize the necessity. We passed up an opportunity last night to have a rollcall vote on an item which the President might have some difficulty in signing. We wished to have the rollcall, because we thought it might be some direction to the President on that legislation, but we passed up the opportunity, with the expectation that we would have a rollcall today on this other matter, which would then contain the same kind of expression of our will.

I understand the urgency which the Senator from West Virginia has expressed, and I know he would not have asked it if it were not necessary. I therefore withdraw my objection.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I am one of those who feels we should always have a rollcall vote on an appropriation bill, but there are extenuating circumstances in this instance.

I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, the question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1180) was passed.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes thereon, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. The motion was agreed to, and Mr. MCCLELLAN, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. PASTORE, Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. HRUSKA, Mr. COTTON, and Mr. CASE were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1975

The Senate continued with the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1178) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1975, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. NUNN. The Senator from South Carolina is aware of the provisions of the budgetary reform act that, hopefully, is going to bring some order out of the chaos that we have had with our total Federal budget. But the Senator from Georgia, in the 2 years he has been here, realizes more and more the frustration that the Committee on Appropriations must have in doing everything they can to cut down on the budget through appropriations.

They usually succeed, only to find, when the year ends, and we add up all the entitlement programs that do not go to the Committee on Appropriations, and all the back-door spending proposals, that we have more money being spent than has been requested by an administration that constantly requests deficits.

I ask the Senator if he thinks we can wait until fiscal year 1977, when the Budgetary Reform Act comes into effect, to begin to do something about putting our fiscal house in order. Can we stand to wait that long?

Mr. HOLLINGS. No. I am on the Budget Committee, as well as the Appropriations Committee. When we met in August, approximately August 14—we had hearings on the 14th and 15th—so the day before we had an informal get-together of the committee. An organizational meeting, somewhat, and I proposed exactly this procedure under this Public Law No. 90-218 of 1967 to Senator MUSKIE and my colleagues on that Budget Committee.

As best I can recollect now, it was the feeling of the chairman that the budget law had not really taken all that effect. We had no rooms, we had no consultants, we had no staff. We had to have hearings, and all these other things.

I took an opposite view. I thought to establish credibility for the Budget Committee we should forgo worrying about a room, and the consultants, and without staff—and that if we could get FRITZ MONDALE, LAWTON CHILES, ALAN CRANSTON, and all those Senators to agree, we could make our minds up, like we did back in 1967, there in the late summer of 1974, and really establish ourselves as a Budget Committee.

But instead the committee took a different viewpoint, and of course the Appropriations Committee has taken a different viewpoint.

Yes, we worked hard; the chairman worked hard, particularly on the defense appropriation; but on yesterday, voted down the last chance to really put up or shut up. We have been talking cutting all year, everyone has campaigned on it, and yet we passed by our last opportunity for economy.

Mr. NUNN. In addition, many of our colleagues put out at least three or four press releases saying, "We have got to cut Government spending."

Mr. HOLLINGS. Oh, yes, they have all said it. But instead of doing that, the stalwarts on the Appropriations Committee added on, in addition to the $4 billion for public service employment, they added $250 million for education, and all that. We did not cut anything.

Mr. NUNN. Also, in this recession, we are going to be faced with the problem of tax relief early next year for middle and low income taxpayers. The Senator from Georgia is not against that. I do feel, however, that we must get this excess spending out of the Federal budget if we are going to be paying for the recession programs that will be inevitable and necessary, and has already been mentioned here: public service employment, extension of unemployment benefits, and tax relief for lower income people.

If we are going to do that and also get out of this recession without a 15- to 18-percent inflation, which will destroy the economy of this country, then we are going to have to make some sacrifices.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The Senator from Georgia is right on target. The best tax relief you can give your constituents at home is to get this Government out of the money market, and allow some chance for private industry and the taxpayers, for example, to make a loan for that home.

We talk about spending $5 billion for housing. Who is going down to sign a 20-, 30-, or 40-year contract at 10 to 14 percent?

We say, "Look at what we have done for farming; we have done away with all the allotments, and the farmer can go ahead and plant all he wants to." But how can he get a loan for his fertilizer? There is no Eximbank down in Atlanta, Ga., to give him a 6-percent loan for fertilizer like we gave Russia. So he cannot get a loan for his equipment, and gasoline, and increased fertilizer costs.

The best relief I can think of is in this measure right here; but, no, they do not want it. They say, "This is a meat-ax approach; we do not want it here." Moreover, as far as OMB is concerned, they do not even know who is in charge of OMB this afternoon.

Mr. NUNN. We have before us, and have had for several weeks, a series of proposals that the President of the United States said would cut down the Federal budget by about $3 or $4 billion; but each one of those proposals, under our present cumbersome system, requires legislative committee approval of three or four different committees of Congress. Is that not correct?

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is right. I would expect that sort of thing if one of these Governors suddenly became President of the United States, that they would send us something like this. But the President, having served in the legislative branch of this Government for many years, ought to know better than come up with law changes that fill up this booklet. No one has introduced this program yet. Parts of it have been, but no part has passed either body of Congress.

Mr. NUNN. If we forget about the question of whether we should take cuts in the budget that impact heavily on the elderly and low- and middle-income Americans—which the Senator from Georgia does not want and I do not think the Senator from South Carolina does either—even if you agree with that, it is totally impossible from a practical viewpoint to legislate the President's proposals in the last 30 days of any session; is that not correct?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes, but let us get to us. You know, as Pogo says, "We have met the enemy, and they are us."

Yesterday afternoon, we passed a land and water conservation measure, of which the cost was to run around $350 million. The committee raised it to a billion dollars. Things are coming through here, business as usual, distribute the goodies, Merry Christmas to all and to all a good night.

I can tell you right now, we do not have this money, and we are really destroying this Government. We are putting ourselves into such a situation that everyone is lining up to be Santa Claus, come January and February, for all these recession and depression ameliorations, to go ahead and have more unemployment compensation, more investment credit, more tax relief for the poor, and everything else of that kind. Inflation, instead of being solved, is going to go right through the sky.

Mr. NUNN. I ask the Senator from South Carolina, what alternative do the people who call this a meat-ax approach offer to cutting spending? We have the President's proposals, which require a legislative approach, and which no one has shown one bit of approval for. How else do we cut down the budget? Is there any other way we can come within what the Senate has passed four times as a goal, the $295 billion? How else are we going to meet that?

Mr. HOLLINGS. There is no other procedure. It was not a meat ax on that 12th day of December 1967. The leaders of the Senate and on the Appropriations Committee all voted for it.

The answer is that we want strong leadership. And where have all the leaders gone? "Where are all the leaders gone? Sometimes they will never learn," or whatever that song is. They are gone in the other direction, I can tell you that now.

No one around here is willing to distribute the pain. They all want to preside over distributing goodies. They all talk about belt-tightening. They get up in front of that Rotary Club and talk about belt-tightening, and the fight against inflation we are making down here in Washington.

Why not fight with our votes today? But they are all getting their airline tickets and wrapping their Christmas packages, getting ready to leave. There is no election today, so they know they are safe. The press does not even write this. They will hunt up something about Turkey, or write pages on end about some element of Watergate.

None of those reporters can fathom the budget. They leave it up to Hobart Rowen, and put it on the back page or the editorial page. But as far as Congress is concerned, they say, "A feeble effort was made to vote it down, and everyone went home for Christmas."

Mr. NUNN. Speaking of that, we have had a trend of going more and more to uncontrollables. I do not know what portion of the budget now is uncontrollable; I have heard all the way from 40 percent to 70 percent. But we are getting to the point where we have very little control over the Federal budget.

How many times has the Senator seen or heard anything in the media about one of the most serious problems we have in this country—that Congress itself, representing the American people, no longer really has any control over the Federal budget?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I have two comments. The Senator points out a tremendous difficulty. It is complex, but there are many other complexities.

I do not see how they have followed that Watergate thing, yet they do, and do a good job.

This is a budget. The Director of the Bureau of the Budget says that 72 percent of the budget is uncontrollable. Yet, with all of these difficulties, the very same that we had in the Government in 1967, we figured it, and we made a decision. We decided on uncontrollables. You can start many an argument along this line on the very figures that we used.

We argued back and forth with OMB. They never gave us a better figure. The OMB figure for transportation, for example, included some trust funds, so we used a better figure, we used a conservative figure. We did not use any of the funny money or funny cuts such as in HEW, knowing they are going to have to spend more on welfare. We did not appropriate the amount they will probably require and congratulate ourselves about the great leadership in the cut as to HEW, knowing that a supplemental will be coming down the road, and they will have to cough up more money.

All of these expressions we use—like full-employment budget and uncontrollable—are misleading. We can control it; we can control it here. It has to have three readings in the House, three in the Senate, and we can cut back.

True, we never have had the one overall view or overview of the budget which the Budget Committee is now supposed to give it. But we have tried in the Appropriations Committee, and I really am very grateful and respectful for my chance to serve and to learn each day more about this budget on the Appropriations Committee. But I do not find today, in December 1974, the zeal we had in December 1967.

Mr. NUNN. Let me ask the Senator on that point, what happened after that December 1967 resolution? Did the Federal Government fold up in 1968?

Mr. HOLLINGS. No, sir.

Mr. NUNN. Did they close up the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, or the Department of Defense, or the Department of Labor?

Mr. HOLLINGS. No, sir. They did have another supplemental bill afterward in the spring of 1968, and the full $5 billion cut—actually $6.1 billion was placed in reserve—was not enjoyed, but it was around $3.4 billion which was still held back.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that some tables developed by the Appropriations Committee showing, first of all, the initial estimate of the impact of Public Law 90-218 and then the final results be published in the Record at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, they will be printed in the Record.

¹ The amounts of reserves required shown here exclude amounts released through Presidential action of sec. 203(a)(4) of Public Law 90-218, which permits the President to exempt programs vital to the national interest or security not exceeding $300,000,000 in the aggregate—and under sec. 203(b), which permits him to exempt obligations which he deems to be essential for the purposes of national defense. The attached table contains a listing of Presidential exemptions.

Section 203(a)(4) of Public Law 90-218 authorized the President to exempt certain programs, projects, or purposes that he determined were in the national interest or security in a total amount not to exceed $300 million. The President authorized exemptions totaling $88.6 million. The details on these exemptions are set out in the following tabulation:

PRESIDENTIAL EXEMPTIONS FROM OBLIGATION LIMITATIONS UNDER PUBLIC LAW 90-218 (2 TO 10 PERCENT)

Department or agency	Amount	Statutory reason (Public Law 90-218)	Relevant circumstances
Exemptions under sec. 203(a)(4):
1. State Department	$3,500,000	National interest or security (sec. 203(a)(4)).	Slippage in 1967 of planned overseas and Mexican border construction caused an unanticipated carryover into 1968 of $10,700,000 of obligations. Since this amount was not reflected in the 1968 budget Public Law 90-218 required State to absorb this amount in its entirety unless relief were granted. State has been granted relief of $3,500,000 for the most essential projects and has been instructed to find savings and deferrals to offset the remaining $7,200,000.
2. Treasury Department	6,000,000	National interest (sec. 203(a)(4)).	Of the $33,000,000 cut in obligations under Public Law 90-218, the lion's share had to be borne by Internal Revenue Service. The $6,000,000 exemption was approved to prevent a revenue loss estimated to be in excess of $50,000,000 (by preventing a drop in tax audits) and to provide sufficient seasonal aid to taxpayers in preparing returns.
3. Labor Department	16,000,000	do.	Because it represents about 85 percent of the Department's controllable budget, manpower development and training had to bear the brunt of Labor's cutback. This cut was inconsistent with current emphasis on JCS and manpower programs, and exemption was approved accordingly.
4. Defense—Civil—Ryukyu Islands Administration	1,291,000	National interest or security (sec. 203(a)(4)).	Exemption approved to prevent adverse effect on political relations with the islands and Japan caused by the necessity for continued military use of the islands and problems relating to reversion of the islands to Japanese control.
5. Public Land Law Review Commission	2,329,000	National interest (sec. 203(a)(4)).	Because (1) the authorizing legislation was enacted late and (2) Congress enacted an appropriation without a Presidential request, a literal interpretation of Public Law 90-218 would make the appropriation unavailable and completely negate the congressional action. Exemption permits the agency to use most of the money appropriated for its mission; it would otherwise have been able to do little besides keeping overhead personnel.
6. Securities and Exchange Commission	300,000	do.	Cutback would have required—among other actions—foregoing the purchase of a computer with (1) loss of $130,000 in rental credits toward purchase and (2) addition to 1969 and 1970 budgets of amounts (over $100,000 each) for continued rental. It was much less costly to the Government to purchase in 1968. Exemption of $300,000 plus agency's reductions elsewhere to find another $125,000 permitted purchase to proceed.
7. Historical commissions	53,000	do.	Termination of 5 Commissions (Civil War Centennial, Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial, James Madison Memorial, U.S. Territorial Expansion Memorial, and Woodrow Wilson Memorial) that had been planned in 1967 did not come off and there ensued an unanticipated carryover of obligations into 1968. Since these were not in the 1968 budget, exemption had to be approved to permit orderly termination in 1968 with same funds that had been programmed for 1967.
8. Commission on Political Activity of Government Personnel	52,000	do.	Termination of the Commission did not come off as planned and there ensued an unanticipated carryover of obligations in 1968. Since these were not in the 1968 budget, exemption had to be approved to permit orderly termination in 1968.

Department or agency	Amount	Statutory reason (Public Law 90-218)	Relevant circumstances
Exemptions under sec. 203(a)(4):
Continued:
9. Renegotiation Board	$35,000	National interest (sec. 203(a)(4)).	Workload under Vietnam contracts has increased. Total reduction of $65,000 required by Public Law 90-218 would probably cause unnecessary delays and losses to the Government. As a result, $35,000 of the $65,000 has been exempted.
Total, exemptions approved to Apr. 18, 1968, from presidential $300,000,000 statutory allowance	29,560,000
Exemptions under sec. 203(b):
1. Selective Service System	2,316,000	National defense (sec. 203(b)).	The exemption was approved because the cut would have impaired the agency's ability to classify young men by reducing the number of local board personnel and would have reduced funds necessary for travel of registrants to Armed Forces examining stations.
2. Atomic Energy Commission	57,000,000	do.	The exemption of $57,000,000 of the 2 to 10 percent formula reduction of $329,000,000 was approved in order to permit AEC to meet increased requirements related to the Sentinel missile defense system and other advanced weapons systems.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, that does not mean we have got to do the same thing. We can cut it and hold it at a level that this particular amendment calls for, and we can hold the line next year because I think the voters are going to be in real distress.

But, no, the Government did not fall; there was not high unemployment. In fact, the Government employment rate went up in the fiscal year 1968.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from South Carolina on this amendment. It is an amendment that is difficult to offer at this time. I understand why many Senators are reluctant to support it.

The fact is we are in a grim recession. The fact is we have unemployment increasing. The fact is that all the economic indicators indicate that we are going to be in worse economic condition 3, 4, or 5 months from now than we are now.

In spite of all that, I might say because of all that, it is timely and appropriate that the Senator from South Carolina should offer this amendment.

Let us take a look at what this amendment does. It permits Federal spending to increase this year over last year by $30 billion. That is an 11-percent increase. It is one of the largest increases percentage-wise in the history of the United States, and in dollar terms we have never had an increase of $30 billion before in peacetime. It is just about as big as the biggest increases we had in our worst wars. It is a very large increase in spending.

Furthermore, it would permit Federal Government spending to increase more than the gross national product increases. So anybody who argues that this is a pennypinching kind of an action which is going to destroy jobs in a wholesale way does not recognize what it does.

The heart of this amendment, and the reason why I am so enthusiastically supporting it, is that what we must do if we are going to fight inflation, while we fight recession, is to mandate a restraint on Federal spending; mandate a restraint on the use of manpower, so that the managers of our Federal Government have to use some, exercise some, discretion in the way they use their manpower and in the way they spend their money so that they will hold down unnecessary spending, eliminate waste, and not fall into the bad habits that we have fallen into which we are aware of in every department of the Federal Government, and this is the kind of a limited reduction, a $5 billion reduction, which makes sense.

I would like to make one other point to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. The Senate voted overwhelmingly earlier this year for a $295 billion ceiling—overwhelmingly, it was about 10 to 1. There was not any question that the margin was very decisive.

It is true since then we have put into the budget about a $5 or $6 billion increase for public service jobs. Well, the Senator from South Carolina has adjusted to that. He is suggesting the ceiling not be at $295 billion but at $300 billion.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Right.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Furthermore, I think the action we have taken is not inconsistent because the way that you spend money is very important. We have asked of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and they have told us, if you spend money in some areas for some defense expenditures, for example, $1 billion will give you 57,000 jobs.

However, if you spend money in labor-intensive areas, such as public service jobs, $1 billion will give you well over 100,000 jobs. So it is possible to reduce spending without cutting jobs.

Furthermore, as we reduce the amount that the Federal Government borrows, the demand the Federal Government makes on the capital markets, it means that interest rates tend to go down. They may not go down more than a half percent or a percent, but that has a terrific effect in increasing housing starts.

As interest rates fall, as mortgage rates fall, it is going to be much easier for housing jobs to grow.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. PROXMIRE (continuing). It is going to be easier for the housing industry to come out of this literal depression.

The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. NUNN. I would like to ask a question because I have heard that the Federal Government, in terms of overall Federal spending involving all budgetary, nonbudgetary, back door, and otherwise—borrowed last year about 60 percent of all available capital.

Does the Senator have any precise figure on that percentage?

Mr. PROXMIRE. I do not have those figures, but it sounds as though it could be very close to the amount the Federal Government did borrow.

Of course, the important thing is that as the net borrowing increases, as the deficit increases, it means the Federal Government is borrowing an additional sum. It is true much of the borrowing, $60 billion, was a matter of turnover of funds being retired, because we have a very short-term debt. But when we spend more, when the deficit increases by another $5 billion or $10 billion, then that really aggravates the capital market.

Mr. NUNN. Does the Senator agree that as we start moving out of this recession in the second and third quarters of 1975, the decisions we are making now are going to put the Federal Government back into the borrowing market in a huge way? Also, does the Senator agree that, as the private sector begins to revive and borrow more, it causes the interest situation that has been so detrimental to our country to rise—which in turn causes the vicious cycle of high interest rates, inflation, recession, less confidence, to start all over again?

Mr. PROXMIRE. The Senator from Georgia is absolutely correct. There is not any question that, in the long term, the very great growth of the Federal Government is the reason why the inflation rate over the long term has increased.

There are various reasons, energy and food shortages, and so forth, that may account for a temporary increase or drop but over the long term it is because we now have a Government that absorbs 40 percent of our economy compared to 10 percent in 1930.

December 19, 1974

The only way we are going to get in control of that is to hold down the growth of the Federal Government and, hopefully, permit the private sector to grow faster.

All the Senator from South Carolina's amendment does is restrain somewhat, in a very limited way and a very modest way, the growth of the Federal Government so that instead of growing by $35 billion this year it will grow by $30 billion.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Responding to the Senator from Wisconsin, too, I had pointed out earlier the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to cut down the $295 billion, and I know of two roll-call votes which confirmed that goal.

Mr. President, if I may, I ask that the distinguished Senator from Virginia (Mr. Scott), the senior Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Thurmond) be added as cosponsors to my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PROXMIER. If the Senator will permit, I would like to make a correction. I said it accounted for 40 percent, and what I meant was that the Federal Government and State and local governments account for 40 percent. Of course, with our policy with respect to government, including revenue sharing and other policies, they are a very important element in the growth of the Federal and of local governments.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The distinguished occupant of the chair hit the target in his speech when the senior Senator from Virginia (Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.) said that the Federal Government was in the money market on an annual rate of $100 billion a year.

Now, the net amount, the best we can determine, is somewhere in the vicinity of $1.5 last year and maybe up as high as $35 billion this year. It is the net amount of participation by the Government at an annual rate of $100 billion that is sucking up our lendable funds—taking away from capital improvements, plant expansions, jobs, automobiles, and everything else of that kind.

No wonder, as we have been pointing out heretofore, no wonder things cannot move.

We get up here, pass a bill and say, "Whoopee, we have solved a problem," but we never solved this one, and when this is solved, then the private sector will begin to move, but only at that particular time.

Mr. NUNN. I note that the senior Senator from Virginia, one of the real experts in this area, says the Secretary of the Treasury confirmed to him that in 1973 62 percent of all expendable funds in this Nation was borrowed by the Federal Government—62 percent. And we wonder why we have tight money, why the farmers pay 12 to 14 percent for fertilizer, why homeowners borrow at 8 or 9 percent, why the construction industry is going broke, why we have a liquidity crisis in our country, and why we do not have enough money in the private sector to make the commitments that we need for energy.

This is one of the reasons that I think this amendment, although it is not going to balance the Federal budget is an effort to prevent the circle from starting again in the next inflationary recession cycle.

If we are going to help our poor people, our unemployed people, and our people who need a tax break in order to cope with this mounting inflation, poured on in large part by our own Government, we need to pay our way as we go in giving this kind of relief. This amendment, in the way the Senator from Georgia understands it, tries to prevent these relief measures, from starting us right back on another inflationary cycle as we try to come out of the one we are in.

I commend the Senator from South Carolina for his efforts. I am proud to join as a cosponsor of this measure.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. President, I wonder how much time is remaining, we have several Members coming in, the opponents have not been heard from yet?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has utilized 45 of his 90 minutes.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, while the distinguished Senator from Georgia is on the floor I want to thank him for his very gracious compliment to the Appropriations Committee for its hard work in trying to meet its responsibilities in this difficult period.

I think I can say for the other members of the Appropriations Committee, particularly the chairmen of the subcommittees, that they have worked hard and worked in good faith and now submitted their recommendations to the Senate and the Senate has worked its will on all of the appropriations bill.

Now, I find this thing a bit awkward from the standpoint of being a Member of this legislative body when we talk about going to deal with the controllable expenditures of Government, and there are many that are uncontrollable, and some of them are uncontrollable not by my vote because I tried to get them brought before the Appropriations Committee each year instead of making them a final appropriation by authority of legislative committees; I did my best.

They are not all—some of those that are uncontrollable, not in that status because of any vote of mine, but if we want to set an example, if we agreed in good faith, if we want to go with this proposal and say that we want a cut, cut these things that are controllable, I wonder if the Senator from Georgia would join me in the sentiment that if this procedure is to prevail, if it would not look a little better to our constituents if we started a little cutting right here in the legislative branch of the Government?

Mr. NUNN. Absolutely.

Mr. McCLELLAN. All right.

Now, this provision, let me point out, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, who is the chairman of the subcommittee—

Mr. HOLLINGS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I would like to make my statement and then I shall be happy to yield.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Well, I am anticipating the question and it should be directed to me as the Senator knows I am chairman of the Legislative Branch Subcommittee.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Well, I am talking in the Senator's presence. The Senator will have an opportunity to answer me and ask me a question. I hope I can finish my statement.

Mr. HOLLINGS. All right, sir.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Now, I want to point out, we are talking about we want to do all we can, all of this with the controllable expenditures of the Government, and to bring in a resolution here to cut everybody but hold ourselves up here as a sacred cow—not going to cut ours—I just wonder what that looks like before the country, as a good faith and conscientious effort to go as far as we can and should.

We cut it, and the distinguished chairman of the legislative committee worked on this bill with his committee and came before this full committee with the result we had a 2-percent cut on the legislative branch of the Government under the budget amount.

Now, Mr. President—

Mr. NUNN. On that question, I can speak on it for the Senator from Georgia. If the Senator from Arkansas proposed an amendment to that effect, the Senator from Georgia would certainly cosponsor it and vote for it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Well, I thank the distinguished Senator for offering to cosponsor an amendment if I offered it. I have taken a position and am trying—

Mr. NUNN. I would, if the Senator offers, join on this particular measure.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I know, if I were going to join, I would certainly insist we do try to reach ourselves a little bit, if I were going to join in this kind of proposal, but what I want to point out is, we had the opportunity to make the cut in the legislative branch, just like we have in all of the other controllable items in the due process, and in the appropriations due process procedure. We cut it only 2 percent.

I am not here today in the role of defending the military. I do handle the military appropriations bill—the subcommittee—and we cut that, on the military by 5.7 percent, trying to come down within this ceiling that was—

Mr. NUNN. Will the Senator yield on that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield myself 2 more minutes.

Mr. NUNN. Will the Senator yield for a question on the military part?

I would like to further compliment the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Military Appropriations because I know personally of the very diligent effort the Senator from Arkansas in his capacity as the chairman of the subcommittee made in trying to trim the fat out of the military budget. It is awfully difficult, the Senator from Georgia is certainly aware of this, serving on the Armed Services Committee, to distinguish the fat from the muscle in the military budget.

December 19, 1974

I do not know of anyone who has done or could possibly do a better job than the Senator has done this year.

I would say if other committees and if the other Members of this body were as diligent in their particular responsibility as the Senator from Arkansas has been in the military, then we would not be here today debating this particular measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I question no one's sincerity, no one's motives, in trying to bring about this reduction. But this I want to point out to my colleagues, and it is a problem: We are going to have to determine about these issues whether, when a bill comes before the Senate, we are going to offer amendments to cut where we think it should be cut, and the Senate have the courage to cut where it should be cut, or the Congress, as the case may be. We should do it that way, or else we are going to move, and we are now moving, in the direction of saying, "What is the use of having an Appropriations Committee? Why hold hearings? Why work on these bills? Why try to find these places and make the cuts, report the bill, and then come in here and just determine to cut some more below the budget?"

The Senator wants a 10 percent cut below the budget. Why would it not be well for the Appropriations Committee, if we are going to do it in this fashion, to just report the appropriations bills back 10 percent below the budget and let the Senate work its will that way?

It does not make sense to have your Appropriations Committees, subcommittees, the members of the committees, work and hold long hearings, come in here and present the bill to the Senate, the Congress pass it and enact it into law, and then take the position that all of that work was futile, it was all in vain, it was not necessary.

What we are going to do is just cut 10 percent across the board. I do not mind working hard, and I am perfectly willing to continue, and I am sure every member of the Appropriations Committee is, to work hard on these bills and to bring them in here, to let the Senate offer amendments, to work its will, to reduce them where it can. But if this is to be the policy of simply saying we are going to cut 10 percent below the budget, or 5 percent or 8 percent below the budget, then I see no reason for us to go out and work hard on one committee, get a substantial reduction, have another bill come along with not much reduction, and then come here and just cut them all across the board 10 percent.

We can save a lot of hard work, if this is to be our policy and our practice. There is one other thing which comes up right at the last minute. We have to go to conference. I have no idea that we will be able to work this out in conference. We can pass it and send it over there.

We have a continuing resolution. We might work it out in conference, but I seriously doubt it.

I have one other thought. I believe I want to economize as much as any other Senator in this body. But you are not proposing now a 2-percent cut in personnel. Six months of the year will have been gone. If you are going to reduce the money appropriated for personnel for fiscal 1975 by 2 percent, that means a 4-percent cut in personnel for the rest of the year, and that means about 112,000 jobs.

When these people leave Government, you say this is the economical thing to do. Then you turn around and pass a bill to create public service jobs, averaging $7,500 a year. I do not see any economy in it. I see more agony, more distress, and more problems being created for our economy and for our fiscal policy. We will be back with a supplemental bill.

More people will be out of jobs. Look at your headlines today. There are more and more.

If we are going to appropriate $7,500 for a person out of a job to try to give them a job, it does not make any sense to run them out of Government and put them on those payrolls. That is where we are.

I would hope the Senate would not establish this precedent. It can do it; it can work its will and it can do it. If this is to be the policy, practice, and procedures that we are to follow, then, Mr. President, I believe you might as well tell the Appropriations Committee in the beginning of the session to go out and report back 10 percent under the budget, or whatever is wanted under the budget, to report it back and not do all of this hard work. That is the way it appears to me.

I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman has said that if we really are sincere in wanting to cut, then why not in the legislative branch. If we are really sincere in that question, why not ask the chairman of the legislative committee who has handled that particular bill?

What is the actual fact? We started on this back in June of this year. When the conference report on the legislative appropriations bill was before the Senate my move to recommit it back to conference so we could make even further cuts was resented.

What is the fact about the cut? We did cut 2 percent. We can easily equal 10 percent by cutting back at the Madison Memorial Library. There is some $4 million in equipment and furniture there. They can withhold that until next year.

We can withhold the additional $14 million for the Dirksen Office Building extension and live through it. I am ready to do it. Some $4 million of that is to be spent some year and a half to 2 years from now, and in fact, little of what we have appropriated for that project will be expended this year. We did not plan on all these investigations. If the executive branch of Government would obey the law, if it would act under the Constitution, if it would not get above the law, we would not have had to have the expensive investigations on Watergate on the Senate side, and the expensive investigations of the former President on the House side. We would not be having to afford these examinations into one distinguished President to confirm him, first as Vice President, and now this afternoon confirm an additional Vice President.

Yes, there has been a fair increase in the legislative branch, but a lot of it went to cover the costs of the pay raise that was absorbed the previous year.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLINGS. May I complete my thought?

There has been some increase in this branch of Government. We did vote and show our sincerity by holding our own pay back for the last 6 years, while we have given cost-of-living increases to anyone and everyone. The Senate has set an example.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I will not yield right now.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will not yield any further, Mr. President. I believe I have the floor.

If the Senator wants the floor, he has it.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thought I had the floor.

To complete that thought, what was possible in 1967 and what is possible now?

The Office of Management and Budget labels the judiciary as well as the legislative branches as being uncontrollable.

They are two of the things in this particular amendment that we do not touch.

We touch none of those labeled uncontrollable: highway trust fund, permanent obligations. Everyone knows the difficulty of getting at the particular budgets. But to set us off on a primrose path about the lack of sincerity in this particular thing is totally unfounded.

We raised this question in the Senate and it was said at that time that we were discourteous in not coming to the committee. We had already been there. We started more vigorously in that particular Appropriations Committee. We flunked the course on Agriculture. We flunked the course on Interior. Interior did not come through with last year's budget, but added $575 million more than the previous year. What do you call these things? Parks, fish hatcheries, and everything else.

Here is the Government in the throes of recession and joblessness, and we are putting out more park money and more fish hatchery money, increasing spending, not holding the line. Let us not praise each other about hard work. Let us look at the result. We could have held that Interior budget. We should have. We should have held public works.

On the matter of sincerity, I stated categorically that I would forego the public works projects in the State of South Carolina for a year or two, all of them meritorious. We want to support these things, but again, we should sort of hold the line for a year or two and look at what the real facts are.

We went through those budgets, with the cooperation and leadership of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is the chairman of the Subcommittee on Defense Appropriations. I commend him, genuinely and publicly, for cutting some $5.1 billion in the Senate's treatment. We had to compromise that on the House side. But under Senator McCLELLAN's leadership, we did cut; and if he had not given that leadership, we would never have done it. I could not have done it. The membership could not have done it. But he got both sides of the spectrum, both sides of the aisle, and it was a healthy cut. As a result, this amendment won't tough Defense.

In addition to raising those questions, we raised this again, not only on agriculture but also on the public works bill. We put it in. We said to our colleagues that we intended to propose it. The Senator said it was at the last minute. But we told the Budget Committee on August 14 that we intended to propose it. I physically put it in the hands of William Simon, Secretary of the Treasury, who was chairing the finance summit conference in September. I said:

Mr. Secretary, when we were confronted with this problem under Lyndon Johnson, here is what all the Republicans, all the Democrats, all the House Members, all the Senators, and the White House did. Everybody worked together as a team. Here is what we did.

Then we gave it to the Policy Committee, when everybody was trying to get these policy positions about cutting budgets. This is not the only way, but this is not a precedent. This has been preceded by the successful vote of the Senate, by more than three-quarters of the Senate, and a majority of the members of the Appropriations Committee, who now complain of bad precedents and disregard for hard work and that it is no use to come in and even have a committee. They did not say that in December.

What is really lacking now is a seriousness and intent of purpose and a realization of where this country stands. Maybe I am overalarmed and overexercised. Maybe not. Maybe I am wrong.

But every economist we listened to on the Appropriations Committee and the Budget Committee—and they stream in from the Brookings Institute, the executive branch, and the academic world—has said that we are not through this recession yet, that it is dangerous, that it is inflation-caused.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the entire statement of the Honorable William D. Simon before the Senate Budget Committee on December 17, the day before yesterday.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE HONORABLE WILLIAM D. SIMON, SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY, BEFORE THE SENATE BUDGET COMMITTEE, DECEMBER 17, 1974

Mr. Chairman and Members of this Committee, it is a pleasure to return before your Committee to continue the hearings initiated in August. These are important times for the Committee and for all of us. A rate of inflation unprecedented in our peacetime history is now coupled with a decline in economic activity and rising unemployment. In large part, our present difficulties are the result of earlier failures, both fiscal and monetary, that extend back in time a decade and more. Your Committee, and its counterpart in the House of Representatives, can play an important role in helping to make the Federal budgetary process a much more effective instrument of economic stabilization in the future than it has been in the past. We want to work closely with you to achieve that objective. In this statement I have tried to answer the specific questions you raised, Mr. Chairman, in your letter of December 5.

There have been significant changes in the economic situation since I appeared before you in August. These changes deserve and are receiving our close attention within the Administration. However, nothing has happened in these past few months that detracts from the necessity of bringing the entire Federal budget process under much better control. Federal expenditures have doubled in the past 8 years and have built up a powerful momentum. Even with favorable action on the President's proposed cuts in spending, Federal outlays would rise by $34 billion in the current fiscal year—a rise of 13 percent. At that rate, Federal expenditures would double again in just another 6 years. We must not allow anything like that to happen.

The problem is not only runaway Federal expenditure programs and chronic budget deficits. We are deceiving ourselves and the American public by excluding items from the budget that have a considerable impact on the economy and the American taxpayer. For example, in fiscal year 1974 the reported figure of $3 billion of Government borrowing from the public (to finance the unified budget deficit of $3.5 billion) showed only the tip of the iceberg: the net borrowing from the public to finance Federal programs outside the budget was estimated at $28 billion. During the past decade the unified budget had a cumulative deficit of $102.9 billion. But total net borrowings for off-budget programs were an even more staggering figure—$142.0 billion. The disruptive effects on the Nation's capital markets of having the government borrow one quarter of a trillion dollars in a single decade deserves much more attention. I seriously doubt that we will ever be able to have either stable housing markets or the level of savings and capital investment needed to generate the necessary jobs and economic output until we correct this serious government distortion of the financial markets.

There is much that needs to be done—and done quickly—by your Committee and the rest of us to restrain excessive Federal spending and moderate the use of Federal credit. We will not solve the problems of stagflation by opening the sluice gates of Federal spending and lending. We would only worsen our long run budgetary situation which is bad enough already.

While sticking to a course of expenditure restraint, we recognize that the economy is in need of a degree of fiscal and monetary support. The economy is in a recession and the downward movement will probably continue into the spring of next year. We expect real growth to resume sometime during the middle months of the year.

At present, the automobile and housing industries account for a large part of the rate of change in the economic situation—much more than would be suggested by their relatively small average share of GNP. Both industries have substantial inventories of unsold units to work off. Both industries are thus producing at unsustainably low rates—well below their long-run normal levels. As soon as inventories are brought into better balance, production levels can increase again in both industries, probably in the late winter or early spring. In addition, most observers expect car sales to rise from their recent very low levels, which would also require a pick-up in automobile production. In housing, where financing is always the key factor, there has already been an increase in savings flows to mortgage lenders, which is establishing the preconditions for a recovery in residential building activity.

However, the recession has not yet bottomed out; economic recovery still lies in the future. At the same time, some meaningful improvement in the price picture is beginning to emerge and more will appear. This is a very encouraging development. Nevertheless, the situation is still one of too much inflation and too much weakness in economic activity.

Some people feel that we must, therefore, make an agonizing choice between fighting inflation and fighting recession. I cannot agree. The two conditions cannot be separated. Inflation and recession are inextricably intertwined—they are both integral parts of the same disease.

Inflation led directly—through the high interest rates that always accompany inflation—to severe financial instability, to a heavy outflow of funds from thrift institutions, to a sharp squeeze on the availability of mortgage credit, and thereby to one of the worst slumps on record in the housing industry. Similarly, inflation has been a major factor—perhaps the major factor—that has demolished consumer confidence, which is having a crushing impact on sales of automobiles and other consumer goods. Surely the answer to these problems does not lie in policies that would invariably lead to still further increases in the rate of inflation. That road leads to economic and financial disaster.

We must recognize that fiscal discipline is the only appropriate course of action. I am not, of course, proposing doctrinaire actions to achieve unrealistic and undesirable budget goals that would aggravate the recession. Budget deficits are inescapable in the present situation. There is a vast difference, however, between a budget deficit arising from slow growth in receipts in a softening economy, and a budget deficit arising because of a burst of Federal expenditures.

But our present Federal budget position is already expansive. As I mentioned earlier, we face an expenditure increase of $34 billion or 13 percent. And if the proposed spending cuts are not realized, the gain will be $38½ billion, or 14½ percent.

Thus we should avoid a new spree of "budget busting" in the guise of curing recession. Spending programs designed for that purpose generally come too late, cannot be reversed, only intensify inflationary pressures in the recovery and thereafter, and ultimately must be paid for through the burden of higher taxes on the American people or, alternatively, through the cruel tax of inflation. Furthermore, larger Federal expenditure programs would shift resources from the private to the public sector at a time when all levels of Government are already taking one-third of total output.

What we need now, in my opinion, is a shift in the mix of policy to achieve a better balance between our monetary and fiscal positions. Over the past year, monetary policy has carried a disproportionate share of the burden of stabilization policy. This was necessary because fiscal policy did not do its share. In the present situation, therefore, we should be maintaining firm fiscal discipline. This is the purpose behind the President's proposals to reduce the explosive growth of Federal spending by $4.6 billion in fiscal 1975, a cut that will produce at least $6.7 billion of savings in 1976 and more in future years.

We should recognize that our measures of budget policy are seriously incomplete at the present time. First, the unified budget does not reflect the off-budget lending and loan-guarantee programs that I mentioned earlier. With net borrowing for off-budget programs added in, the deficit in fiscal 1973 would have totalled $39.5 billion (rather than the $14.3 billion shown in the unified budget), and in 1974, about $32 billion (rather than $3.5 billion). Because of their impact on the growth of money and credit, the inflationary impact of these off-budget lending programs is comparable to that of deficits in the unified budget. Second, the acceleration of inflation these past couple of years has boosted tax receipts (especially from taxes on inventory profits) faster than it increased Government expenditures. This has narrowed the budget deficit, but that reduction does not indicate fiscal restraint—it simply reflects the increase in the rate of inflation. For these reasons, Federal fiscal operations have been much more stimulative in fact than they have appeared to be.

Thus, fiscal policy should be kept under a tight rein. At the same time, however, monetary policy is easing. Indeed, the Federal Reserve has already moved a considerable distance in this direction. If we can pursue budget discipline, this will permit a further easing in credit conditions, which will assist the recovery in housing and help to restore consumer and business confidence. As I mentioned earlier, a redoubt of funds to the thrift institutions has already begun.

We have at the present time an extraordinary opportunity to alleviate our economic problems. The first essential step in the anti-inflation fight has already been completed in that the excess demand conditions that characterized our economy in 1973 have ended. We no longer have "too much money chasing too few goods."

Right now we are seeing the first concrete evidence of some progress on the inflation front. Raw materials prices have been falling since the end of July. The latest consumer and wholesale price indexes show some slackening in the upward thrust of nonfood commodity prices. Interest rates on Treasury bills are down about 2½ percentage points; long-term corporate bonds are down about 1½ points. Competition is breaking out again in many industries. Inflationary pressures are still strong on both the price and wage sides, but at last some indications have appeared that we are making headway.

This does not mean that inflation will quickly disappear, quite the contrary, but it does give us the opportunity to reduce the rate of inflation to more tolerable levels. We must not abandon the effort now that it is beginning to show signs of paying off. We can and must have recovery from the current recession, but we must do that in a way that does not lead to an overheating of the economy again. We must not get back into the situation where the economy is propelled beyond the limits of its capacity to produce.

We will, however, lose this opportunity to achieve stable economic growth if we switch to excessively stimulative policies. That has been the repetitive pattern over the past decade. Every time the economy showed signs of hesitation, there was a pronounced shift to stimulative monetary and fiscal policies. The result was that we pushed the inflation rate up onto higher and higher plateaus. In 1966, the peak inflation rate was about 4 percent; in 1970 it was about 6 percent; and now prices are rising at about a 12 percent rate. The same process ratcheted interest rates higher and higher. In 1966 rates on long corporate bonds peaked at a little over 8 percent, in 1970 they reached almost 10 percent, and this year the high was 12 percent.

We should also take note of what happened to unemployment over this same span of years. Economists often talk of the trade-off between inflation and unemployment.

This would suggest that as inflation worsened over the past decade—because stimulative economic policies were pursued—unemployment should have improved. But this did not happen; in fact, the unemployment rate climbed to higher and higher plateaus. In 1966–67 the unemployment rate barely increased and reached a high of about 4 percent; in 1970–71 unemployment climbed to around 6 percent; and unemployment is currently at 6½ percent and still rising.

Surely the lessons are clear: First, there is no worthwhile payoff in a decision to ignore inflation and focus all policy on recession. Both are components of the same malaise. We are fighting a two-headed monster: one head is inflation and the other is recession, and the inflation has been the culprit in causing much of the recession. And the experience of the past decade clearly demonstrates that allowing inflation to accelerate so explosively does not achieve any benefits (except in the very short run) in the form of a reduced level of unemployment. Second, if we do not seize this present opportunity to pursue responsible fiscal and monetary policies, the problems of rampaging inflation and a weak economy will be even worse the next time around.

This is why I believe that the top priority for both the Executive and Legislative Branches is to get our fiscal house in order. The runaway pattern of Federal spending threatens to become permanent. It is high time for a thorough review of Federal spending programs and a concerted effort to blunt the momentum of their growth.

Our current economic condition is very difficult but I am convinced we can bring the economy under better control if we persevere with suitable policies. We are presently paying the price—the high price—for the irresponsible policies of the past decade. If we turn again to excessive economic stimulus, in an attempt to escape the consequences of our past indulgences, we will only be presented with a larger bill later on. When will we learn that each time we refuse to pay the price, we face a still higher price the next time around?

Measures to adequately cushion the impact of the current economic adjustment where it falls with disproportionate force must be enacted promptly; the burdens of stagflation must be equitably shared. At the same time, I hope your Committee will assist in the equally important task of bringing Federal expenditures back within the limits of what the public is willing to provide in the form of tax revenues.

ENERGY POLICY

For many years, the energy policy of the United States was based upon the assumption that we would always be able to obtain all of the energy we wanted at bargain basement rates. Foreign oil was inexpensive and seemed limitless in quantity. It thus appeared to be good business and sound diplomacy to increase oil imports.

We have now learned that such a policy was a double-edged sword. It led directly to a growing dependence upon other nations and a decline in exploration and production within the United States. By the time of the embargo last year, foreign oil accounted for over one-third of our petroleum consumption and our dependence on it was still surging upwards.

The legacy of that policy is now clear: we allowed our domestic energy base to erode so badly that we became highly vulnerable to foreign extortion. Now we are paying an extraordinary price for our mistakes. In 1974, the United States will pay $27.5 billion for foreign oil, and our balance-of-payments deficit is likely to be $5 billion. As for the OPEC nations, their trade surplus for the current year will probably be in excess of $60 billion, and by 1980, if present trends continue, their total accumulation could exceed $500 billion. Imbalances of this magnitude cannot continue. They are neither economically nor politically tolerable.

In my meetings with the Arab leaders, I have tried to impress upon them that their oil policies are not only bad politics but bad economics. They are exerting enormous pressures on the United States and other countries to become more self-sufficient. Since 1972, significant discoveries of oil have been made in 26 areas of the world—outside of the OPEC bloc—and countries such as Britain are now working to convert these deposits into major energy sources. As consuming nations expand production and cut back on consumption, the only way the present high price can be maintained, even on a temporary basis, is for producers to cut back production. The OPEC ministers know that every barrel sold today is worth more to them than every barrel left in the ground. Selling now and investing the money is simply more profitable than selling later. For example, to match the long-run return on an investment made today at 8 percent per year, a barrel of today's ten dollar oil left in the ground until 1984 would have to bring more than $21.59—a price that is unrealistic. Moreover, the Arab nations cannot expect to remain aloof from the dangers of social unrest and political instability that their policies are creating around the world.

I believe that economic and political realities will eventually force oil prices to come down. As of the moment oil diplomacy is particularly delicate and in the short run there may even be some further efforts to increase prices. But over the long run, the question is no longer whether oil prices will come down but when they will come down.

In the meantime, it is absolutely vital that the United States put its own house in order. Supply and demand must be brought into better balance here at home, so that foreign nations will never again be able to make oil a political weapon.

I believe we can now attack our problems with vision born of our mistakes. For many years the Government has posed major obstacles to the efficient market allocation of energy. We regulate the price and distribution of natural gas; we manipulate the pricing and distribution system in oil; we require lengthy and cumbersome processes for obtaining licenses and rate approval; and, we impose environmental restraints of questionable validity upon both the production and combustion of fossil fuel.

In order to accelerate domestic production, I would submit that the Government must act decisively to free producers from Federal laws and regulations which discourage growth. We at the same time should understand that now is not the time to point the finger of guilt at American energy industries. In the future, they are the major hope we have to meet our needs. However, what we need to remember now is that our success in providing needed supplies will be related to our willingness to allow the market place to function freely so that the exploration and development of energy sources will be encouraged. We must continue to provide energy companies with reasonable policies under which they can expand their production.

Our policy must be to eliminate waste through energy conservation programs and to stimulate the development of domestic energy resources. We must accelerate the development of oil and natural gas in Alaska and on the Outer Continental Shelf; we must boost coal production and bring on-line coal liquefaction and gasification capacity; we must develop the promise of our vast oil shale reserves; and expand our nuclear and geothermal power.

We have an abundance of natural resources than can meet our needs. For instance, The U.S. has one trillion, 500 billion tons of identifiable coal reserves, or half of the known freeworld reserves, and one-third of these reserves are economically recoverable now.

We have upwards of 80 billion barrels of oil and 490 trillion cubic feet of natural gas on the Outer Continental Shelf—for which intensive drilling is now becoming feasible as the Government accelerates the leasing program.

We have an estimated one trillion, 800 billion barrels of oil shale resources in Western States, enough to meet our total needs for decades. The time has come for the Federal Government and private industry to bring the promise of shale into the marketplace.

Throughout these efforts, we strongly believe that the Federal Government has a responsibility to provide strong leadership—to insure that there are necessary incentives for the development of our massive untapped energy resources.

Recently Secretary Kissinger and I outlined the U.S. proposals for international cooperation in energy and finance. The essence of our position can be succinctly described:

The price of oil itself, not its financial repercussions, is the real source of trouble in the world economy.

To help bring about lower oil prices, and to reduce the economic burden of oil imports, major consuming nations should work together to achieve significant reductions in their imports of OPEC oil.

They should also coordinate policies and pool their technical resources to increase energy production within their own nations.

IMF resources should be more fully mobilized for all its member nations.

A major, new financial mechanism should be set up in association with the OECD to provide stand-by financial support in case any of the participating countries find themselves in economic trouble after having made reasonable efforts on their own part.

Consideration should also be given to setting up a special trust fund managed by the IMF to help developing nations that are suffering the most and require financing on concessional terms.

Our ideas call for a forthright effort by the world's major industrial countries to resolve the international energy crisis. To implement our far-reaching initiatives will require many weeks of dialogue. Even now, our International Energy Agency (IEA) working group representatives are meeting in Paris in an effort to assimilate the views of the member nations. To implement the decisions and initiatives we have made will require many further weeks of diplomacy with our allies and with our friends. In our efforts, we will work closely with the Congress.

In our view, the most important and immediate aspect of our domestic energy policy is that of reducing our consumption of high-cost imported oil. In the near term, this can only be accomplished by strict adherence to conservation. In his recent economic message, President Ford announced a voluntary program to reduce oil imports by one million barrels a day by the end of 1975. As the members of this committee know, the President has made it clear that we will meet this target and that to do so we will take whatever steps are necessary.

If the voluntary reductions are not adequate to meet our target of reductions, more stringent steps will be taken. Federal agency working groups are now completing intensive studies of possible options for the President to consider. The President will present a coordinated package of administrative and suggested legislative actions to Congress in January. These actions will address the dual problems of reducing our imports and increasing our domestic supplies of energy. In developing its options, the Administration is paying particular attention to the possible effects on the economy and the Federal budget.

In total, the Administration's energy policy is a balanced mix of international and domestic initiatives. We have set clear goals for the Nation and we will work cooperatively with the Congress in achieving them.

Our ultimate goal is one of moving the U.S. from its present non-renewable hydrocarbon energy base to a renewable energy base. This calls for a coordinated effort to make maximum use of oil, gas and coal as well as the development of solar, geothermal, nuclear, and eventually fusion power. The switch over to these latter sources will extend over a period of many years, but what is needed now is a clear national commitment to increase our domestic energy production in areas and forms consistent with market forces. Such a commitment need not, and should not, imply that essential social and environmental concerns must be neglected. On the contrary, such concerns must be fully taken into account. But protection against social abuses must be provided without unduly dampening incentives to expand production.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I will refer to exactly what the Secretary said. He said:

There have been significant changes in the economic situation since I appeared before you in August. These changes deserve and are receiving our close attention within the Administration. However, nothing has happened in these past few months that detracts from the necessity of bringing the entire Federal budget process under much better control.

He goes on to say:

The disruptive effects on the Nation's capital markets of having the government borrow one quarter of a trillion dollars in a single decade deserves much more attention.

Here is what the administration is telling us:

I seriously doubt that we will ever be able to have either stable housing markets or the level of savings and capital investment needed to generate the necessary jobs and economic output until we correct this serious government distortion of the financial markets.

Finally, Mr. President, he has some very interesting observations. He says, in summation:

This is why I believe that the top priority for both the Executive and Legislative Branches is to get our fiscal house in order. The runaway pattern of Federal spending threatens to become permanent. It is high time for a thorough review of Federal spending programs and a concerted effort to blunt the momentum of their growth.

That is what this amendment is for—to blunt the momentum of the growth of the Federal Government. Regardless of what we do on the floor of the Senate in the closing hours of this session, it is bound to grow from about $270 to $300 billion. This baby is going to grow to $300 billion.

But where is the effort to try to blunt this momentum? I thought a sincere effort was made in December 1967 when they all voted for exactly this procedure, under similar circumstances.

With due respect to everybody who has worked hard, and it is hard work. We have hearings day in and day out, all year long. The distinguished Senator from Hawaii starts his foreign assistance hearings in February, and he has to wait until December to get a continuing resolution. Much of it is wasted work.

But within it all, here comes a consensus of both sides of the aisle that has been found tried and true; and the Government did not fall after 1967, when we did this on December 12.

Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I think it is interesting that we stand here, in the closing days of this Congress, trying to determine what our direction is going to be.

We are all concerned in this body with inflation. We are all concerned with recession. We are all concerned about the economy. I suppose each of us, in his own way, is trying to express his concerns and is trying to carry out his duty as he sees it.

I happen to be one of the people who in April of this year voted for a resolution that said that we would hold the spending to $300 billion. I happen to be one of the people in this body who voted $295 billion. I happen to be one of the people who, on June 13, voted again and expressed ourselves, by a vote of 78 to 23, that we would hold down spending.

Because of that, I am going to be one of the people who vote today to try to do something about spending; because if it was sweet in April and if it was sweet in June, it should be a lot sweeter in December, at the time we really come to the lick log, where we are not talking about a resolution, where we are talking about whether we are willing to take the step that means that we put our money where our mouth was then, and that we decide that we are going to face up to the realities of the situation.

Inflation and recession: I wish I understood these things, Mr. President. I wish I understood the causes. I wish I understood how to change them. I am concerned about the fact that we vote for this cut, it has to affect some unemployment. I do not think it would lay off one member of the Federal Government. When I look at the figures that show that there is a 26-percent turnover, and I look at the figures that they can adjust as to compensation, between this and the other outlays they make, and I look at the history of 1967 and see that after voting for that cut in 1967, the total employment of the Federal Government and the 4 years I have been in the Senate, knowing something about the nature of the beast, I do not think any man is going to lose his job in Government because of this cut. It may mean that there will be some difference in employment because of some project.

But I am persuaded by the statement that was made the other day on the floor of the Senate by the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Brock), in which he laid before the Senate and before Congress and the people the facts that show that we are coming close to a situation in which 50 percent of the people employed in this country are going to be employed by the Federal Government and by State and local governments. What is the productivity of that 50 percent?

We are talking about the way to get out of inflation, the way to get out of recession, and this is the one thing that I have not heard any economist differ on, whether he be the most liberal or whether he be the most conservative, whether he be of the Keynesian school or whatever school he is of. I have not heard one economist who did not say that we could produce our way out of it if we could increase productivity.

How do we do that? I wish I knew the total answer to that. But I can tell the Senators, that is done in the private sector.

The distinguished senior Senator from Mississippi, the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, knows that; he knows that that has always been the thing that made this country, the private sector of this country. Now we see that we are approaching a position where over 50 percent, over one-half of the people in the country, are going to be employed by the Government and not by the private sector.

I do not think it is going to matter whether we say that we have changed the name, that we are no longer the kind of country that we were, that we have gone to a socialistic country. At what stage, when we have over half of those people employed by the Government, are we going to become a country in which everybody works for the Government, more and more, as we see it being done?

It looks to me, Mr. President, as if this gives us a small possibility of sending a signal that help may be on the way; that we are not going to allow the Government to go completely to where more than half of the people will be employed by it.

The small sum of money—and it is small, I guess, the way we deal with money—the $2.4 billion that this would save, what can that do? It seems to me, again, that what everybody is telling us is that we have to have some innovative new programs. We have to determine how we get capital back into economy.

One of the ways that we get capital back in, of course, would be to give some kind of a tax cut, accelerated depreciation, add to the investment credit. Those are ways of getting capital back in.

Another way of getting capital back in, of course, is that the private sector goes to the bond market and borrows money. They have not been able to do that in the recent past, because the interest rates are so high. Why should anyone take some kind of a bond by a company that may get into trouble when they can get 9 percent interest on a Treasury bill? The Government is, every day, in that money sector, borrowing money. We are talking about trying to hold that down a little.

This signal, I think, would certainly cause a reduction in interest rates. We had, in our Committee on Appropriations, the distinguished chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, who said that the figure had been suggested that this cut would only lower this interest rate one-half of 1 percent. Only? That is a large figure. I think, one-half of 1 percent lower interest rate.

Think what that means to the bond buyers. Think what that means to housing, to the people who would, maybe, be able to buy a house who now cannot. Think of the stimulant to housing.

How many jobs would we create? I think somebody told us we create two jobs in 1 year for every housing start we make. One-half of 1 percent lower interest rate, he said, could cause 200,000 new housing starts, 400,000 jobs immediately that could be done by generating this. Those jobs, the way I view them, are productive jobs.

There are many people in the private sector who are going to pay taxes and they are going to multiply. In my State, my mills are closed, my timber mills are closed, because they are stacked up with lumber in the yards. That means a man who goes out and is a sawmill hand is out of work. It means the timberman who goes out and cuts timber is out of work. The logger, the man who drives a truck and snakes them out of the woods, is out of work. Everybody up the line is out of work because housing is stopped. All of my contractors, all of my suppliers, all of my electricians and plumbers and carpenters and helpers are out of work.

Every housing start causes a generation there. As opposed to letting this Government grow at the same rate it has been growing, or holding it back just a little bit so that it would grow still $30 billion over last year, we hold it back a little bit and allow that private sector to take a spurt.

I do not have any problems with this. I can tell the Senators I am so happy to be here today to have a chance to vote for this that I do not know what to do. I would be just as happy if we could pass it. But I am afraid that we are not going to.

At least, I am going to be able to go back and look some of those people in the eye—that little logger, that turpentine, that man who snakes that log out of there—and think, "I tried to help him. I did something that I thought was going to do it."

Maybe I am wrong. Maybe I am just as wrong as I can be about my premise. But I believe it pretty strongly. I think the only way we can turn this around is if we are willing to do in December what we talked about in April, what we talked about in June.

If every Subcommittee on Appropriations had done what the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations did in his Subcommittee on the Military, we would not be here today, because he made a drastic cut. He made a realistic cut. Because of that, there was a reduction there. But we did not see that reduction in all of the other subcommittees. They just said, "We cannot cut, we need to continue."

Certainly it is hard. I have never voted for a bad appropriations bill in my life. They are all good. They will all help somebody. They all make somebody happy.

At the same time, because we did not have that printing press, we did not have the ability to sell those Treasury bills and to raise the debt ceiling, I have seen the time in my State when we were not willing to vote new taxes. So we said, "We are going to hold the line."

When I was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in my State, we said, no, and we said that to people who made me cry to see it. We said it to the crippled children. We said it to the halt and the lame, and we said it to everybody else. We said, "Because we do not think we can put any more taxes on the people of this State, we are going to have to say 'no.'"

The interesting thing is that, after that 2 years, I looked around. Everything was still running, everything was still going.

It is amazing what the inventiveness of the bureaucrat is, the agency head. I did not see any programs stopped. There were not any fewer employees. In fact, they grew again in my State. Everything continued. Maybe it was that just some of the most-favored projects that people wanted to do did not get started. But things continued, went right on, as they always had.

As soon as there was a little bit of money, we spent every bit of it. As soon as the economy picked up in my State, we took it all, took all that slack up.

That is the way Government is: if there is ever a dollar, they are going to spend it. But at the same time, if we ever have to say no, or if we are willing to, it will go on. It will go right on. Everybody will still have his job. Everything will still go on.

So I think that what we have is a chance, Mr. President, to do something, to give a signal that we are concerned; that we are going to try to see that that figure does not reach 50 percent of all people being employed by Government; that we are going to try to do something in the productive sector, the private sector of this country; that we are going to try to have the leeway so that when we want to go into these inventive programs that will stimulate the economy—a tax cut, an investment credit—we are going to have the wherewithal, without adding to that deficit in tremendous amounts.

All we have to do is look at the newspapers and see how much production has fallen in the last month, how much the gross national product is going down. That tells us we are going to collect less tax revenues.

If we look at the other side of that paper, it will tell us how much unemployment has gone up. That tells us something else. The demand for medical, the demand for social services, the demand for food stamps, the demand for welfare are going up, too. Senators know the programs we have passed on unemployment compensation and jobs. We know what those are going to do.

So the outlay is going up and the revenues are going down. What does that mean? Why, deficits, continually higher and higher deficits. We are already talking about $25 and $35 billion deficits in the next year or next two years, that we are going to be facing. That is without any new programs. That is without doing anything on these incentive programs we have been talking about.

What does that mean? We are going to be selling those Treasury bills, draining that money out of the private savings and loan institutions, out of the banks, out of the bond market, out of the money available for stock purchases. That means no capital for industry, and more people laid off, and that is how you go into the cycle of recession and recession to depression.

How do we reverse it? I think we have some opportunity, through trying, to stimulate the private sector, trying to stimulate the bond market, and trying to reduce that interest rate. But not if we continue to go the way we are going, and say, "No, we cannot cut anything; after all, it is too late and we did not consider it in time."

It seems as though one of the things we are supposed to do around here is look at the handwriting on the wall, and not be bound by saying, "This may cause a precedent." We did not worry about that in 1967, when we passed it.

After all, things may change. I think the people have elected us to come up here and think a little bit, use our judgment day by day on the situation as we see it, and use that judgment to change the course.

I think we need to do that. This is not business as usual. We are in times that cause us to be concerned that we have to do something. I hope very strongly, Mr. President, that we will pass this cut, and give the signal that we are going to try to change course.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, I have had the privilege of chairing the Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations for more than 2 years. During that period, it has been my responsibility to report the recommended appropriations for fiscal years 1973, 1974, and now 1975.

In fiscal year 1973, the administration requested $5,163,024,000. The subcommittee reduced that by $2,339,127,000.

For the following fiscal year, the administration requested $6,866,000,000 plus, and my subcommittee reduced that by $1,391,499,000.

For fiscal year 1975, unfortunately, although we began our hearings on February 25, we are now faced with a continuing resolution. The administration requested $5,215,326,000 and my subcommittee was prepared to recommend a reduction of $1,280,092,000.

So, I believe I meet the qualifications for joining those who seek to cut Government spending.

I am certain that all of us in the U.S. Senate are well aware of what inflation is doing to this country and to our people. But I am saddened to believe that this discussion today may, by emphasis, convince the people of the United States that the major cause of inflation, if not the cause of inflation in this country, is Government spending.

I think it is well that we remind ourselves of what has happened in agriculture in the last year. We began the spring with much rain. It was a very wet spring. As a result, the plantings were reduced by almost 15 percent.

That was followed by an unusual drought, further destroying our crops. Then, as if that were not enough, we had premature frosts in the fall, further damaging our crops.

As a result, the price of corn has gone up, and when the prices of corn and feed grains go up, you can almost expect in a few months to see the price of beef going up, as well as the prices of poultry and pork products.

In that same period, we were faced with a quadrupling of oil prices. This was not as a result of action by the Committee on Appropriations. When oil prices went up four times, that translated itself, not just into higher price of gasoline—if that were the case, I would not be too concerned—but it involved just about every facet of our living: synthetic clothing, all petrochemical products, and most importantly, petrochemical fertilizers. This, again, resulted in spiraling inflation.

Furthermore, about 2 years ago we decided that the United States should have a modified wage and price control program. As a result of that, we insisted that our steel industry keep down their profits and their prices. So under this capitalistic system, where profits are very important, the steel industry decided that it would not expand its activities. Now when we need steel, and our steel foundries are working 24 hours a day, we do not have the facilities, and, under a simple application of the economic theory of supply and demand, the price of steel is going up. That translates itself to higher prices for all steel products.

I would hope that we would not give the impression to the people of the United States that all the culprits are here. Yes, we are responsible, but not the sole responsible party.

I would like to point out also that the Committee on Appropriations has reduced the requested amounts for controllables by more than $6 billion. The $30 billion increase that we find in this fiscal year over the last fiscal year is due for the most part to social security payments—are we suggesting that we reduce social security payments now?—the cost-of-living allowances—we almost unanimously voted for an increase in cost-of-living allowances—and the pay raise, on which we overrode the President's veto. We decided that veterans of the United States should be given a fair shake in education, and overrode the President's veto on that.

Then we have debt service costs on the moneys we have been borrowing over the past years, and now we are paying the principal and interest. These have to be paid.

So I would like to say, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that I think we have done our part to keep down the cost of Government, realizing that when we make our cuts, on the other end of the cut is someone who has a family, who has possibly involved himself with a mortgage payment, and suddenly he finds himself receiving a reduction-in-force notice.

We know what happens when we reduce Government spending. But we have done this, and I am certain we will continue to do so. But I would hope that the Senate will not decide to do so in this manner. I am convinced that the regular procedure that has been followed by the committee and by the Senate for many decades, has proven itself. I am certain that through our subcommittees and in our full committees we can continue to bring about whatever reductions are necessary.

I would hope that this discussion will not give the impression that all we have to do is to cut $5 billion and inflation disappears.

As my colleague has indicated, by reducing our budget by $5 billion we will cut down the inflation rate by one-half of 1 percent. That is important.

We will cut down interest rates by one-half of 1 percent, and that is important.

But there are other factors much more important: The price of steel, the price of oil, the price of food, and the matter of weather. We have no control over weather.

So, Mr. President, in voting on this measure I hope that my colleagues will not fall into the trap of feeling that the only thing we have to do is to cut the budget and all the economic ills of this country will suddenly disappear.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. INOUE. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Under this amendment, it would require the withholding of expenditures of 2 percent of all money appropriated for the cost of personnel during the year. That would mean that it would be 4 percent that would have to be reduced from now until the end of the fiscal year. That would mean twice as many Federal employees would have to be relieved or twice as many in salary, total salary, at least, as would have had to be discharged at the beginning of the fiscal year in order to accomplish it.

Four percent of the amount involved here of personnel, if we had to take off 4 percent of the personnel to achieve it—it may take more to achieve the 4 percent reduction in expenditures—means 112,000 Federal employees who must be discharged now in order to achieve that reduction. And the longer it takes to achieve that reduction, if it is a month from now or more, why, it will be that much more that will have to be done.

Now, Senator, I have stood for economy, I am for economy. But this is going to work a hardship on somebody. When these people go off these rolls without any warning, suddenly here in order to achieve this, somebody is going on relief, somebody is going to need food stamps, somebody is going to need a bigger appropriation than we made this morning for public service jobs. Either that or they are out on the street and in a condition of unemployment, and they cannot get employment in the private sector the way the situation is going on now.

I think we had better think about what we are doing here, and we had better discipline ourselves to follow the rules and procedures and to do these things as these bills come up.

Things happen that we cannot foresee. I appreciate the compliments that have been paid about trying to do our duty, and the success we have had in reducing the military. But I point out that under this amendment the military does not have to cut any personnel if the President says that they are needed for the military, for the defense. That provision is in this resolution.

So I am not here defending the military. I am trying to get us to look at the overall aspect of this thing. Do we want to cut out 100,000 jobs immediately? It has to be done immediately in order to hold the expenditures down. Do we want to do that now, throw that many people out of work in the Federal Government, throw out those people in the Federal Government without throwing out people here in the legislative branch of the Government? How is it going to look?

I think we had better think seriously before we dump these people on relief.

We have contracts, Mr. President. We have contracts out, commitments already made where, if this money has to be reduced, the procurement funds have to be reduced, that means a breach of those contracts; it means a cancellation of them; it means other people out of work. This thing is not just one-sided. The consequences of it can be very, very serious, in my judgment, to do it here in the middle of the year.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, as the chairman of the committee is well aware, I think when we use statistics we realize that by reducing the controllable by something over $6 billion, we have reduced that controllable something in excess of 15 percent but much as we try there are certain things you cannot reduce, social security, veterans benefits, defense service costs, hospital benefits for veterans; so I would like to have my colleague from South Carolina believe that all of us who serve with him on the committee have tried our best, in our way, in our balliwick, to reduce expenditures to the lowest possible figure but, at the same time, it has been frustrating for all of us when we see inflation abound throughout the land, and we should realize that much of this inflation cannot be attributed to activities of Congress.

We have no control over weather; we have very little control over the decisions of the sheikhs of the Persian Gulf. So, much as it may be frustrating for us, I would hope that this very drastic step proposed in this amendment will be defeated.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I share the concern of the sponsors of this amendment of the increasing Federal expenditures and the need to do something about it.

Federal expenditures have been building up for years. It did not just suddenly happen in the last 2 or 3 years. We are still paying for World War II, the Korean war, and the Vietnam war. We are still paying for programs started under the New Deal, the Fair Deal, the New Frontier, and the Great Society programs. These are programs that are hard to cancel—some of them good, some of them not too necessary. Other programs were started by Republican Presidents and even more by Congress.

We on the Committee on Appropriations have been trying to reduce these expenditures. But almost every bill we report out is increased on the floor, sometimes by as much as $500 million. We have been trying to do our part in reducing these funds.

I do not think a percentage cut is the proper way to reduce expenditures. I think, as the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas (Mr. McCLELLAN) pointed out, we might as well take the President's budget and cut 5 or 10 percent and send it back to the President.

There have been efforts to make reductions by item. The President, in the past, has withheld funds and impounded funds; and some that he has impounded, by that procedure have wound up in the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court has ruled in two or three cases that the President did not have the right to impound funds.

Then, under the Budget Control Act we authorized the President to withhold funds under rescission and deferral procedures. Congress, under certain procedures, could agree or disagree with those.

The President proposed 46 rescissions equaling $1,535,762,000. Congress has only approved $116 million of these rescissions.

Then the President proposed 130 deferrals equaling $23,548,997,000. These deferrals are program by program, and again Congress has the opportunity to approve or disapprove. The appropriations committee has recommended approval of the resolution introduced by Senator Sparkman to object to the deferral of funds for homeowner assistance. This resolution, if passed by the Senate will cause the President to utilize the $246 million he proposed to defer. I think this program is meritorious and should be continued.

Overall I think it would be a much better procedure if we took the $25 billion that the President proposed in rescissions and deferrals and disapprove or approve item by item rather than to take a percentage cut.

Now, I know I once voted for a percentage cut, but it was the lesser of two evils at the time.

I quote from part of my remarks in the Record on October 24, 1967:

Mr. Young of North Dakota. Mr. President, I would like to be able to support the continuing resolution as it came from the House rather than the resolution now pending before the Senate which is simply a continuing resolution of the sort that we have passed many times in previous years and twice before this year.

I am in full accord with the House position of trying to save from $5 billion to $7 billion, but how they do it is another matter. The manner in which these cuts are to be made are very ambiguous; and when the resolution is examined closely, I believe it will be apparent that some very unfair cuts would be applied.

Director Schultze, of the Bureau of the Budget, did not know how the cuts would be applied in many cases.

I request unanimous consent that my full remarks of October 24, 1967 be included as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. Young of North Dakota. Mr. President, I would like to be able to support the continuing resolution as it came from the House rather than the resolution now pending before the Senate which is simply a continuing resolution of the sort that we have passed many times in previous years and twice before this year.

I am in full accord with the House position of trying to save from $5 billion to $7 billion, but how they do it is another matter. The manner in which these cuts are to be made are very ambiguous; and when the resolution is examined closely, I believe it will be apparent that some very unfair cuts would be applied.

Director Schultze, of the Bureau of the Budget, did not know how the cuts would be applied in many cases. He said that in many instances an interpretation of the Comptroller General would be necessary to determine what was required by the House action. He did give us some idea as to where he thought these cuts would be applied under the Whitten amendment to the resolution that passed the House. The Whitten amendment would require a cut of approximately $7 billion, and the expenditure, not on appropriation for the present fiscal year could not exceed 1967 appropriations, except in certain instances.

There were two or three exceptions, as I recall. One exception was for Department of Defense operations relating to Vietnam.

The Budget Director indicated that the cut might apply in the following manner. It would require a mandatory cut in the Defense Department appropriation of $2½ billion on top of the $1½ billion as have already cut in the regular appropriation bill and this at a time when war requirements in Vietnam are increasing. Agriculture would be cut $400 million; Commerce, $250 million; Interior, $150 million; State Department, only $10 million.

This cut would apply in the case of the State Department because its present appropriation is approximately the same as that of last year. I am not aware that the State Department has had any new functions added to its appropriation.

In the case of the Department of Agriculture, where the cut would be $40 million, many new functions have been added from year to year which have little or nothing to do with agriculture. For example, the food stamp program has been added to this year's budget. In the last couple of years, we have added housing for towns and cities with a population up to 5,500 and under, and for farmers, to the Agriculture appropriation bill. And we have had the sewer and water system program added to Agriculture which affects not only farmers but also towns and cities with a population up to 5,500.

So Agriculture would receive a large cut because of the functions that have been added to the Department of Agriculture. The State Department would receive a cut of only $10 million, which certainly would not hurt it at all.

The Veterans' Administration would be cut by $180 million, and they have a vastly increased load because of the increasing casualties returning from Vietnam. I do not believe this department can afford any cut at this time.

Mr. President, I have in my hand a table which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record as part of my remarks. These figures were presented by Budget Director Schultze before the Committee on Appropriations as to where he believed cuts would be required under the House Joint Resolution 888. It should be noted, however, that in many instances a determination by the Comptroller General would be necessary to know exactly how the House joint resolution would apply.

December 19, 1974

Mr. YOUNG. That resolution was modified by the late Senator Karl Mundt which made it more acceptable. It was then the lesser of two evils and I voted for it.

Mr. President, I think it would be wrong to adopt a resolution such as this during the closing days of the Senate when only a few hours before we passed a bill appropriating approximately $5 billion mostly to take care of unemployment.

Maybe that bill should have been increased by $3 billion, $4 billion, or $5 billion more if we are going to pass this resolution because this cannot help but create more unemployment.

So I hope the resolution does not pass.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. President, I will be brief.

Mr. President, may we have order down here in front?

I am speaking largely for the Record, but I do not want the Senator from South Carolina to leave the Chamber, either.

Now, Mr. President, I know the fine motives of these gentlemen who are sponsoring this amendment; that goes without saying. They are hard workers and they have done some good, constructive work, too.

But the idea, or tone of voice, that if one voted for a reduction in 1967 that it is a sin—a legislative sin—not to vote for the reduction now, that is just ridiculous. I say that with all deference to the sponsors because the facts are so vastly different.

The big fight in 1967 was over the question of expenditure, whether or not we were going to reduce it some or vote for a tax bill, a tax increase. That was the real issue, and we whipped that thing back and forth here a long time and I was one of those doing what little I could to resolve it. I think as a whole we did some good, although we were faced the next January, as I recall, with a supplemental request for even more money. Now, what were the facts then?

We did not have any unemployment, virtually none. War was going on, everybody that wanted a job and was worth a continental could get a job. So unemployment was not an issue, it was not a problem.

Now, at the same time, Mr. President, I think this question has been totally answered, answered here this morning by the Senate.

Things are such today that we passed here on a voice vote a $4 billion bill—$4 billion—five altogether, with the total delineated for unemployment.

Now, I voted against that authorization because while I recognized the problem, I thought we were going too fast and too far, and we ought to appropriate some of it—authorize some of it—then come back here and review the matter again in January and February, see what is necessary. But that is the way things move here.

We stood on one foot, voted $4 billion new dollars that we do not have, incidentally, because it is paper money, it is printing press money, there is no tax bill to go along with it to raise the money, and then we come back here and stand on the other foot the same morning and vote for this reduction.

And it applies to bills that have already been carefully gone over here by the ones that the Senate put in charge of going into these bills, and that includes valuable members of the Appropriations Committee, the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Florida, and they are valuable members.

Now, the military procurement authorization bill, just for hardware and manpower increases, came here on the floor and was debated, came with the recommendation of an overall $2.3 billion reduction. It was debated here and passed June 11. Not a dime changed, as I remember, did not add a dime or take off a dollar, it went on to conference, back and forth, and the appropriation bill came in for the entire department, hardware, manpower, operations and all those other things, and the reduction was $5.6 billion or $7 billion, as I understand it.

Now, why? Because it was carefully gone over, soft spots were found, recommendations were made as to reductions, and they were approved by the bodies.

Now all these other bills went through the same process and many of them had reductions. I know we reduced the Atomic Energy Commission money, in our appropriations subcommittee and that is supposed to be an untouchable. The same applies to another public works appropriation bill; we reduced that, I think, $56 million. We reduced another item there that is not ordinarily reduced, public works.

And we come to the floor and look at some of those reductions, because of special interests, which I do not complain about; but it just shows—let the Record show—that all these bills that would be reduced now through this amendment have been carefully gone over and reasonable reductions have been made.

Now, this amendment would create, unemployment, there is no doubt about that—there is no doubt about that. And the other one we passed a few minutes ago for around $5 billion is supposed to try to relieve unemployment.

So what do we want, after all?

If we are going to be consistent now, and I would have gone along even further for some reductions if we could have taken that as a substitute for this $4 billion to $5 billion bill that we ran through, I think, with all deference, all too rapidly.

So I hope now at this hour—we will be back on these things quick enough anyway, these problems are not going to solve themselves, we will be back here in January and this debate will start all over again—but I hope now that we can go on now with what has been carefully and deliberately done. It represents the judgment of the body, and if the body as a whole thought there ought to be more reduction, it would not have passed and $4 billion bill a few minutes ago on a voice vote.

Mr. President, I yield back such time as I may have left.

Mr. McGEE. Mr. President, will the distinguished chairman yield to me.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield the distinguished Senator 5 minutes.

Mr. McGEE. Mr. President, there are two or three considerations with which I think this body should be deeply concerned. I say this with the utmost respect for our colleagues on the committee who have introduced the pending amendment. What is at stake here is the role of the Congress and its integrity in committing itself to more responsible budgeting. We all admit that there have been mistakes made over the years. We are all confessing that. We have begun this year to try to do something specific and responsible about it. It was begun by the chairman of the full Committee on Appropriations, to try to set an overall ceiling for all appropriation bills. Each subcommittee chairman was asked to set a tentative ceiling on his bill and that was done. Every subcommittee chairman on this committee lived up to that responsibility.

There were complications. There are always complications when a new procedure of this magnitude is initiated. But we made an important breakthrough. We took a big step forward. The second thing that the Senate did, Mr. President, was to establish a Budget Committee, precisely for the purpose of setting up ceilings and priorities, in the very broadest sense. This also has been done by the action of this body after deliberate hearings, after long deliberation, and after exercising the best judgment that the body could command. Having done these two things, Mr. President, which I believe redound to the great credit of the Senate, we are now being asked at this 11th hour, "Let us take another swipe out of it of 10 percent of all of the controllables."

I say to you, Mr. President, that means the kind of responsibility that this body ought to have. Our good friends tell us, "We are not going to take a meat ax to this." But if I may say to my friend from South Carolina and my friend from Florida, they are taking a meat ax. They are not only taking a meat ax to cut it back, but they are also cutting down the role of Congress in making these judgments, for with this amendment, we leave to the discretion of the administration what they are going to do with the money that is left.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGEE. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In doing that, we abdicate our responsibility.

Mr. McGEE. Indeed we do. Mr. McCLELLAN. We are always talking about giving the power to the executive; losing the power of the Congress; conferring it upon the executive. Here we are abdicating our responsibility and turning it over to the executive, or the heads of the agencies.

Mr. McGEE. Exactly; and at the very time that the Congress says it is reasserting its responsibility and its role in the Government.

December 19, 1974

I am sure our colleagues proposing this amendment have been among those sharing that expression on this floor, saying it is time for the Senate to reassert itself.

I say to my friend from South Carolina, come and let us reassert ourselves.

In the agriculture appropriations bill, we have items that the Office of Budget and Management and the President rejected. They set them aside. They impounded them. They froze them. On some of them they did not submit budget estimates because in their opinion these programs were not of sufficient priority to justify a budget estimate.

But this body believed they were important, and this body intends to see that its will is carried out.

In this category for example we have grant funds for the water and sewer program of FHA; we have housing for domestic farm labor and mutual and self-help housing. There are others but these serve to illustrate the point I wish to make. We considered these programs and we made appropriations to insure that they would be carried out.

Even as we did that, Mr. President, we cut back the total budget and submitted a figure in this current agricultural appropriations bill that the Senate adopted that is $58 million under the budget.

I am only saying to my friend that we utilized a procedure that epitomizes responsibility. We spent a lot of time trying to live up to that responsibility. We make no claim to having a monopoly on what the wise answer is. Our decisions might be subject to question but we do call into question a quick 10 percent hatchet job on a year's effort to try to arrive at an equitable balance. With the Senate preparing to adjourn today or tomorrow we should not take any action here today that would nullify a year's work of the Appropriations Committee.

We should stand on what we have done. Our Budget Committee does not become fully operational until next year. The Appropriations Committee is already under the ceiling laid out and provided by its chairman this year as a continuing policy.

I say to our colleagues that for this reason this is no hour to be demeaning the role of the Senate. This body is not only supposed to cut; it is supposed to make responsible judgments. You cannot do the one to the exclusion of the other. What is in the balance of these measures that we have submitted as appropriation items is a balance of equities which have been arrived at by the committee and Congress. They represent the will of the Congress in determining the policies and the directions of this country rather than forfeiting these decisions to OMB, or forfeiting them to the executive branch entirely.

I would petition my good friend from South Carolina to weigh the implications of his proposal very carefully, and to join all of the Members of this body in asserting the responsibility of the Senate in these very critical, serious, dangerous economic times.

I ask my colleagues to sustain the committee's judgment and to vote down the pending amendment by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. President, at the very time we were debating the amendment to the continuing resolution this morning the Budget Committee was conducting a hearing and had as its witness Charles Schultze, a Senior Fellow at Brookings Institute. I am certain that all of us are aware of the background and qualifications of Mr. Schultze and the reputation he enjoys among economists in the United States and the entire world.

The sponsors of the amendment to the continuing resolution repeatedly pointed out that this same procedure had been enacted by Congress on a unanimous Senate vote in 1967. The chairman of the Budget Committee (Mr. MUSKIE) asked Mr. Schultze to comment on this amendment and evaluate the 1967 action. Mr. Schultze did this in some detail and I think it would be most appropriate that this discussion be included as a part of this morning's debate. It is mostly timely and I think will serve to place the 1967 action and the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina in proper perspective.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the exchange among the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Utah (Mr. MOSS) and Mr. Schultze be made a part of the Record and that it be included at the conclusion of my remarks in this morning's debate on the continuing resolution.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask a second question which is going to come before us in the Senate today I take it. You recall that in 1967 the Congress approved an across-the-board expenditure cut tailored in accordance with a formula which I understand had some part in shaping. I understand that based on that precedent, a similar across-the-board cut will be offered for Senate consideration this afternoon. And I wondered if you would give us your evaluation of that, both as a mechanism, and secondly in terms of its economic impact.

Mr. SCHULTZE. Let me start with the second first if I might, the economic impact. I think it would be perverse, undesirable, unneeded, bad. That is, even in periods of recession, I do not think that the Congress ought to close its eyes and pass my expenditure program and stop examining the budget for wastes and ineffectiveness. It should continue to do that. There is no reason to stop that during recession.

At the same time, however, cutting expenditures for economic purposes in a period where the problem is precisely the opposite, where the problem is that this economy is racing downhill because of too little market demand and too little spending, to pull federal spending out of the economy, not because you have decided that a particular program is wasteful, but more for economic reasons, literally it is just not a good thing to do. It is a bad thing to do and will contribute further to the recession.

Now, the only thing that is likely to save it is that I am morally certain that between now and next June the Administration is going to turn on a dime and is going to be putting some of that money back in, so it may turn out you voted, and they will ultimately, you and they will be forced to put something else back in. But quite frankly, Senator, I see no reason for it.

Secondly, the problem with an across-the-board expenditure cut is that even after—I'm sorry to say—that I am not familiar with this particular one—even after applying a good bit of sophisticated thinking to how one might do it with the least arbitrary impact, and even after one gets rid of some of the gross inefficiencies that go with simple minded across-the-board cuts, any kind of an across-the-board cut presents you with all sorts of anomalies. You know, the federal government is running a $305 billion enterprise, and that is a large enterprise with a lot of facets, and a lot of peculiarities, not all of which are just because of stupidity. A lot of it is because it simply fits the facts, and it is very hard to tailor an across-the-board cut to that kind of a complex enterprise, and you inevitably end up with problems.

Now, in a period in which it is clear that the economic problem is too much spending, driving the economy to a drum tight situation, then this may be the lesser of many evils, and it might be nevertheless necessary to do. So I do not want to say at no time is this a good idea. It may be the best way to get something done, but at the present time, as far as I am concerned, it makes absolutely no sense.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have any recollection of the impact of that cut in 1967 and how it worked?

Mr. SCHULTZE. If I am right, this was the so-called 2 percent or 10 percent dealing with obligations and cutting payroll obligations by 2 percent and the other obligations by 10 percent?

The CHAIRMAN. Something of that nature. Mr. SCHULTZE. If that is roughly what it is, of all of the forms of doing an across-the-board cut that probably is better than most because you are dealing with the, you are hitting the budget where you can affect it; namely, when the government makes an obligation or contract you are not putting your hand over the spigot, you are saying I am going to turn the spigot down, I am going to turn the handle down a little. So that part of it makes sense.

My recollection of this, and it is fairly fuzzy by now, it is very hard as a matter of fact with the information the Congress has to know whether it was actually done or not, because you say well, it is a 10 percent cut in obligations. From what? First you have got to find out from what it otherwise would have been, and it is very hard to figure. It worked. At that time it was I think needed because we were in a Vietnam war, and the economy was booming too rapidly. In general it was carried out. It did not cause any major traumas. But, you know, in program after program there were a number of adjustments that had to be made that did not make any sense from a program standpoint. Some agencies that really should not have been cut back were cut back, and some agencies that really could bear it were not cut back equally. I guess my general evaluation is it did go. It is hard to measure how much was actually cut because you don't know quite what it was cut from.

And from a program standpoint, it would not ruin the federal government, no. But right now, from an economic standpoint, it just makes no sense.

The CHAIRMAN. I think I will yield at this point to Senator MOSS. My first 10 minutes is almost over in any case, and he might like to get into these questions as well as others. Senator MOSS. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. And I too think this is a very lucid and stimulating presentation that you have made. And I am interested in this matter of the across-the-board cut that we are probably going to be faced with. Can you estimate what impact that might have on our unemployment rate, which is, as you say, 6½ percent perhaps now.

Mr. SCHULTZE. Well, all I can do is think out loud about it, Senator, because I am sorry to say I am not familiar enough with the specifics to know what it adds up to in terms of total dollars. Since I don't know that, I can only think out loud about what it might do.

In the first place, it turns out, I read this morning before I came up the Department of Commerce's current survey of current businesses, and if the amount is cut from the budget equal to what the President has suggested in the way of his budget cuts, and if this is about the same magnitude, let me talk about that.

Senator Moss. It is predicted to be about $3.2 billion.

Mr. SCHULTZE. That is slightly less than what the President said. I think it was 4 point something that the President asked for, so it is in the same ball park.

The Department of Commerce points out that if that happens, if the expenditures are held to that level, that from now during the next three quarters in current dollar amounts the federal expenditures will increase very slightly and that therefore, with inflation going on, the real purchasing power of federal expenditures, the real amount will go down. Over the next three quarters the federal expenditures will join automobiles, housing, inventories, non-durable goods in going down. And it will lead to an increase, a further increase in unemployment than would otherwise have happened.

Now, by how much I really cannot say. It would not be that $3 million in a $14 trillion economy, that obviously is not going to be massive, and I guess it would be more responsive if at this stage I gave you a number, but it would increase the rate of unemployment from what it otherwise would have been, and it is going to rise anyway by some noticeable but modest amount.

Senator Moss. Well, at the same time that we will be faced with this problem, we are being asked to authorize an appropriation for public service employment and an extension of the unemployment compensation eligibility to care for those who are out of employment. So, the two are really diametrically opposed, are they not?

Mr. SCHULTZE. That is right. In fact, what you do is you kick people out of work with your left hand, and then give them not as good a job with your right hand. Kick with your left hand is a very poor metaphor, but that is all right. You understand my point.

Senator Moss. Yes I do. Plus the fact that this employment of people to get them on the payroll often times is a rather inefficient use of their abilities and talents, is that not so, when you kind of give them a temporary job to fill in on this matter?

Mr. SCHULTZE. I fully agree. If a man—well, several things. If in the first place you have a reduction in federal expenditures at this juncture, that just does not reduce the employment of people who are working on federal programs, because it has a secondary impact, that as they lose their jobs, they buy less, and other people lose their jobs.

Now, to take a man who is a machinist, who is a carpenter, who is an accountant, who is working on an assembly line doing a useful, productive job for society, and then to replace that by a job that may be—it may be useful, I am not saying it would not be—but clearly it is temporary, and it has some chance of being made to work, but it is not using his full talents and his experience, and from the narrow, conservative standpoint you are not just providing jobs, but it is wasting productivity, and it is inefficient and economic waste, and we talk about excessive government spending, and here is a real waste of human talent, and you end up producing less, which turns out less goods and services, and it is just wasteful.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Moss. Pursuing a point that Senator Moss raised a few moments ago, the new jobs bill, the public service jobs bill creates, as I understand it, 350,000 jobs. Might a $3.2 billion budget cut eliminate almost that many jobs?

Mr. SCHULTZE. It would eliminate a significant number.

The CHAIRMAN. 350,000 jobs at $7,000 a year, that is $2.5 billion.

Mr. SCHULTZE. It would eliminate a significant part of that number of jobs. Whether it would completely wipe it out or not I don't know. I kind of doubt it, but it would significantly offset it, and I just cannot make that kind of a calculation in my head. It depends on where they cut.

The CHAIRMAN. I should warn you though what we are trying to do is make a record that we might find useful to us on the Senate floor.

Mr. SCHULTZE. Somehow I sensed that. Somehow I got sense of that. It clearly would offset a significant part of it.

Mr. MCLELLAN. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to myself.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD page 30100 of the RECORD of October 25, 1967. My remarks at that time clearly indicated my position with reference to cuts of this character. That issue went on, as I remember it, from about September until the middle of December, until a day or two before the adjournment of Congress, just like the situation we have now. I have never voted for that kind of a cut, or the kind of cuts we have here today. I have always insisted that there ought to be cuts that identified the appropriation that was to be cut and not leave it to the President to do it, or to his agencies to do it. The only time I voted for anything like it was in the conference report when we were facing adjournment and when we had to pass the bill one way or the other.

I have never favored this kind of procedure and I do not favor it now. I regret to see it become the practice of this body. It destroys the integrity of the committee process with respect to appropriations, if this is to be the procedure to be followed.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. DIRKSEN. Would the Senator like to amend this to make it $4 billion?

Mr. ELLENDER. No. I think I would rather leave it to the Committee on Appropriations as we have done in the past.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, you are.

Mr. MCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MCLELLAN. Am I correct that in a rescission bill, like the original appropriation act, it must originate in the House of Representatives?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not believe so.

Mr. MCLELLAN. I wonder about that. This resolution simply expresses the sense of the Senate that unless the President finds some way to reduce this amount we propose to do it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Precisely.

Mr. MCLELLAN. We propose to do it by a rescission act. This gives the President one more chance and if he does not do it we propose to do so by this resolution. We would bind ourselves to do it, and to stay here during this session of Congress until we bring out a rescission bill and undertake to work out cuts in it and that we find we can make, should make, or are willing to make, in order to bring in the appropriations and expenditures; is that correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Correct.

Mr. MCLELLAN. Congress will still have the opportunity to meet its responsibilities, if the President does not. I do not know whether he will or not. I do not know how difficult it will be to take that much out of here, but at least a rescission bill can be brought in and Congress can work its will on making cuts in appropriations already made which, in my judgment, is the right way to do it. I voted against these other proposals because I do not want to tell the President, "Go and cut wherever you will. Take whatever you want to and apply it somewhere else." I think we should take that responsibility. I hope that there will be a rescission bill to which can offer amendments to cut those things which I think should be cut. The Senator from Illinois can do the same thing, and other Members of Congress can do the same thing.

Finally, when we can work out certain substantial reductions in appropriations, I think that is what we should do. I think that is what we must follow. If I understand the resolution correctly, it expresses the sense of the Senate that that is what we should do.

I thank the Senator from Illinois for yielding to me.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Make the record abundantly clear that this is a matter before us of a House joint resolution—No. 888. It comes from the House Appropriations Committee. This is a sense of the Senate resolution. It is quite in order on a resolution of this kind. I do not bind them. I would just like to get a declaration of intent on the part of the Senate when they go to conference on this measure, because it is going to run up against the Rock of Gibraltar in the House of Representatives before they get through.

The Senator from Arkansas is so perfectly right in this matter, if we can agree to a rescission bill and see where they can cut. But that is a matter for both Appropriations Committees and for a further recommendation to vote.

Mr. MCLELLAN. I was laboring under the impression that possibly a rescission bill would have to originate over in the House.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

Mr. MCLELLAN. They may so contend.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. MCLELLAN. I thought the Senator said a while ago that he did not think so, but assuming it does, it will be their responsibility on what to cut in appropriation bills already passed, and to initiate a rescission bill. If they do not do it, and if we can do it, the Senate should do it here, I think.

Mr. Young of North Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, does the Senator from New Mexico desire time?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I do not wish any time. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, how much time remains? How much time do the proponents have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 17 minutes.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, let us now refer particularly to some of the comments which have been made by our colleagues who more or less tried to confuse the particular issue.

December 19, 1974

For one thing, the distinguished Senator from Hawaii presented a very erudite discourse on inflation and budgetary matters, contending things that we never contend for in this amendment.

Specifically, we do not say that government spending is the sole culprit. We just happen to agree with the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Simon, who stated earlier this month:

If inflation is not public enemy No. 1, then chronic inflation and budget deficits must be recognized as public enemy No. 2.

We cannot affect the rain and the drought, and in this measure the quadrupling of oil prices and the other things.

Again, Government being the art of the possible, we are going to the heart of the matter on which we can act and act responsibly.

To try to twist this thing around and talk about it being demeaning to the Senate and abdicating responsibility is pure hogwash.

They have used the expression that it is ridiculous. My friend, the late Representative Mendel Rivers used to say, "It is so ridiculous, it is ridiculous."

That is exactly what they know.

They intimate, for example, that we went into this thing in a very quick, 10-percent hatchet job. What is the fact? The fact is that 7 years ago the Senate, the House, the White House, and the Bureau of the Budget worked throughout the months of October, November, and December, for a 3-month period, back and forth, on the things pointed out by the Senator from Hawaii: social security, highway trust funds, veterans' aid.

We all know, as the vote of Congress has just shown to the President, that he could not get more than 11 votes to sustain his veto in both Houses. We were overwhelmingly for those, and we were not going to propose those in 1967, and we do not propose cuts along that line at this time. With respect to debt service, that must be paid; those are taken care of.

This proposal was worked out in a very deliberate and considered manner over a 3-month period. It has withstood a 6-month testing period, with the colleagues in the Budget Committee, with the colleagues in the Appropriations Committee, and was set before the summit conference, the policy committee, and the Senate as a body, in the first part of the summer.

We said that the only time we have one final look is when the bills are passed. It is at the very end of the session. We never know how much, or where we are, until the very end of the session. So I am going to propose a particular approach that was employed.

When the Senator from Wyoming says, "Let us get all the Members together," that is exactly what they did in 1967. The Senator from Wyoming did not call it a hatchet job. He voted for it, and all the other Members voted for it. There was not a single dissenting vote.

So they worked during that period of time, and we worked during the summer. On that Budget Committee, specifically with Senator CHILES and Senator NUNN on this side of the aisle, and more particularly with Senator DOMENICI, Senator BARTLETT, Senator BUCKLEY, Senator ROTH, and others, we all began to swap ideas throughout the summer and fall period as to how we finally were going to bring this matter into line. It was no quick, 10-percent hatchet job.

To use the word "ridiculous," to say that this was not the situation in 1967, I say that the Senator who says that is also ridiculous, because this is how the amendment reads. It starts out with his language:

In view of the developments which constitute a threat to the economy, with resulting inflation...

What are the words of the public law of 1967, and how does that start out? Public Law 90-218, word for word:

In view of developments which constitute a threat to the economy, with resulting inflation...

We were talking about taxes; we were talking about all those things. We had already cut $5 billion, and we were trying to cut another $5 billion to prevent inflation in 1967.

It is not ridiculous. Let us not mislead our colleagues on this particular score.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield myself 3 additional minutes. They misread the amendment when they come down to the matter of employment. The amendment says, specifically, "an amount determined by" the formula. It can be different figures. One thing is the aggregate amount of a 2-percent cut in personnel or 10 percent of the other controllables, and it can be a mix of either, or it can be to the exclusion of either.

The fact remains that in 1968, after this was voted on and put into the public law, the executive department picked up 58,000 employees. It was not, ipso facto, that, if you vote for this, you have to start unemployment. Some people are trying to call this the Unemployment Act of 1975. The truth is that of the 2½ million Government employees, with their 26-percent turnover, 500,000 will be leaving their positions in 1975. At the end of this month, 50,000 are going to retire.

What we are saying is that you do not have to touch those employees, but all those jobs are not necessary. To lead the Senate to believe that somehow it would cut off 112,000 employees is not correct; it is not the provision of this amendment.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield.

Mr. CHILES. I have not heard the entire debate. I missed some of it. Has anybody yet had anything to say about any chaos that was caused from the action in 1967?

Mr. HOLLINGS. No.

Mr. CHILES. Does anybody's experience tell him that there were massive layoffs, that people were unemployed, that there was this kind of chaotic situation in 1967?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

We still have the big monster enlarging each day, going from this year to next year, to the tune, whatever we do, of at least $30 billion.

We are not trying to lead anybody, as the expression was used, to fall into a trap, that if we voted for this proposal, inflation would disappear. That, too, is ridiculous. No one has ever contended that. This is no trap. This has been put before everybody time and time again. But to many here who voted for and supported it genuinely in 1967, it is a bad memory. It was not demeaning for the senatorial responsibility when we all worked together in 1967 to cut back inflation.

What does the President of the United States say about the responsibility? He said:

Gentlemen, in this session, after the election, I need four things. We all have to start working together. I need you to confirm the Vice President.

We are doing that today.

I need a trade bill. I need public service employment.

We are going to do all those things.

He said:

I need to cut about $4 billion more from this budget.

He said, before the Advisory Council, on national TV:

Don't give me rhetoric, give me action. If you disagree with me, give me an alternative.

That is the way to act responsibly, and it is not demeaning for the Senate or the abdication of responsibility. On the contrary, we are the only ones on both sides of the aisle who have made any proposal as an alternative to what President Ford has asked for and what this Nation needs. It is not a question of responsibility.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's additional time has expired. The Senator has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. Has anybody introduced President Ford's program? Is it before Congress now, before the Senate?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Will the Senator please repeat the question?

Mr. CHILES. Has the President's program of cutting $4.6 billion been introduced?

Mr. HOLLINGS. That has not been introduced. It is in the early stages. It comes in the nature of a program at this time. Here it is. It would cause changes in social security, and the National Guard and Reserves. It would raise the price of food stamps for the elderly. It would step up payment in social security. It is a completely impossible program.

With that in mind, we tried to look for those alternatives. If someone has an amendment to this, let him offer it.

We have been following them throughout, step by step, month after month, at the Policy Committee and in Appropriations. It is not quick. It is not a hatchet job. But it has worked. The Senators who called it a hatchet job voted for it.

December 19, 1974

Mr. CHILES. That program to reduce $4.6 billion would hit some of these items that the distinguished Senator from Hawaii was talking about, that would hurt the people on social security, or hurt the people drawing food stamps, hurt the elderly. Those were specific steps in the President's budget.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Those were Presidential proposals, and obviously were rejected, as he was rejected on the proposal with regard to veterans.

Again, this would be something that the House Members had seen. I talked earlier in the year to the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, Mr. MAHON. He worked vigorously on it and was thoroughly familiar with it.

There are many Members on the House side who would accept an initiative of this kind, because they gave the leadership for it 7 years ago.

I reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. President.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am ready to yield back my time, in the hopes of ascertaining a live quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, do we have enough Members to ask for yeas and nays, before we close the debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been requested. Is there a sufficient second. There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Finally, Mr. President, if we close the debate on this matter—

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to reserve my time until everybody is ready to yield back. I am ready at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Arkansas has 44 additional minutes. The Senator from South Carolina has 5 minutes.

Mr. HOLLINGS. We are checking, Mr. President, with one of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle to see if he wants some time. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Arkansas on this side.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If anyone here wants to talk, I am for it. I was hoping just to move along.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to my distinguished senior Senator (Mr. THURMOND).

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise as a cosponsor in support of the amendment offered by my colleague from South Carolina and others to cut Federal expenditures by $3.2 billion. Although I have misgivings about cutting the budget authority of the various departments and agencies across the board, I feel that every Senator who is committed to the fight against inflation should give consideration to voting for this amendment. I would prefer that we make selective cuts, but I realize that from a realistic point of view, cuts in selective areas will not be achieved this year.

As I review the estimated effect of reductions and obligations produced by this amendment, I am particularly concerned about cuts in the Veterans' Administration and in defense and military assistance. Our Nation's veterans deserve all the assistance we can provide for their sacrifices to our country. Our Nation's defense, of course, is of paramount importance. Expenditures in the defense area have already been cut to the bone, and the Veterans' Administration actually needs more funds. Therefore, I would prefer that we cut less from these two areas. However, I anticipate that once attempts are made to modify this amendment, to cut less in particular areas, the chances for its passage will be significantly reduced. Consequently, I will support the amendment in its present form in the interest of reducing Federal spending in order to curb inflation.

Mr. President, I have long been an advocate of reduced spending on the Federal level. I am not less of an advocate today. We, as a country, cannot continue to spend more than we take in. The budget must be balanced at some time, and now is the time. By passage of this amendment, we have an opportunity to make a direct attack on inflation. The public is sick and tired of a Congress that continually expresses concern over our present economic situation but continually does nothing about it. I have listened in past months to many of my colleagues advocate a reduction in Federal spending. They have an opportunity today to go on record in support of reduced spending. Our citizens cry for action by Congress—let us have the courage to begin to take action today.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. COTTON).

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, I hesitate to engage in any way today in this debate, because this is my last day—I assume we are going to be through tonight. This is my last day as a Senator.

I hesitate further, because some very dear friends of mine are advancing this proposal. However, having sat for many years on the Committee on Appropriations, I felt that I must indicate that I am opposed to this measure.

One of the things that I think has contributed to the lack of real respect for Congress is the fact that, when we get down to brass tacks, we do not always have quite the intestinal fortitude to say, "Here, we are going to cut this particular attractive item that appeals to a lot of people." Then, when we find that the aggregate is more than we should have, we have, many times, resorted either to a percentage cut across the board or, done worse than that, after complaining that the President is usurping the powers of Congress. Twice in our own HEW bills, we have, after the President's veto sent it back and asked the President to cut it without exceeding a percent in any particular item.

In other words, we complain about the President's trying to take away the prerogatives of Congress, but we do not exercise them quite as ruthlessly as we should. For that reason, even though I applaud the purpose of this proposal, and with all due respect to some of my closest and dearest friends on the committee who are for this, I feel, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that if we do not meet these issues item by item and do not tell just where the reductions shall be made, we should refrain in the closing days of this session from doing what we have done before in the closing days of other sessions. That is to try to make up for the fact that the appropriations have gone too far and make it up by a general cut such as this.

I realize that this is specialized on personnel, and that this is the least objectionable form. It cannot be called exactly a meat-ax cut, but still, we are having to atone for something that we should have done ourselves in the subcommittees on the individual items. For that reason, I must oppose it.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. COTTON. I am very glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I preface my remarks by saying that the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire is just as eloquent, just as wise, just as pleasing on his final day as he was on his first and during every day of his service.

Mr. COTTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I was very interested in what the Senator was saying, because I agree that it is true that we have to do these things as we go along. It sometimes takes quite a bit of political courage. I joined with my distinguished friends from South Carolina in advocating cuts back in the fall and late summer.

But I do believe that the work of the Appropriations Committee has to receive the attention and respect that is due it. I was interested, for example, in the suggestion that was made by the President sometime this fall that we delay for 3 months the 5-percent automatic pay increase, which would have accounted for a $700 million saving. I wonder how many of the Senators who are now advocating an across-the-board cut in this appropriation bill stood up and voted with the President on that. Does the Senator have any idea?

Mr. COTTON. I do not recall. I recall the incident, and I know I supported him.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Well, the Senator certainly has the right, as a citizen, to vote as he pleases. But as I recall, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina voted against the President on a $700 million saving. I think we have to be consistent in this whole field, and let the ball bounce and fall where it may.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. COTTON. I thank the Senator for his very fine contribution.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I am ready to yield back my time and vote.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 2 minutes?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I want to reiterate again that under the Budget Control Act, the President is authorized by Congress to make rescission and deferral recommendations to Congress. He recommended 46 rescissions, equalling $1,535,762,000, all of which would go into effect within 45 legislative days unless Congress acts to the contrary.

December 19, 1974

At the same time, he recommended 130 deferrals, equalling $23,548,997,000, and these would go into effect unless Congress passes a resolution to the contrary.

These are item-by-item recommendations, which I think is more in keeping with our own feeling that the Congress should have a right to decide item by item where reductions or increases should be made.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the record vote analysis on vote No. 394, on the recent Government pay raise, be printed in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

RECORD VOTE ANALYSIS

[Vote No. 394]

GOVERNMENT PAY RAISE

Subject: Resolution disapproving the alternative plan for pay adjustments for Federal employees (S. Res. 394). Vote on agreeing to the resolution of disapproval.

ACTION: AGREED TO

Synopsis: Existing law (5 U.S.C. 5305(c)) provided that the President could submit an alternative pay plan to Congress if he believed an October 1 pay adjustment based on a comparison between private enterprise and Federal pay was inappropriate because of economic conditions. It also provided that the President's alternative plan would become effective unless either House of Congress adopted a resolution of disapproval within 30 calendar days of continuous session after the date on which the alternative plan was submitted.

The purpose of the pending resolution was to express the disapproval of the Senate with the alternative pay plan proposed by the President and received by the Senate on August 31, 1974. The President's alternative plan would postpone a pay adjustment for Federal statutory employees from October 1, 1974 to January 1, 1975.

A vote in favor of the resolution was to nullify the President's proposed postponement and Federal employees would receive a pay adjustment as provided by law on October 1, 1974.

A vote in opposition to the resolution was to agree to the postponement from October 1, 1974 to January 1, 1975.

Estimated cost: The difference between an October 1, 1974 increase and a January 1, 1975 increase would amount to $700 million (of which $400 million would be ascribed to the military and $300 million to Federal statutory employees).

Those favoring the resolution of disapproval contended:

All Senators shared the President's concern and determination to wage an all-out battle against inflation. However, to postpone this salary increase would be unjust and would be contrary to the comparability principle approved by Congress.

The purpose of the 1970 Federal Pay Comparability Act was to insure that Government workers would receive earnings comparable to those in the private sector. It was not a cost-of-living increase. Congress, as the only bargaining agent these Federal employees had left, had a moral responsibility to honor that obligation.

The comparability increase would make the pay of statutory (white-collar) employees comparable to that of the same kind of jobs in the private sector as of March 1974.

Action: The resolution of disapproval was agreed to.

Result: The result was announced—Yeas 64, Nays 35, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I have announced that I am ready to yield back my time and vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. HOLLINGS. One minute? I yielded 2, and I had 5.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I will yield the Senator a couple of minutes, Mr. President, and let us get moving.

Mr. HOLLINGS. And, mentioning the recent pay raise, when we voted against the President, I was proud of that vote. The executives in the private corporations had gotten raises averaging 22 percent, and the private sector employees had gotten a 10-percent raise, and we were merely trying to equalize it for the Federal employees.

How did the Senator from Arizona vote on the veterans' measure, when the President said "I veto this," which would have saved $7 or $8 hundred million?

We can make these cute little analogies, and we can say that we have to have the fortitude to meet the issues item by item, but just being realistic, life does not work that way. The country has been on an economic drunk for over 10 years.

I do not know how to get off a drunk except to go through a hangover. There will be some things that Government cannot solve. There are those problems. There will be pains. But I am convinced in my own mind that the one thing we should not do is give the drunk another drink, and that seems to be the proposal as we close out this session of Congress, with a $5-billion supplemental appropriation putting in more billions here and yonder.

Talk about the sanctity and the de-meaning of the Senate, and the responsibility that we have. Back again to what the President asked for, he asked again for the confirmation of the Vice President, he asked for public service employment, and he asked for a trade bill. We have given him those things. He asked for a budget cut, and he says, "Don't give me rhetoric, give me action."

As we close out, either today or tomorrow, this is the only action proposal or alternative. It has been well considered and deliberately conceived and worked out on both sides of the aisle, as an initiative very similar to the measure on which the rollcall was just introduced.

So we should stop and think a moment. We wonder about the President's decisions, and everything else. This is not going to start unemployment. It is a formula that is workable, and I would plead with the Members of the Senate, if we are really going to provide moneys in this Federal Government to take care of the added programs to start the economy moving ahead, unemployment compensation, and public service employment, to please put in this one last effort, this one last cut, which is deliberately done, which will not injure any Government program. The Government will still go on to the tune of $30 billion this year over last year.

I thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for yielding me this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

December 19, 1974

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, for another purpose, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Colorado.

DESIGNATION OF CERTAIN LANDS AS WILDERNESS

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 12884.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12884), to designate certain lands as wilderness as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert:

DESIGNATION OF WILDERNESS AREAS WITHIN THE NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE SYSTEM

SECTION 1. That in accordance with subsection (c) of section 3 of the Wilderness Act (78 Stat. 890, 892), the following lands are hereby designated as wilderness and, therefore, as components of the national wilderness preservation system:

(a) certain lands in the Chamisso National Wildlife Refuge, Alaska, which comprise approximately four hundred and fifty-five acres, which are depicted on a map entitled "Chamisso Wilderness Proposal", dated November 1969, and which shall be known as the Chamisso Wilderness;

(b) certain lands in the National Key Deer Refuge, Great White Heron National Wildlife Refuge, and the Key West National Wildlife Refuge, Florida, which comprise approximately four thousand seven hundred and forty acres, which are depicted on a map entitled "Florida Keys Wilderness—Proposed", dated August 1969, and which shall be known as the Florida Keys Wilderness;

(c) certain lands in the St. Marks Wildlife Refuge, Florida, which comprise approximately seventeen thousand seven hundred and forty-six acres, which are depicted on a map entitled "St. Marks Wilderness Proposal—Florida", dated September 1971, revised December 1971, and which shall be known as the St. Marks Wilderness;

(d) certain lands in the Blackbeard Island National Wildlife Refuge, Georgia, which comprise approximately three thousand acres, which are depicted on a map entitled "Blackbeard Island Wilderness—Proposed", dated December 1971, and which shall be known as the "Blackbeard Island Wilderness";

(e) certain lands in the Wolf Island National Wildlife Refuge, Georgia, which comprise approximately five thousand one hundred and twenty-six acres, which are depicted on a map entitled "Wolf Island Wilderness Proposal", dated March 1971, revised March 1973, further revised March 1974, and which shall be known as the Wolf Island Wilderness;

(f) certain lands in the Breton National Wildlife Refuge, Louisiana, which comprise approximately five thousand acres, which are depicted on a map entitled "Breton Wilderness—Proposed", dated December 1970, revised January 1974, and which shall be known as the Breton Wilderness;

(g) certain lands in the Moosehorn National Wildlife Refuge, Maine, which comprise approximately four thousand seven hundred and nineteen acres and which are depicted on a map entitled "Moosehorn Wilderness (Baring Unit)—Proposed", dated September 1971, revised December 1971, further revised September 1974, and which shall be known as the Moosehorn Wilderness (Baring Unit);

(h) certain lands in the Brigantine National Wildlife Refuge, New Jersey, which comprise approximately six thousand six hundred and three acres, which are depicted on the map entitled "Brigantine Wilderness—Proposed", dated August 1971, revised September 1974, and which shall be known as the Brigantine Wilderness;

(i) certain lands in the Bosque del Apache National Wildlife Refuge, New Mexico, which comprise approximately thirty thousand eight hundred and fifty acres, which are depicted on a map entitled "Bosque del Apache Wilderness—Proposed", dated July 1971, revised September 1974, and which shall be known as Bosque del Apache Wilderness;

(j) certain lands in the Chase Lake National Wildlife Refuge, North Dakota, which comprise approximately four thousand one hundred and fifty-five acres, which are depicted on the map entitled "Chase Lake Wilderness—Proposed", dated September 1971, and which shall be known as the Chase Lake Wilderness;

(k) certain lands in the Lostwood National Wildlife Refuge, North Dakota, which comprise approximately five thousand five hundred and seventy-seven acres, which are depicted on a map entitled "Lostwood Wilderness Proposal", dated August 1971, and which shall be known as the Lostwood Wilderness;

(l) all lands in the West Sister Island National Wildlife Refuge, Ohio, which comprise approximately eighty-five acres, which are depicted on a map entitled "Proposed West Sister Island Wilderness", dated October 1969, and which shall be known as the West Sister Island Wilderness; and

(m) certain lands in the Cape Romain National Wildlife Refuge, South Carolina, which comprise approximately twenty-eight thousand acres, which are depicted on a map entitled "Cape Romain Wilderness Proposal", dated January 1971, and which shall be known as the Cape Romain Wilderness.

DESIGNATION OF WILDERNESS AREAS WITHIN THE NATIONAL FOREST SYSTEM

SEC. 2. In accordance with subsection 3(b) of the Wilderness Act (78 Stat. 891; 16 U.S.C. 1132) the following areas are hereby designated as wilderness and, therefore, as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System:

(a) The area in the Cleveland National Forest in California classified as the Agua Tibia Primitive Area, with deletions therefrom, which area comprises approximately sixteen thousand nine hundred and seventy-one acres, is generally depicted on a map entitled "Agua Tibia Wilderness—Proposed", dated July 1974, and shall be known as the Agua Tibia Wilderness.

(b) The area in the Stanislaus National Forest in California classified as the Emigrant Basin Primitive Area, with additions thereto and deletions therefrom, which area comprises approximately one hundred and six thousand nine hundred and ten acres, is generally depicted on a map entitled "Emigrant Wilderness—Proposed, 1970" on file in the Office of the Chief, Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, and shall be known as the Emigrant Wilderness. The area commonly called the Cherry Creek exclusion, depicted on such map as Exclusion 2 and comprising approximately six thousand and forty-two acres, shall, in accordance with the provisions of subsection 3(d) of the Wilderness Act, be reviewed by the Secretary of Agriculture as to its suitability or nonsuitability for preservation as wilderness in conjunction with his review of the potential addition to the Hoover Wilderness in Toiyabe National Forest. The recommendations of the President to the Congress on the potential addition to the Hoover Wilderness shall be accompanied by the President's recommendations on the Cherry Creek exclusion. The previous classification of the Emigrant Basin Primitive Area is hereby abolished with the exception of said Exclusion 2.

(c) The area classified as the San Juan and Upper Rio Grande Primitive Areas, with the proposed additions thereto and deletions therefrom, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Weminuche Wilderness—Proposed", dated December 1974, which is on file and available for public inspection in the office of the Chief, Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, is hereby designated as the Weminuche Wilderness within and as part of the Rio Grande and San Juan National Forests comprising an area of approximately four hundred five thousand thirty-one acres.

(d) The area in the Flathead National Forest in Montana classified as the Mission Mountains Primitive Area, with an addition thereto, which area comprises approximately seventy-five thousand five hundred and eighty-eight acres, is depicted on a map entitled "Mission Mountains Wilderness Area—Proposed", dated July 1974, and shall be known as the Mission Mountains Wilderness.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 3. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, all primitive area classifications of areas herein designated wilderness are hereby abolished.

SEC. 4. As soon as practicable after this Act takes effect, a map and a legal description of each wilderness area shall be filed with the Interior and Insular Affairs Committees of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives, and such description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act: Provided, however, That correction of clerical and typographical errors in such legal description and map may be made.

SEC. 5. Wilderness areas designated by this Act shall be administered in accordance with the provisions of the Wilderness Act governing areas designated by that Act as wilderness areas, except that any reference in such provisions to the effective date of the Wilderness Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the effective date of this Act, and any references to the Secretary of Agriculture shall be deemed to be a reference to the Secretary who has administrative jurisdiction over the area.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, once again the Senate is to consider H.R. 12884. On May 6, 1974, the House first passed the measure. It would have designated 12 national wildlife refuge wildernesses and 3 national forest wildernesses. The Senate amendment, passed on August 1, would have designated six national forest wildernesses. This was followed by S. 600, passed by the Senate, on November 22, 1974, which would have designated 14 national wildlife refuge wildernesses.

Mr. President, H.R. 12884, in the form in which it is before this body today, would designate 17 new components of the National Wilderness Preservation System. Thirteen of these new wilderness areas are situated within national wildlife refuges in 10 States ranging from Alaska to Florida and from Maine to New Mexico. Four areas are within national forests in three States: California, Colorado, and Montana.

The total acreage to be included in the Wilderness System would be 720,456 acres, of which 587,529 acres are within national forests and 132,927 acres within wildlife refuges.

Mr. President, I am happy to say that the House in passing H.R. 12884 has agreed with this body's preference for the designation of larger areas for the Brigantine Wilderness in New Jersey, the Wolf Island Wilderness in Georgia, and the Moosehorn Wilderness in Maine, as set forth in S. 600, and the Mission Mountain Wilderness in Montana and Agua Tibia Wilderness in California, as set forth in the Senate amendment to H.R. 12884. The House has also accepted two areas which were not in H.R. 12884 as it first passed the House but were in the Senate amendment: Blackbeard Island Wilderness in Georgia and the Lostwood Wilderness in North Dakota.

December 19, 1974

Although I am indeed proud of our efforts on behalf of wilderness this Congress and am pleased to report these efforts to my colleagues, I must also add a strong caveat and address a particular message to the citizens of Colorado. Over half of the total acreage of additional wilderness designated by H.R. 12884, 405,031 of the 720,927 acres, is within Colorado. Yet, Mr. President, this is far less than the 799,619 acres of Colorado Wilderness which would have been designated by the Senate amendment to H.R. 12884. The Senate amendment would have created three Colorado wildernesses: Eagle's Nest, Flat Tops, and Weminuche. These wildernesses were contained in bills which were introduced by both Colorado Senators, were the subject of field hearings in Colorado, and were passed by the Senate twice, both as separate measures and as part of the Senate amendment to H.R. 12884.

Deleted from H.R. 12884 which we will vote on today are the provisions designating the Flat Tops and Eagle's Nest Wilderness. Furthermore, the Weminuche Wilderness to be designated by the bill is smaller by more than 30,000 acres than the one I have proposed and which the Senate has twice supported. The reduction in the acreage of my Weminuche proposal is unfortunate, but the opportunity to establish a magnificent 405,031-acre Weminuche Wilderness should not be lost. I am, therefore, willing to accept the position of the House on Weminuche. I hasten to add, however, that I will continue to fight vigorously for the designation of the Flat Tops and Eagle's Nest Wildernesses.

Fortunately, I believe that the fate of these two wildernesses is not sealed by any action we may take on H.R. 12884.

Yesterday, I talked with my counterpart, the chairman of the House Subcommittee on Public Lands, Mr. MELCHER. He fully agrees with me that it is high time that the Congress act upon the Eagle's Nest and Flat Tops Wilderness proposals. He has assured me that his subcommittee will take up the two proposals early next year. I, in turn, hope and expect that we in the Senate can send my Flat Tops and Eagle's Nest proposals to the House by early next summer.

Mr. President, in light of, first, the assurances of my colleague in the House concerning early action next Congress on the two major wilderness proposals approved by the Senate and deleted from H.R. 12884, and, second, the inclusion in this version of H.R. 12884 of the larger areas proposed in the Senate amendment, I recommend the bill to my colleagues and ask that they vote in its favor.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I want to note for the record that this particular measure was cleared on this side of the aisle, and particularly with Senator FANNIN, the ranking Republican member of the committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). What is the will of the Senate? Under the unanimous-consent agreement, there are to be no votes before 12:30.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for the remaining 2 minutes until 12:30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CALL OF CERTAIN ITEMS ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order Nos. 1269, 1286, and 1298 through 1304.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION TO APPOINT CERTAIN RESERVES AND TEMPORARY OFFICERS TO ACTIVE LIST OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

The bill (H.R. 8591) to authorize the President to appoint to the active list of the Navy and Marine Corps certain Reserves and temporary officers, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE ACT

The bill (S. 4242) to amend the Rail Passenger Service Act, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Section 303(d) of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 543(d)) is amended by inserting immediately after the third sentence the following: "This limitation upon compensation shall not apply, however, in the event the Board determines with respect to the position of Chief Executive Officer that a higher level of compensation is necessary and is consistent with the general level of compensation paid officers of railroads in positions of comparable responsibilities, but in no event shall such compensation exceed $85,000 per annum."

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 126) favoring the suspension of deportation of Carlos Marquez de la Plata-Montalvo, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Congress favors the suspension of deportation in the case of the alien hereinafter named, in which case the Attorney General has suspended deportation pursuant to the provisions of section 244(a)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, as amended (66 Stat. 214; 8 U.S.C. 1254):

A15 704 486 Plata-Montalvo, Carlos Marquez de la Plata-Montalvo.

DINO MENDOZA PASCUA

The bill (S. 1045) for the relief of Dino Mendoza Pascua, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Dino Mendoza Pascua may be classified as a child within the meaning of section 101(b)(1)(F) of such Act upon approval of a petition filed in his behalf by Staff Sergeant and Mrs. Anthony Garcia, citizens of the United States, pursuant to section 204 of such Act. The natural brothers and sisters of the said Dino Mendoza Pascua shall not, by virtue of such relationship, be accorded any right, privilege, or status under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

MR. JOSELITO S. ARCA AND DR. CORAZON I. ARCA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2644) for the relief of Mr. Joselito S. Arca and Dr. Corazon I. Arca, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 1, at the end of line 7, strike out "visa fee" and insert "visa fees", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Mr. Joselito S. Arca and Doctor Corazon I. Arca shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this Act upon payment of the required visa fees. Upon the granting of permanent residence of such aliens as provided for in this Act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper officer to reduce by two numbers, during the current fiscal year or the fiscal year next following, the total number of immigrant visas and conditional entries which are made available to natives of the country of the aliens' birth under paragraph (1) through (8) of section 203(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

The amendment was agreed to. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABRAM AGUIRRE-GONZALEZ AND HILARIO AGUIRRE-MARTINEZ

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3103) for the relief of Abram Aguirre-Gonzalez and Hilario Aguirre-Martinez, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 1, in line 11, strike out "from the appropriate quota or quotas for the first year that such quota or quotas are available" and insert "from the total number of immigrant admissions authorized pursuant to the provisions of section 21(e) of the act of October 3, 1965", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Abram Aguirre-Gonzalez and Hilario Aguirre-Martinez shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this Act, upon payment of the required visa fees. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such aliens as provided for in this Act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct the required numbers from the total number of immigrant admissions authorized pursuant to the provisions of section 21(e) of the Act of October 3, 1965.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISS ROSARIO Y. QUIJANO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3248) for the relief of Miss Rosario Y. Quijano, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, in the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Miss Rosario Y. Quijano, Walter York Quijano, Ramon York Quijano, Tarcisus York Quijano, Denis York Quijano, and Paul York Quijano shall be held and considered to be entitled to preference status within the purview of section 203(a)(1) of that Act, and the provisions of section 204 of such Act shall not be applicable in these cases.

Sec. 2. The provisions of section 212(e) of the Immigration and Nationality Act shall not be applicable in the case of Walter York Quijano.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Miss Rosario Y. Quijano, Walter York Quijano, Ramon York Quijano, Tarcisus York Quijano, Denis York Quijano, and Paul York Quijano."

CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN ITEMS ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Nos. 1305, 1307, 1311, 1315, and 1316.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DR. GUSTAVO SCIOVILLE

The bill (S. 3280) for the relief of Dr. Gustavo Scioville, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Doctor Gustavo Scioville shall be considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of November 4, 1954, and the periods of time he has resided in the United States since that date shall be considered to meet the continuous residence and physical presence requirements of section 316 of such Act.

NESTOR MANUEL LARA-OTOYA

The bill (S. 3940) for the relief of Nestor Manuel Lara-Otoya was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Nestor Manuel Lara-Otoya shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this Act, upon payment of the required visa fee. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such alien as provided for in this Act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper officer to deduct one number from the total number of immigrant admissions authorized pursuant to the provisions of section 21(e) of the Act of October 3, 1965.

NICOLA LOMUSCIO

The bill (H.R. 7684) for the relief of Nicola Lomuscio was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT M. JOHNSTON

The bill (S. 2298) for the relief of Robert M. Johnston, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That service performed by Robert M. Johnston of Annapolis, Maryland, from July 1, 1946, through September 30, 1956, as a member of the civilian faculty of the United States Naval Academy, shall be included as creditable service for purposes of subchapter III of chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code (relating to civil service retirement annuities), if, within one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the said Robert M. Johnston deposits a sum equal to so much of the repurchase price of his annuity policy carried as required by the Act of January 16, 1936 (49 Stat. 1092), as amended, as is based on the monthly allotments which were registered with the Navy Allotment Office toward the purchase of that annuity. Such deposit shall be in lieu of the deposit provided under section 8834(c) of such title 5.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of the Navy shall certify to the Civil Service Commission the amount of the repurchase price of the annuity referred to in the first section of this Act. The Civil Service Commission shall provide the said Robert M. Johnston such information as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

CPL. PAUL C. AMEDEO, USMC

The bill (H.R. 1715) for the relief of Cpl. Paul C. Amedeo, U.S. Marine Corps Reserve, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1975

The Senate continued with the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1178) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1975, and for other purposes.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina and others, to impose a reduction of $3.2 billion on Federal expenditures for the current fiscal year.

Let me first state that I agree with the need to reduce Federal expenditures. Throughout the 93d Congress I have supported efforts by the appropriations subcommittees on which I serve to make such reductions. For example, in the defense budget nearly $5 billion was eliminated from the budget request for 1975. The agriculture-environmental and consumer protection appropriations bill was reduced by $53 million from a measure vetoed earlier by the President. But these reductions were made carefully and with great precision by the various appropriations subcommittees and the full appropriations committee.

The Hollings amendment now attempts to dissolve these carefully fashioned reductions. The chart attached to the amendment circulated by the Senator from South Carolina notes that approximately $4.47 billion in reductions was made by congressional action this year. These reductions reflect long hours of deliberation by members of the several appropriations subcommittees and agreement by the Senate when these bills were brought to the floor. I do not believe that this delicate system should be disturbed at this late hour by the pending amendment.

Mr. President, in addition to action by appropriations committees there are now in effect procedures pursuant to the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974. We are now operating under the provisions of this law. The President has submitted, through a series of messages, his recommendations for the rescission and deferral of a number of items in the 1975 budget. The Senate Budget Committee, on which I serve, has given considerable attention to these procedures as has the counterpart committee in the House. Despite some difficulties over jurisdiction, the procedures of the Budget and Impoundment Control Act are serving to make further reductions in Federal expenditures. But these reductions are being made under careful committee consideration and pursuant to the procedures approved by the Congress.

Mr. President, with these considerations in mind, I would urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment. A vote against this amendment is not a vote for increased Federal spending, but for the well-established and demonstrably effective congressional appropriations process and in support of the recently passed budget and impoundment control measures. I urge its defeat.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am today cosponsoring legislation to cut Federal spending by $3.2 billion and urging the Congress to use these funds to finance a tax reduction for the American taxpayer.

The amendment I am cosponsoring would reduce the budget authority of the various departments and agencies by requiring a 2-percent reduction in personnel spending and a 10-percent reduction in spending for contract services, supplies, and grants.

The tax reduction proposal I am calling for is one I introduced last May to provide an inflation adjustment in the standard and personal exemption deductions. This legislation will reduce the personal income tax by the rate of inflation, thereby providing at least partial relief from today's economic problems. It would insure that a person would no longer be forced to pay more taxes simply because inflation has pushed him or her into a higher tax bracket. For the elderly person on a fixed income, the proposal would result in a tax deduction as long as inflation continues.

Under the provisions of my legislation, this year's inflation rate of 12.2 percent, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, would require a reduction in personal income taxes of approximately $4.2 billion. It would also, of course, reduce the amount of revenue collected by the Government. Therefore, it is imperative to combine this proposal with a reduction in Federal spending. This reduction would mean a tax cut of $90 for a married couple with 2 children with an income of $6,000 or $108 for such a family with an income of $10,800.

In the last 5 years alone, the Federal Government has spent nearly $100 billion more than it has taken in. The inflationary consequences of this deficit spending is obvious, and the recessionary aspects of high interest rates and high prices caused by the unavailability of funds in the private markets are now also becoming painfully apparent.

The tight money situation caused by massive Government borrowing to cover the budget deficits has made consumer loans for homes, automobiles, and appliances virtually unavailable. And because consumers cannot purchase these items, these industries have come to a standstill, resulting in growing unemployment.

The two spending and tax measures, if enacted, would provide a one-two punch on inflation and recession. The cut in Federal spending would decrease the inflationary pressures of deficit financing and ease the tight money situation, while the tax reduction would increase consumer income, stimulate economic growth, and create new jobs.

When the Government increases spending, it is spending the taxpayers' dollars. A combined cut in Federal spending and Federal taxes would allow the taxpayer, rather than the Government, to spend his own money.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it would be a mistake for us to adjourn this Congress without making a final serious effort to combat inflation. We owe it to ourselves, to our constituents, and to our country.

The best method we have for accomplishing this is to insist upon constructive and meaningful reductions in Federal spending. The amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) would do just that, and I am pleased to join in its cosponsorship and support.

This amendment will consummate in a very appropriate manner the movement which we began last summer to say "no"—wherever possible and reasonable—to unnecessary and excessive Government outlays. We decided at that time to take advantage of any opportunity which arose to make "across the board" cuts that would have every person and every program making sacrifices for the good of our economy, and this is one of those occasions.

The action contemplated by the proposal before us is neither unfair nor unfeasible. It would simply require an immediate "formula basis" approach to reducing the anticipated 1975 deficit by $3.2 billion.

By affecting every department and every agency, this method of imposing such a reduction represents the most evenhanded and realistic vehicle available for carrying out our budgetary responsibilities. The time to demonstrate a commitment to relieving our inflation-plagued economy is now, and I urge each of my colleagues to accept the challenge that faces us.

It is always easier to put off a decision which may be painful, and may demand a little courage in the face of charges that we are asking too much. But, Mr. President, we are not singling out any particular area with this amendment; we are asking only that a "share the burden" philosophy be implemented.

This is the kind of attitude we are going to have to display in order to escape from our current economic dilemma, and I just hope there are enough of us here today who are willing to recognize that fact. If so, I think we will be paving the way for the spirit of conscientious belt-tightening which will enable us to succeed in our inflation-fighting goals during the new year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS).

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will please call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, let us have order so that we can hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let us have decorum, please.

The legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, let us have order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please be in order.

The legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, we cannot hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let us have order, please.

The legislative clerk resumed and concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) is necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Florida (Mr. GURNEY), and the Senator from Kansas (Mr. PEARSON) are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 63, as follows:

NOT VOTING—6

Baker	Bentsen	Mansfield
Bennett	Gurney	Parson

So Mr. HOLLINGS' amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, I move to table that motion.

The motion to table was agreed to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. JAVITS. Will the Senator yield 2 minutes?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, one of the items in the continuing appropriation—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. We must have order in the Senate.

The Senator may resume.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the Chair for getting an extraordinary degree of quiet.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. It will not last long. The Senator better take advantage of it.

December 19, 1974

Mr. JAVITS. I will, and I will be very brief.

Mr. President, the continuing resolution has one item on which I wish to address the Senate. I think they will appreciate my particularly addressing myself to this matter.

It is assistance to Palestinian refugees, $10 million.

I would especially call the attention of the Senate to the statement made in behalf of this rather small appropriation. In rather modest language, and, indeed, I think, great understatement, the committee calls attention to the seeming hopelessness as well as danger of this situation which has festered for so long.

I would say to the Senate within the deliberations of the Foreign Relations Committee, in which this authorization was given, I raised in the strongest way the need for the most careful inquiry into this situation, which is, on the one hand, torn between people who are allegedly neglected over the years, and, as the committee says, the backwater of international affairs, and these camps as a focal point for terrorism, danger, indeed wars, as happened in Jordan in that area of the world which is so very dangerous to the whole world and in such need of world attention.

I would simply like to take this opportunity to invite the attention of Senators to that item, and to the fact that the Foreign Relations Committee intends, from the expressions around the table when the issue was raised, to very carefully examine into it, and to urge those who go into that area—

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

Mr. JAVITS (continuing). And to urge those who go into that area in the coming few weeks that we will have in recess to have this in the back of their minds, with a view toward focusing the attention of the Senate, which I am confident will have some recommendations from the Foreign Relations Committee, on what could be a handle on this very trying and very dangerous situation in the Middle East, or could, on the other hand, be an exacerbating factor, as we see from the dreadful performance of the United Nations inviting a confessed terrorist to address it.

I lay that before the Senate because it is stated in the report of the Committee.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise to support the item in the continuing resolution providing $10 million for Portugal and African States. This is part of the $25 million—80 percent in loans and 20 percent in grants—recently authorized for this purpose by the Congress, on the basis of an amendment I introduced.

This appropriation supplements the assistance reprogrammed by the administration last week.

When the new Congress convenes in January I will strongly support appropriation of the $15 million balance in the congressional authorization.

Mr. President, following my trip to Portugal last month, I returned deeply impressed by the need for the United States to support the democratic experiment taking place in that country. The government in Lisbon has ended 48 years of repressive rule; and is ending 500 years of colonial rule in Africa.

What we are doing today is tangible support for these two efforts. It puts the United States firmly on record in support of the ideals and actions that many of us in this Chamber long urged in regard to Portugal. It should provide the basis for a new and long-lasting relationship with that country, and with the five African States now gaining independence. Now we will look to Lisbon, in the fervent hope that the Portuguese democratic experiment will succeed, and that decolonization will proceed apace—heralding a new day for these tens of millions of people.

Mr. President, I want to commend the many Members of the Senate who worked diligently to see that this aid to Portugal and the African states could be made available in a timely fashion. I particularly appreciate, today, the efforts of Senator INOUYE, in providing for funds in this continuing resolution. This quality of statesmanship deserves our respect.

Mr. MCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do both sides yield back the remainder of their time?

Mr. MCLELLAN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

INCLUSION OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE NATIONAL WILDERNESS PRESERVATION SYSTEM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, now that all time has been yielded back and a rollcall vote is imminent, on behalf of Mr. AIKEN and Mr. HASKELL I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House on S. 3433, and that there be a time limit, thereon of not to exceed 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3433) to further the purposes of the Wilderness Act by designating certain acquired lands for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System, to provide for study of certain additional lands for such inclusion, and for other purposes as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

STATEMENT OF FINDINGS AND POLICY

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—
(1) in the more populous eastern half of the United States there is an urgent need to identify, study, designate, and preserve areas for addition to the National Wilderness Preservation System;

(2) in recognition of this urgent need, certain areas in the national forest system in the eastern half of the United States were designated by the Congress as wilderness in the Wilderness Act (78 Stat. 890); certain areas in the national wildlife refuge system in the eastern half of the United States have been designated by the Congress as wilderness or recommended by the President for such designation, and certain areas in the national park system in the eastern half of the United States have been recommended by the President for designation as wilderness; and

(3) additional areas of wilderness in the more populous eastern half of the United States are increasingly threatened by the pressures of a growing and more mobile population, large-scale industrial and economic growth, and development and uses inconsistent with the protection, maintenance, and enhancement of the areas' wilderness character.

(b) Therefore, the Congress finds and declares that it is in the national interest that these and similar areas in the eastern half of the United States be promptly designated as wilderness within the National Wilderness Preservation System, in order to preserve such areas as an enduring resource of wilderness which shall be managed to promote and perpetuate the wilderness character of the land and its specific values of solitude, physical and mental challenge, scientific study, inspiration, and primitive recreation for the benefit of all of the American people of present and future generations.

DESIGNATION OF WILDERNESS AREAS

SEC. 3. (a) In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act, the following lands (hereinafter in this Act referred to as "wilderness areas"), as generally depicted on maps appropriately referenced, dated April 1974, are hereby designated as wilderness and, therefore, as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System—

(1) certain lands in the Bankhead National Forest, Alabama, which comprise about twelve thousand acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Sipsey Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Sipsey Wilderness;

(2) certain lands in the Ouachita National Forest, Arkansas, which comprise about fourteen thousand four hundred and thirty-three acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Caney Creek Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Caney Creek Wilderness;

(3) certain lands in the Ozark National Forest, Arkansas, which comprise about ten thousand five hundred and ninety acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Upper Buffalo Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Upper Buffalo Wilderness;

(4) certain lands in the Appalachian National Forest, Florida, which comprise about twenty-two thousand acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Bradwell Bay Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Bradwell Bay Wilderness;

(5) certain lands in the Daniel Boone National Forest, Kentucky, which comprise about five thousand five hundred acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Beaver Creek Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Beaver Creek Wilderness;

(6) certain lands in the White Mountain National Forest, New Hampshire, which comprise about twenty thousand three hundred and eighty acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Presidential Range-Dry River Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Presidential Range-Dry River Wilderness;

(7) certain lands in the Nantahala and Cherokee National Forest, North Carolina and Tennessee, which comprise about fifteen thousand acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Joyce Kilmer-Slickrock Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Joyce Kilmer-Slickrock Wilderness;

(8) certain lands in the Sumter, Nantahala, and Chattahoochee National Forests

December 19, 1974

in South Carolina, North Carolina, and Georgia, which comprise about three thousand six hundred acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Ellicott Rock Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as Ellicott Rock Wilderness;

(9) certain lands in the Cherokee National Forest, Tennessee, which comprise about two thousand five hundred and seventy acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Gee Creek Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Gee Creek Wilderness;

(10) certain lands in the Green Mountain National Forest, Vermont, which comprise about six thousand five hundred acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Bristol Cliffs Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Bristol Cliffs Wilderness;

(11) certain lands in the Green Mountain National Forest, Vermont, which comprise about fourteen thousand three hundred acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Lye Brook Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Lye Brook Wilderness;

(12) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise about eight thousand eight hundred acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "James River Face Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the James River Face Wilderness;

(13) certain lands in the Monongahela National Forest, West Virginia, which comprise about ten thousand two hundred and fifteen acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Dolly Sods Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Dolly Sods Wilderness;

(14) certain lands in the Monongahela National Forest, West Virginia, which comprise about twenty thousand acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Otter Creek Wilderness Study Area", and shall be known as the Otter Creek Wilderness; and

(15) certain lands in the Chequamegon National Forest, Wisconsin, which comprise about six thousand six hundred acres, are generally depicted on a map entitled "Rainbow Lake Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Rainbow Lake Wilderness.

(b) In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act, the following lands (hereinafter referred to as "wilderness areas"), as generally depicted on maps appropriately referenced, dated April 1973, are hereby designated as wilderness and, therefore, as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System: certain lands in the Chattahoochee and Cherokee National Forests, Georgia and Tennessee, which comprise about thirty-four thousand five hundred acres, are generally depicted on a map dated April 1973, entitled "Cohutta Wilderness Area—Proposed", and shall be known as the Cohutta Wilderness.

DESIGNATION OF WILDERNESS STUDY AREA

SEC. 4. (a) In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act and in accordance with the provisions of subsection 3(d) of that Act, the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") shall review, as to its suitability or nonsuitability for preservation as wilderness, each area designated by or pursuant to subsection (b) of this section and report his findings to the President. The President shall advise the United States Senate and House of Representatives of his recommendations with respect to the designation as wilderness of each such area on which the review has been completed.

(b) Areas to be reviewed pursuant to this section (hereinafter referred to as "wilderness study areas"), as generally depicted on maps appropriately referenced, dated April 1974, include—

(1) certain lands in the Ouachita National Forest, Arkansas, which comprise approximately five thousand seven hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Belle Starr Cave Wilderness Study Area";

(2) certain lands in the Ouachita National Forest, Arkansas, which comprise approximately five thousand five hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Dry Creek Wilderness Study Area";

(3) certain lands in the Ozark National Forest, Arkansas, which comprise approximately two thousand one hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Richland Creek Wilderness Study Area";

(4) certain lands in the Appalachian National Forest, Florida, which comprise approximately one thousand one hundred acres and are generally depicted as the "Sopchoppy River Wilderness Study Area" on a map entitled "Bradwell Bay Wilderness Area—Proposed";

(5) certain lands in the Hiawatha National Forest, Michigan, which comprise approximately five thousand four hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Rock River Canyon Wilderness Study Area";

(6) certain lands in the Ottawa National Forest, Michigan, which comprise approximately thirteen thousand two hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Sturgeon River Wilderness Study Area";

(7) certain lands in the Pisgah National Forest, North Carolina, which comprise approximately one thousand one hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Craggy Mountain Wilderness Study Area";

(8) certain lands in the Francis Marion National Forest, South Carolina, which comprise approximately one thousand five hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Wambaw Swamp Wilderness Study Area";

(9) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately four thousand acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Mill Creek Wilderness Study Area";

(10) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately eight thousand four hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Mountain Lake Wilderness Study Area";

(11) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately five thousand acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Peters Mountain Wilderness Study Area";

(12) certain lands in the George Washington National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately six thousand seven hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Ramsey's Draft Wilderness Study Area";

(13) certain lands in the Chequamegon National Forest, Wisconsin, which comprise approximately six thousand three hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Flynn Lake Wilderness Study Area";

(14) certain lands in the Chequamegon National Forest, Wisconsin, which comprise approximately four thousand two hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Round Lake Wilderness Study Area";

(15) certain lands in the Monongahela National Forest, West Virginia, which comprise approximately thirty-six thousand three hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Cranberry Wilderness Study Area";

(16) certain lands in the Cherokee National Forest, Tennessee, which comprise approximately four thousand five hundred acres and are generally depicted on a map entitled "Big Frog Wilderness Study Area"; and

(17) certain lands in the Cherokee National Forest, Tennessee, which comprise approximately fourteen thousand acres and are generally depicted as the "Citico Creek Area" on a map entitled "Joyce Kilmer-Slickrock Wilderness Area—Proposed";

(c) Reviews shall be completed and the President shall make his recommendations to Congress within five years after enactment of this Act.

(d) Congress may, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture or otherwise, designate as study areas, national forest system lands east of the 100th meridian other than those areas specified in subsection (b) of this section, for review as to suitability or nonsuitability for preservation as wilderness. Any such area subsequently designated as a wilderness study area after the enactment of this Act shall have its suitability or nonsuitability for preservation as wilderness submitted to Congress within ten years from the date of designation as a wilderness study area. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as limiting the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out management programs, development, and activities in accordance with the Multiple-Use, Sustained-Yield Act of 1960 (74 Stat. 215, 16 U.S.C. 528-531) within areas not designated for review in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(e) Nothing herein contained shall limit the President in proposing, as part of his recommendations to Congress, the alteration of existing boundaries of any wilderness study area or recommending the addition to any such area of any contiguous area predominantly of wilderness value. Any recommendation of the President to the effect that such area or portion thereof should be designated as "wilderness" shall become effective only if so provided by an Act of Congress.

FILING OF MAPS AND DESCRIPTIONS

SEC. 5. As soon as practicable after enactment of this Act, a map of each wilderness study area and a map and a legal description of each wilderness area shall be filed with the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs and on Agriculture of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and each such map and description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act: Provided, however, That correction of clerical and typographical errors in each such legal description and map may be made. Each such map and legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the office of the Chief of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture.

MANAGEMENT OF AREAS

SEC. 6. (a) Except as otherwise provided by this Act, the wilderness areas designated by or pursuant to this Act shall be managed by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the provisions of the Wilderness Act. The wilderness study area designated by or pursuant to this Act shall be managed by the Secretary of Agriculture so as to maintain their presently existing wilderness character and potential for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System until Congress has determined otherwise, except that such management requirement shall in no case extend beyond the expiration of the third succeeding Congress from the date of submission to the Congress of the President's recommendation concerning the particular study area.

(b) Within the sixteen wilderness areas designated by section 3 of this Act:

(1) the Secretary of Agriculture may acquire by purchase with donated or appropriated funds, by gift, exchange, condemnation, or otherwise, such lands, waters, or interests therein as he determines necessary or desirable for the purposes of this Act. All lands acquired under the provisions of this subsection shall become national forest lands and a part of the Wilderness System;

December 19, 1974

(2) in exercising the exchange authority granted by paragraph (1), the Secretary of Agriculture may accept title to non-Federal property for federally owned property of substantially equal value, or, if not of substantially equal value, the value shall be equalized by the payment of money to the grantor or to the Secretary as the circumstances require;

(3) the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to condemn any private land or interest therein within any wilderness area designated by or pursuant to this Act shall not be invoked so long as the owner or owners of such land or interest holds and uses it in the same manner and for those purposes for which such land or interest was held on the date of the designation of the wilderness area: Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture may acquire such land or interest without consent of the owner or owners whenever he finds such use to be incompatible with the management of such area as wilderness and the owner or owners manifest unwillingness, and subsequently fail, to promptly discontinue such incompatible use;

(4) at least sixty days prior to any transfer by exchange, sale, or otherwise (except by bequest) of such lands, or interests therein described in paragraph (3) of this subsection, the owner or owners of such lands or interests therein shall provide notice of such transfer to the supervisor of the national forest concerned, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may promulgate;

(5) at least sixty days prior to any change in the use of such lands or interests therein described in paragraph (3) of this subsection which will result in any significant new construction or disturbance of land surface or flora or will require the use of motor vehicles and other forms of mechanized transport or motorized equipment (except as otherwise authorized by law for ingress or egress or for existing agricultural activities begun before the date of the designation other than timber cutting), the owner or owners of such lands or interests therein shall provide notice of such change in use to the supervisor of the national forest within which such lands are located, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may promulgate;

(6) for the purposes of paragraphs (7) and (8) of this subsection, the term "property" shall mean a detached, noncommercial residential dwelling, the construction of which was begun before the date of the designation of the wilderness area (hereinafter referred to as "dwelling"), or an existing agricultural activity begun before the date of the designation of the wilderness area, other than timber cutting (hereinafter referred to as "agricultural activity"), together with so much of the land on which the dwelling or agricultural activity is situated, such land being in the same ownership as the dwelling or agricultural activity, as the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine to be necessary for the enjoyment of the dwelling for the sole purpose of noncommercial residential use or for the agricultural activity, together with any structures accessory to the dwelling or agricultural activity which are situated on the land so designated;

(7) any owner or owners of property on the date of its acquisition by the Secretary of Agriculture may, as a condition of such acquisition, retain for themselves and their successors or assigns a right of use and occupancy of the property for such noncommercial residential purpose or agricultural activity for twenty-five years, or, in lieu thereof, for a term ending at the death of the owner or his spouse, whichever is later. The owner shall elect the term to be reserved. The Secretary of Agriculture shall pay to the owner the fair market value of the property on the date of such acquisition less the fair market value on such date of the right retained by the owner: Provided, That whenever an owner of property elects to retain a right of use and occupancy as provided for in this section, such owner shall be deemed to have waived any benefits or rights accruing under sections 203, 204, 205, and 206 of the Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act of 1970 (84 Stat. 1894), and for the purposes of those sections such owner shall not be considered a displaced person as defined in section 101(6) of that Act; and

(8) a right of use and occupancy retained or enjoyed pursuant to paragraph (7) of this subsection may be terminated with respect to the entire property by the Secretary of Agriculture upon his determination that the property or any portion thereof has ceased to be used for such noncommercial residential purpose or agricultural activity and upon tender to the holder of a right an amount equal to the fair market value as of the date of tender of that portion of the right which remains unexpired on the date of termination.

TRANSFER OF FEDERAL PROPERTY

SEC. 7. The head of any Federal department or agency having jurisdiction over any lands or interests in lands within the boundaries of wilderness areas and wilderness study areas designated by or pursuant to this Act is authorized to transfer to the Secretary jurisdiction over such lands for administration in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

APPLICABILITY

SEC. 8. Unless otherwise provided by any other Act the provisions of this Act shall only apply to National Forest areas east of the 100th meridian.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 9. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated an amount not to exceed $5,000,000 for the acquisition by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise of lands, waters, or interests therein located in areas designated as wilderness pursuant to section 3 of this Act and an amount not to exceed $1,700,000 for the purpose of conducting a review of wilderness study areas designated by section 4 of this Act.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, this bill, S. 3433, is the result of cooperation between the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. The bill passed the Senate unanimously last May, and went to the House. It has been cut down somewhat by the House in both the number of instant wilderness areas and the wilderness study areas. The legislation is very important because it insures that people in the eastern part of the United States will have the opportunity to enjoy wilderness areas in the national forests.

I believe we should accept the House proposal of an amendment, and I so move.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I would concur with the distinguished—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please come to order.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I concur with the distinguished Senator from Vermont that we should accept the House amendments and concur.

Briefly, I would like to say to the distinguished Senator that it is due to the foresight of the Senator from Vermont and his persistence that the United States will now be providing for those citizens in the East the same wilderness experience that those of us from the western part of the country have enjoyed heretofore.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, we have before us today the eastern wilderness areas bill as passed this week by the House of Representatives. Despite some shortcomings in comparison with the bill which this body passed on May 31, it is nevertheless a sound bill and worthy of being enacted into law. It would place 16 areas in the National Wilderness Preservation System and would establish 17 study areas for further review as to their wilderness qualities—all 33 areas being on national forests located east of the 100th meridian, that is, east of the foothills of the Rocky Mountains.

Many members of this body and both the Interior Committee and the Agriculture Committee have labored long and hard to bring to fruition an eastern wilderness areas bill which will enable the National Wilderness Preservation System to become a truly all-America system. Previously, areas in this system have been overwhelmingly located in the West. With this eastern wilderness areas bill we have a great opportunity to assure the protection and preservation of wilderness near to where the majority of the Nation's population lives, to make this vital resource more conveniently available to the American people. I urge a favorable vote by the Senate today on the eastern wilderness areas bill—just as the Senate previously voted favorably on its own version of this legislation.

I would particularly call attention to the provision in this legislation concerning the management of wilderness study areas. The wording in the earlier Senate-passed version is intended to prevent the erection of any new buildings or other man-made structures, the bulldozing of new roads primitive or otherwise, any sort of timber cutting, the operation of motor vehicles—except in emergencies—and any such activities involving new works of man or motor vehicle use. Under the bill before us today the language itself has been clarified by an additional phrase so that the key sentence dealing with the management of study areas now reads:

The wilderness study areas designated by or pursuant to this act shall be managed by the Secretary of Agriculture so as to maintain their presently existing wilderness character and potential for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

I consider this additional phrasing requiring maintenance of the "presently existing wilderness character" to be most helpful for it makes clear that nothing is to be done by the managing agency or its agents which would in any way change any of the physical qualities of a study area nor permit uses which are contrary to those allowed in wilderness areas under the Wilderness Act.

At the same time this fuller language serves notice that there is no requirement to remove from a study area existing manmade structures which are incompatible with wilderness. It recognizes that study areas represent a temporary situation, temporary in the sense that such status is subject to change within a foreseeable time when the Congress will either determine to place all or a portion of the study area in the National Wilderness Preservation System or will return it to the status of ordinary national forest land. As a temporary situation, existing structures not conforming to wilderness standards may temporarily remain until the permanent status of the study area is determined by the Congress.

I also note with approval that subsection 4(d) permits the Secretary of Agriculture and others to recommend to the Congress additional study areas on eastern national forests for review as to suitability or unsuitability for preservation as wilderness. I am confident that the Congress will welcome this sort of cooperative action designed to assure a thorough and orderly review of the wilderness resource.

And now I wish to express to the gentleman from Vermont, Senator GEORGE AIKEN, my warmest thanks for the very active and constructive part he has played in developing this eastern wilderness areas legislation. We originally sponsored separate proposals but joined together in fighting for the cause of eastern wilderness and S. 3433, in particular. This is a cause which has been close to his heart. He has long looked across the Green Mountains of Vermont and cherished their natural qualities. He saw in this legislation the means of assuring that the choicest areas in those mountains shall not be despoiled through the works of man but that rather they shall be permanently protected and preserved in their pristine beauty and character. Two Vermont areas on the Green Mountain National Forest would be designated as wilderness by the bill before this body today. They are the 6,500-acre Bristol Cliff Wilderness and the 14,300-acre Lye Brook Wilderness. He further saw that the legislation which could protect such splendid lands in his home State could equally serve to protect similar natural treasures in all other States. Passage of this bill today is one of the finest and most fitting tributes which this body could pay to our beloved comrade GEORGE AIKEN, long dean of the U.S. Senate and now on the eve of his departure from this body in which he has been a distinguished Member so long and successfully.

Mr. President, there are 3 wilderness areas and 23 wilderness study areas in S. 3433, as it passed the Senate, which are missing from the bill we vote on today. I plan to ask the Senate Interior Committee, on which I serve as chairman, to give careful consideration to these additional areas early next Congress.

I urge the passage of this eastern wilderness areas bill.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to add my own remarks to those of the chairman in support of the House-passed version of S. 3433, the Eastern Wilderness Areas Act, now before this body to be voted upon.

This legislation has been studied, discussed, and debated during almost the entire 2 years of this 93d Congress. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Lands of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, I first held hearings on this legislation in February 1973. Field hearings were later held in Concord, N.H. and Roanoke, Va. S. 316 was reported by the full Interior Committee in December 1973. In January 1974 the Senate rereferred S. 316 to the Agriculture Committee. Additions were made to S. 316 by that committee, principally as amendments to the Wilderness Act, and was reported out in early May as S. 3433. On May 31, 1974, the Senate passed S. 3433, the joint work of the Interior and the Agriculture Committees, as the Eastern Wilderness Areas Act of 1974. We have since been waiting for the other body to act.

The House-passed version of S. 3433 is now before the Senate for its consideration. Regrettably a number of wilderness and study areas have been deleted from the Senate act. Also several of the provisions designed to strengthen the protection given to eastern wilderness areas and all the direct amendments to the Wilderness Act of 1964 are missing from the House-approved bill. I am disappointed at such deletions and, believing a number of them to be valuable and needed, I will consider seeking their enactment in new legislation in the next Congress.

Meanwhile, careful consideration of the amended S. 3433 now before us convinces me that the areas and the provisions contained in it are sound and should be enacted into law now; 16 areas located in 13 different States and totaling 207,000 acres would be placed in the National Wilderness Preservation System; 17 study areas located in 9 States and totaling 125,000 acres would be established with interim protection and for further study and recommendation to the Congress. This represents a strong beginning toward enlarging the wilderness system in the eastern national forests beyond the three small areas—totaling approximately 26,000 acres—placed in the system by passage of the original Wilderness Act.

This amended S. 3433 firmly establishes the principle that eastern national forests do have areas which qualify as wilderness under the definition in the Wilderness Act. With its provision for study areas, it sets up a careful, orderly means for the review of proposed new wilderness areas in those cases where adequate information as to their suitability for wilderness designation is not immediately available. It authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture and others to recommend to the Congress new study areas for possible placement in the National Wilderness Preservation System. It restores the power of eminent domain to the Department of Agriculture with respect to inholdings within eastern wilderness—an absolutely essential provision in the East where both the national forests and the designated wilderness areas are small compared with those in the West, where access is relatively easy and convenient because of the minor distances involved, and where developers are ready and eager to acquire and convert inholdings into resorts and second-home developments, thereby severely eroding the special values of the surrounding congressionally designated wilderness. All these provisions, for the most part couched in the language of the earlier Senate-passed bill and applicable only east of the 100th meridian, constitute a solid piece of legislation which I recommend for acceptance and passage by this body today.

I commend the strengthening of the language pertaining to the management of study areas as contained in the House-amended S. 3433. The addition of the requirement that study areas shall be so managed as to maintain their "presently existing wilderness character," as well as maintaining their "potential for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System," makes clear the intention of the legislation to forbid within study areas any action or use, whether activities such as road-building, erection of new structures, cutting of timber or motorized transportation—except in emergencies—that would alter the physical condition or depreciate the natural environment. This is fully consistent with the principles of wilderness protection as understood through 10 years' experience with the Wilderness Act. Concerning existing nonconforming structures, recognizing the temporary status of any study area pending a final congressional determination, such structures may temporarily remain without violating the law.

I join in the tribute to our esteemed colleague, the gentleman from Vermont, Senator GEORGE AIKEN, whose thoughtful, constant effort has contributed so much to the drafting of this bill and to its successful movement through the Senate. I share his pleasure that two wilderness areas located in his native State of Vermont, the Bristol Cliffs Wilderness and the Lye Brook Wilderness, will be established by this legislation.

The chairman of the committee has asked me to place in the Record a response he received to his December 13, 1974, letter to the Wilderness Society requesting the society's views on the House action on S. 3433. In their letter, the society endorses the House action while stating that our version of S. 3433 is superior.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

THE WILDERNESS SOCIETY,

Washington, D.C., December 17, 1974.
Senator HENRY M. JACKSON,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Dirksen Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JACKSON: It is a pleasure to respond to your letter of December 13, 1974 requesting the opinion of The Wilderness Society on the Committee-passed Eastern Wilderness Areas bill, H.R. 13455, also identified as amended S. 3433.

It is true that the House version of the Eastern Wilderness Areas bill lacks many of the excellent and needed provisions of the Senate-passed bill—provisions which would strengthen the protection given eastern wilderness and would specify under law certain administrative practices. We are very much in favor of these provisions as contained in the Senate-passed version of S. 3433 and will welcome the day when they can be enacted into law. In our view, you, your Committee and its staff, and the Agriculture Committee and its staff, did a most commendable job in drafting and passing the Senate legislation—for all of which the Society is deeply grateful.

It is with reluctance that we forego at this time the strengthening, beneficial provisions referred to in the above paragraph. However, there are positive, worthwhile benefits to be gained by passage of the limited House bill H.R. 13455, and we urge its acceptance by the Senate and its enactment by this 93rd Congress. H.R. 13455, by adding to the National Wilderness Preservation System 16 areas located on eastern national forests, would absolutely confirm that eastern national forests can and do contain lands which meet the definition of wilderness in the Wilderness Act. In establishing 17 Study Areas, thus continuing the concept of Primitive Areas set up in the Wilderness Act, it prescribes interim protection and an orderly procedure for the review of candidate wilderness areas. Restoration of the power of condemnation of inholdings within wilderness east of the 100th meridian is also accomplished. These are all vital provisions with respect to protecting eastern wilderness and well worth enacting into law now.

Again we thank you for all that you and your colleagues have done to further the protection of America's resource of wilderness and request your full support and prompt passage in the Senate of the House Interior Committee's Eastern Wilderness Areas bill.

Sincerely,

ERNEST M. DICKERMAN,
Director of Field Services, Eastern Region, The Wilderness Society.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I want to thank the members of the Agriculture and Forestry Committee and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee for their very fine cooperation in reporting this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I thank the Senator. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont move to concur in the House amendment?

Mr. AIKEN. Yes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator from New York be permitted to proceed for 1 minute.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I want to commend all concerned for the preparation of this most significant legislation.

As the distinguished Senator from Colorado stated, it now provides in the eastern part of this country for the same kind of preservation of unique resources that we have enjoyed in the West. I believe it is a significant step, but only a first step, in achieving a goal that will preserve vital ecosystems for the benefit of the entire Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN).

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion on S. 3313, the national wilderness bill, was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1975

The Senate continued with the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1178) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1975, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on whether the joint resolution shall pass. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) and the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Florida (Mr. GURNEY), and the Senator from Kansas (Mr. PEARSON) are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 84, nays 9, as follows:

EIGHTY-FIVE PERCENT PARITY PRICE FOR MILK—S. 4206

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed, for not to exceed 4 minutes, to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 1334, S. 4206.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNEY). Is there objection?

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what is Calendar Order No. 1334?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. If the Senator will look at his calendar, it is the last measure there, No. 1334.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill will be stated by title. The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4206) to provide price support for milk at not less than 85 per centum of the parity price therefor, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment on page 1, beginning with line 6, strike out:

"(d) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, effective for the period beginning with the date of enactment of this subsection and ending on March 31, 1976, the price of milk shall be supported at not less than 90 per centum of the parity price therefor. The parity price for milk shall be adjusted by the Secretary at the beginning of each quarter, beginning with the second quarter of the calendar year 1975, to reflect any change during the immediately preceding quarter in the index of prices paid by dairy farmers for production items, interest, taxes, and wages rates."

And insert:

"(d) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, effective for the period beginning with the date of enactment of this subsection and ending on March 31, 1976, the support price of milk shall be established at not less than 85 per centum of the parity price therefor on the date of enactment, and the support price shall be adjusted thereafter by the Secretary at the beginning of each quarter, beginning with the second quarter of the calendar year 1975, to reflect any change during the immediately preceding quarter in the index of prices paid by farmers for production items, interest, taxes, and wages rates."

Sec. 2. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that the President shall take appropriate action to limit the quantity of meat imports to an amount equal to the adjusted base quantity estimate for the current calendar year pursuant to section 2(b) of the Act of August 22, 1964.

(b) It is further the sense of the Congress that the President, with the concurrence of the Secretary of Agriculture, issue a proclamation stating that import quotas on butter, butter oil, cheddar cheese, and nonfat dry milk, as authorized under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, not be increased above the levels prevailing as of June 1, 1971.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 201 of the Agricultural Act of 1940 (7 U.S.C. 1446), as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(d) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, effective for the period beginning with the date of enactment of this subsection and ending on March 31, 1976, the support price of milk shall be established at not less than 85 per centum of the parity price therefor on the date of enactment, and the support price shall be adjusted thereafter by the Secretary at the beginning of each quarter, beginning with the second quarter of the calendar year 1975, to reflect any change during the immediately preceding quarter in the index of prices paid by farmers for production items, interest, taxes, and wages rates."

Sec. 2. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that the President shall take appropriate action to limit the quantity of meat imports to an amount equal to the adjusted base quantity estimate for the current calendar year pursuant to section 2(b) of the Act of August 22, 1964.

(b) It is further the sense of the Congress that the President, with the concurrence of the Secretary of Agriculture, issue a proclamation stating that import quotas on butter, butter oil, cheddar cheese, and nonfat dry milk, as authorized under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, not be increased above the levels prevailing as of June 1, 1971.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, this bill is the result of hearings in the House and in the Senate. The bill before us represents a compromise in the original legislation. This bill will increase the support level to 85 percent of parity. It will also do some other things that are quite necessary, calling the administration's attention to the depressing effect of the massive imports of dairy products which are literally driving our dairy farmers out of business.

This bill will also require a quarterly rather than an annual recomputation of the price which farmers receive under the price support level.

Mr. President, very quickly, legislation like this should not be needed. We do have, presently on the books, a law that requires supports of not less than 80 percent of parity, but the support level really is running at about 73, due to increased operating costs and increased feed costs.

Our dairy industry is not in a recession, it is in a massive depression. There is wholesale liquidation of dairy cattle in this country, and, may I say, at prices that are scandalously low.

A milk cow sells in the Midwest today, according to the market reports, for around 12 to 16 cents a pound, which is an incredibly low price when you stop to think what you pay in the supermarket for hamburger.

Furthermore, we are liquidating many dairy farmers. In Minnesota alone, 3,500 dairy farmers have been liquidated this year, and 49,000 dairy cows have been liquidated. Yet no one seems excited about it.

When there are unemployed, people are excited. When the automobile industry is in trouble, we are disturbed. When the steel industry cuts back, we are worried. But when farmers in the Midwest are in difficulty, everyone says, "Ho-hum"—not "Ho-ho, Ho-hum."

Something has to be done before we have a major disaster in rural areas. I ask Senators to remember that depressions are farm-led and farm-fed.

DAIRY SUPPORT LEVEL SHOULD BE RAISED TO 85 PERCENT OF PARITY

Mr. President, our dairy farmers are facing disaster, and I urge passage of this bill, S. 4206, to increase the price support level to 85 percent of parity. Hearings have been held by the Department of Agriculture and both Houses of Congress which have overwhelmingly demonstrated the need to increase the support level. But the Department of Agriculture has continued to turn a deaf ear.

Today, I urge that we pass legislation in order to help our dairy farmers to stay in production.

My bill would not only raise the price support level to 85 percent of parity, but it also would provide for a quarterly rather than an annual recomputation of the price which farmers receive under the price support level.

The price support level is now set on April 1 each year, and our present price support level was determined at 80 percent of parity on April 1, 1974.

However, because of rapidly escalating production costs, the support level, in terms of prices received by our farmers, has gone down, and it is now estimated at around 75 percent of parity.

Recomputing the parity level quarterly would be helpful in enabling farmers to at least stay even with ever-increasing production costs.

Our Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry held hearings on September 30. At that time, the testimony was unanimous that our farmers are in desperate straits. Even the Department of Agriculture, with its rose-tinted glasses, conceded as much. But they have been unwilling to act.

On October 8-10, the Department of Agriculture held hearings to consider raising the minimum prices paid to farmers for class I or fluid milk. A modest increase in the minimum prices to $7.50 per hundredweight was proposed. This would have been somewhat helpful and at least indirectly have provided a minor benefit to the producers of class II milk. However, even this minimal increase has been rejected.

Mr. President, I find no other recourse but to enact legislation to do what the Department of Agriculture has neither the courage nor the will to do.

At our Senate hearings in September, we heard that dairy production costs have probably increased by at least 30 percent in the past year. Feed-concentrate costs, as one example, have gone up over 32 percent in 1 year. Some costs have gone up by 300 or 400 percent.

With our reduced harvests, there is little chance that the costs of feed will improve. At the time of our Senate hearings, it was indicated that our dairy farmers were able to buy only about 110 pounds of feed with 100 pounds of milk. A farmer should be able to buy 170 pounds of feed with 100 pounds of milk if he is to make a profit.

This feed-milk ratio is an important indicator of profitability, and the present ratio is the worst it has been since 1947.

In surveying States in different areas of the country such as South Carolina, Washington, Colorado, Texas, Oklahoma, Wisconsin, California, Iowa, and Minnesota, it was demonstrated that farmers have been losing from $1.50 to $2 per hundred pounds of milk produced.

To compound the problem, the Department of Agriculture this year increased the importation of milk products by about 1.3 billion pounds over 1972, a fairly typical year. The USDA estimates that this year the CCC will acquire 1.2 billion pounds of milk products, an almost even tradeoff in terms of the level of imports.

It is small comfort for our farmers to be told that the CCC has been making purchases of milk products. If our farmers had not had to face the increased competition of subsidized imports, our milk markets would not be in their present state.

While there has been a minor improvement in milk prices during the fall, this has been very slight. Our farmers have continued to face the choice of staying in production and continuing to lose money or selling their herds at a fraction of their real value.

Many of our urban citizens have rightly been disturbed at the recent slaughter of cattle. The news stories have sometimes given the false impression that the farmers were being greedy and trying to keep cattle prices high.

Our farmers have been trying to get their message through for months, and the USDA has ignored the law and has been unwilling to help.

Members in both Houses of Congress have developed legislation to make large-scale purchases of livestock to relieve this present problem.

Stories have reached me recently of cattle being sold in Minnesota for 8 cents and even 5 cents per pound. In some cases the returns from the sale did not even meet the hauling costs.

This is a sorry state, and it is understandable why our farmers are angry, frustrated, and desperate.

I am concerned that we not only look at the question of reducing livestock herds, but that we also find ways of keeping our farmers in production.

This bill will raise the price support level to 85 percent of parity and deal with the issue of meat and dairy imports.

It is a very modest but much needed bill.

Chairman TALMADGE of our Committee on Agriculture and Forestry announced on September 23, that we would be having extensive hearings early in 1975 on the need for revisions in our agricultural legislation. But, in my view, the situation has reached the point where we cannot wait until some time in 1975 for new legislation.

December 19, 1974

With over 3,000 of our Minnesota dairy farmers having been forced out of production during the past year, I think it is urgent that we enact this legislation.

I urge that we pass S. 4206 without delay.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Kansas for a comment on this bill.

Mr. DOLE. I appreciate the Senator's yielding.

CRISIS IN DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. President, the Washington Star-News of yesterday has a headline of "$5.5 Billion OK'd for Jobless Aid." I have checked with the Labor Department and have been advised that not a single penny of all these billions of dollars would be available for dairy farmers.

The point I would make to my colleagues is that when a dairy farmer is losing money, he goes out of business. The Congress has not provided multibillion-dollar programs to bail out dairy producers. As a matter of fact, we have scarcely done anything to relieve the disastrous conditions that dairy producers are facing and have faced for many months.

GOAL IS TO PRODUCE

And I do not think Kansas dairy producers are seeking multibillion-dollar programs to bail them out. Their objective is consistent with an objective of Congress—to have an adequate supply of reasonably priced dairy products for consumers. It makes sense for us to help their efforts to achieve that goal. We can do that by passing this bill today.

Dairy farmers work 365 days a year. They have to. A dairy cow has to be milked every day, 7 days a week, twice a day. They have to be milked in rain, snow, and shine. They must be taken care of in hot weather or in freezing weather. Dairy farmers face a rigorous day-in-day-out schedule.

They have faced rising expenses and declining market prices for many months. Many Kansas dairy farmers have contacted me to indicate that they are and have been operating at a deficit. Many of them are facing bankruptcy.

It is my feeling that we should do something to insure that consumers have a continuous, steady supply of milk and other dairy products. We can do that by enacting a higher dairy price support, and in that regard I hope the Senate today will pass this bill raising price supports to 85 percent of parity.

REALISTIC LEVEL

It was my proposal yesterday in the Senate Agriculture Committee that we report a bill with a price support level at 85 percent of parity. It is my feeling that this level of price support is not excessive. It is a realistic figure that would benefit dairy farmers. It is not so high that it would result in a tremendous increase in expenditure of Federal tax funds.

The trend in milk prices indicates that an increase in price supports is greatly needed. The manufacturing milk price declined by nearly $1 per hundredweight between November 1973 and November 1974. At the same time, the expenses of dairy farmers have risen sharply. The simple economic fact is that dairy income does not match dairy costs. The only possible result is for dairy farmers to go out of business.

DAIRY FARMERS DECREASING

Recent figures from the Department of Agriculture show that the number of dairy farmers is declining. This year, about 50,000 dairy farmers went out of business. That is more than 13 percent of the total number of dairy farmers in business in 1973. Between 1972 and 1973, an even larger number of approximately 57,000 dairy farmers went out of the business.

These figures are sobering, but the most critical fact is not shown by the figures. That is the number of dairy farmers who are on the verge of going out of business right at this point. With dairy farmers losing money all over the country, it seems highly possible that dairy farmers could begin going out of business en masse. The result would be smaller supplies of dairy products, leading to possible shortages for consumers.

Another aspect of the declining number of dairy farmers is that smaller farmers and family farmers are being replaced by large corporate operations. Family farmers have always kept a competitive element in the market. In the interest of keeping dairy prices competitive, we should give family farmers and smaller operators an opportunity to stay in business. The increase in dairy price supports would help many of them survive this crisis.

MORE FREQUENT ADJUSTMENT

The present support level is about 73 percent of parity. It is too low to be meaningful to dairy farmers who are facing bankruptcy.

Last year, we set the dairy price support level at 80 percent of parity. It was duly established at 80 percent by the Department of Agriculture on the specified date, April 1, 1974. Since that time, expenses for dairy farmers have risen so sharply that the price support which was formerly 80 percent of parity is now equivalent to about 73 percent.

This kind of discrepancy between the actual level and what is required by law would be resolved by this measure. This bill provides for a readjustment of price supports on a quarterly basis, instead of the annual basis that is presently provided in the law. This provision would be of great benefit to dairy farmers and would insure that the intent of the law is more consistently carried out.

MULTI-FACETED PROBLEM

The difficulties facing dairy farmers are complex. For example, they have sought relief from dairy imports for many months and the Congress has done nothing to relieve their difficulties. Under the threat of countervailing duties, the European Economic Community lifted their dairy export subsidies a few months ago. It is my understanding that dairy imports are presently declining substantially. This should benefit the domestic industry. But when a dairy farmer is facing bankruptcy, it is hard for him to understand why our Government is permitting any dairy imports at all.

I understand this concern and feel that it is justified. I have attempted to get legislation passed to halt or limit dairy imports. The Senate has not been responsive to my proposals, but it is my feeling that this legislation we are considering today could reduce the difficulties being faced by dairy farmers.

Mr. President, dairy farmers are not asking for a $5.5 billion program as printed in the Washington Star-News. They do need a meaningful program to help them get through the crisis they are presently facing. The price support at 85 percent of parity, as provided in this bill, would give some meaningful assistance. It is my hope that we can pass this measure today and move it toward enactment into law.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am delighted to see the Senate pass S. 4206. This bill, if accepted in the House, will have a beneficial impact on our dairy industry since it raises the price support level to 85 percent of parity and provides for a quarterly adjustment of the prices paid to farmers under the basic support level.

In addition, the bill also provides that it is the sense of the Congress that the President should take appropriate action to assure that meat and meat product imports not exceed the adjusted base for the current year pursuant to the Meat Import Act, and that import quotas of selected dairy products not exceed the levels as of June 1, 1971, as authorized by section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933.

This step is important in signaling to the administration that meat imports have been an important factor in our presently depressed livestock industry.

I understand that the administration is now at last planning to take action on the question of meat imports.

Mr. President, I hope that the House will see fit to take action on this bill without delay.

Mr. President, I notice the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. AIKEN), who has been a leader in this effort to help our dairy farmers, which is without doubt the most important form of agriculture, is present in the Chamber. His resolution relating to dairy supports passed unanimously in the Senate just a few weeks ago.

Mr. President, I ask for the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide price support at not less than 85 percent of the parity price therefor, and for other purposes."

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, may I inquire from the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, although the bill as read indicated 90 percent support, is it not true that a committee amendment changed that to 85 percent?

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct. That was a compromise that was arrived at in committee.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with its regular order.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK ACT AMENDMENTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). Under the previous order, the Chair lays before the Senate a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 15977. The report will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 15977) to amend the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 18, 1974 at page 40918.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the time on this measure is limited to 45 minutes, to be equally divided between and controlled by the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER), and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD).

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Ed Kemp, of the staff of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, be accorded the privilege of the floor during the consideration of this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CALL OF CERTAIN ITEMS ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, while Senators who are involved in the Eximbank conference report are coming to the floor, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes without the time being charged to either side, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order Nos. 1327, 1329, and 1333.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REGINALD C. VINES

The resolution (S. Res. 466) to pay a gratuity to Reginald C. Vines was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay, from the contingent fund of the Senate, to Reginald C. Vines, Administrator of the estate of John H. Vines, an employee of the Senate at the time of his death, a sum equal to ten months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

TRANSPORTATION OF INFORMATION CONCERNING LOTTERIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 544) to amend title 18 of the United States Code to permit the transportation, mailing, and broadcasting of advertising, information, and materials concerning lotteries authorized by law and conducted by a State, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 2, in line 6, strike out "located" and insert "licensed to a location".

On page 2, at the end of line 8, strike out "addressees" and insert "addresses".

On page 3, at the end of line 14, strike out "addressees" and insert "addresses".

Mr. MCINTYRE. Mr. President, I wish to address myself to the State lotteries bill, S. 544.

I well understand the constraints of time under which we are operating here. There is an urgent need to resolve the position of State lotteries under existing law, and we must act now.

However, as a Representative of the State which developed the first State lottery, I would argue to my colleagues that this bill constitutes only a first step in adjusting present law to take into account the recent growth and public acceptance of State-conducted lotteries.

The New Hampshire lottery provides my State with a major portion of its revenues. Since 1964, it has provided the State educational system with more than $18 million, and has been a model of honest administration. The prohibitions on interstate mailing and advertisements will cut substantially into those revenues.

I will continue to make every effort to broaden the position taken here today, and to assure that the needs of both lottery States and nonlottery States can be reconciled.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I fully support the lottery legislation before the Senate body today. This bill was developed after extensive hearings in the Senate Judiciary Committee and closely resembles legislation recently passed by the House. While I supported broader legislation which would have allowed free use of the mails, radio, and television beyond the borders of the lottery States, I do support the present bill as does the Massachusetts State Lottery Commission as providing the absolute minimum of freedom of operation required to operate a successful lottery.

Thirteen States now operate lotteries and all have experienced legal difficulties as the result of laws passed a century ago to end abuses in private lottery schemes. State lotteries, as operated in the 13 States today, represent an entirely different situation. They are not operated for private gain, but to supplement revenue in order to support essential public services.

It is estimated that in this fiscal year alone, over $400 million will be raised in the 13 lottery States to provide funding for government programs crucial to the citizens of those States. In the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in fiscal 1972, $22 million was distributed across 351 towns and cities from lottery funds. In fiscal 1973, another $35 million was apportioned to these towns and cities for expenditures in the public interest.

Without this legislation, State lottery commissions will be forced to continue their operations waiting to see which Federal gambling statutes will be enforced, how strictly they will be enforced, and when enforcement procedures will be implemented. The Department of Justice has made their position quite clear. They are sympathetic to the problems of the lottery States, but it is up to the Congress to change the law and provide an equitable solution to their problems.

What is clear from these figures is that lottery operations in those States which have chosen to support them have become an important source of income for essential services to the residents of those States. None of the abuses which existed in lotteries run for private profit a century ago are present in the lotteries of these States.

In Massachusetts, lottery legislation was passed in September 1971, providing for a five-man commission to manage the operation: four members appointed by the Governor of the Commonwealth and the State Treasurer serves as chairman. An executive director supervises and administers the overall operation of the lottery.

The revenue from the lottery operation in Massachusetts is distributed to towns and cities on a formula which insures that poorer communities receive the greatest proportion of the revenues. This is accomplished by taking into account the population and property evaluation of the community. Once the funds are distributed, the local communities make their own decisions based on their own priorities as to what public service programs will benefit from the revenues.

In each of the 13 lottery States, the lottery operations now in existence have been run by commissions which have maximized every opportunity to insure the integrity of the operation. We have the facts; we know the amounts of revenue raised; and we know where the money has been spent. In all of the testimony gathered by both the Senate and the House, there has been no suggestion that any of the lottery operations has had any example of dishonesty.

The lottery States including my own State have found an innovative and effective way to raise revenues for local governments who are in dire need of these funds. We can today by passing this bill assure those States that outdated and outmoded Federal laws will not hamper their efforts.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE EXPORT-IMPORT BANK ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 15977) to amend the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). Who yields time?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, the conferees have completed their work on the Export-Import Bank bill. I am happy to report that after prolonged and intense negotiations, we have reached an agreement which I enthusiastically support and urge my colleagues to support as well.

The conference report accomplishes the first major reforms in the history of the Bank. It vindicates our efforts in the Senate to focus public attention on the economic and foreign policy consequences of the Bank's operations. It vindicates our efforts to expose the Bank's operations to closer congressional scrutiny and to induce greater Bank sensitivity to such matters as U.S. energy policy and the domestic economic consequences of its operations. And it vindicates our efforts in the Senate to make the Bank's policies and practices more responsive to congressional oversight.

These efforts began just about a year ago when in the International Finance Subcommittee we began a searching examination of the Bank. Over the years, the Bank's charter had been routinely extended by the Congress, until by 1974 it had grown into a $20 billion institution whose operations had taken no major economic and foreign policy dimensions. Just as it had in the past, this year the Bank again sought a routine extension of its charter and a $30 billion authorization. But no routine extension was granted, and no blank check was issued. We can now be confident that hereafter the concerns expressed in the Congress will play a major role in the Bank's operations.

In this conference report all the major reforms sought by the Senate have been achieved. Every provision which the Senate secured in the second conference report was retained. And, in addition, the Senate was sustained on the two issues which received the greatest attention on the floor of the Senate; namely, the budget and Soviet Union energy issues.

Starting in fiscal 1977, the Export-Import Bank will be back in the budget. Unless the Budget Committees, which now have the matter under review, recommend otherwise and the Congress concurs, the Export-Import Bank's operations will again be subject to the full Federal budgetary process.

In addition, the Bank will hereafter be precluded from assisting major fossil fuel energy projects in the Soviet Union without congressional approval. Under the bill agreed on in conference, Exim assistance for Soviet Union energy development, including processing and distribution, is prohibited. In addition, the bill places a subceiling of $40 million on Exim assistance for energy research and exploration in the Soviet Union. Both provisions are in addition to the overall ceiling of $300 million on Exim assistance for exports of any kind to the Soviet Union and the requirement that Congress be notified 25 legislative days in advance of all proposed energy projects in the Soviet Union involving $25 million or more of Exim assistance.

The $300 million ceiling, the ban on energy production, and the $40 million subceiling can only be changed if the Congress expressly approves. Before that can occur, the President must report to the Congress his determination to establish a higher overall ceiling and specifically indicate in his report the amounts within the ceiling which would be available for energy research, exploration, and production. This means, for example, that the Yakutsk project, which has received much attention in the Congress and involves more than $40 million in Exim financing, cannot go forward unless Congress approves a higher overall ceiling and new subceiling for energy research and exploration. At that time, the Congress will have a full opportunity to review the proposed project as well as all other proposed Exim assistance for the Soviet Union to determine whether such financing is consistent with U.S. foreign and economic policy and otherwise serves the best interests of the United States.

Those who contend that the $40 million subceiling will permit financing of a portion of the proposed Yakutsk project without congressional approval are absolutely incorrect. Yakutsk involves $49.5 million of Exim assistance. In their deliberations the conferees made it clear that any attempt to break up the Yakutsk project or any other large project into smaller parts in order to escape congressional approval would be in violation of the law.

The same problem presents itself with respect to the prenotification provisions of the bill. And on that point, the Senate Banking Committee made clear in its report on the bill it originally reported out of committee that it expects full compliance with the spirit as well as the letter of the law. The language of that report on this issue (S. Rept. No. 93-1097, 93d Congress, 2d session at 10) is worth quoting in full for its applicability here:

The Committee is aware of the difficulty in determining whether a particular transaction involves a loan or loans aggregating $50 million or more. The Committee does not anticipate that a transaction will be broken down into components or otherwise altered to avoid the applicability of this subsection. At the same time, it recognizes that subsequent to approval of a loan in an amount below the level set by this subsection, another loan or loans may be authorized for the same project which together with such earlier loan would aggregate $50 million or more. The test to be applied under this subsection should be whether the Bank's Board of Directors has been informed by the proposed borrower or should otherwise be reasonably aware at the time the loan is to be approved, that it is part of a series of loans intended by such borrower to relate to the same undertaking which, in the aggregate, equals or exceeds $50 million. The Committee expects the Board to make every reasonable effort to ascertain the borrower's intentions before deciding whether or not a loan must be submitted to the Congress for review. If the Board concludes that a proposed loan will indeed be part of a series of loans relating to same undertaking, then the loan must be submitted to the Congress for review even if the particular loan in question does not itself amount to $50 million or more.

Mr. President, it should be emphasized that these ceilings on authorizations for transactions with the Soviet Union are in no sense final. They can be raised by the Congress. Nor do they reflect, as has been charged, an anti-Soviet attitude. They do reflect a growing doubt about the wisdom of large Exim Bank transactions which involve foreign production of energy at a time when the United States needs capital and material to develop energy at home. Concern is also mounting over large Exim transactions that lead to the development of facilities abroad which can produce goods in competition with goods produced at home. In the case of the Soviet Union, such concerns are heightened by the knowledge that it has a GNP second only to our own. However, desirable trade with the Soviet Union may be, the need to subsidize trade with a rich nation, largely isolated from the economic distress in the West, is not clear.

Loans to the Soviet Union have risen to $469 million in little more than a year and a half. These loans are long term and generally involve large projects for which there is little or no foreign competition.

The political benefits to be derived from subsidized trade with the Soviet Union are as yet unperceived, and I suspect that the availability of credits beyond the ceilings in this bill will depend on the prudence with which the Bank uses its authority—and above all, on progress toward détente, more particularly, the liberalization of emigration policy in the U.S.S.R., the Soviet role in the Middle East, movement toward strategic arms control and mutual and balanced force reductions in Europe.

In addition to changes in the Bank's charter regarding the Soviet Union and inclusion of the Bank in the budget, the conference report accomplishes other major reforms.

They include a requirement that the Bank take into account the possible adverse effects of Exim assistance on U.S. employment, the competitive position of U.S. industries, and the availability of materials in short supply before approving any loan, guarantee, or insurance. They include a requirement that Exim's interest rates be set by taking into account the average cost of money to the Bank. They require that Treasury lending to Exim bear interest at a rate equal to Treasury's cost of money on borrowings of similar maturities. They require that Exim report semiannually on the progress it is making in reducing international credit competition. They require that Exim report semiannually on all energy related transactions and include in that report an analysis of the effect of such transactions on the availability of energy developed abroad for use in the United States. They require that Exim report annually on its progress in assisting small business. And by reducing the amount of additional authority available to Exim to half of the additional $10 billion it asked for, and by placing the ceiling of $300 million on new assistance to the Soviet Union, it insures that within a relatively short time, perhaps as soon as 2 years or less, the Congress will again have an opportunity to consider what, if any, kind of Export-Import Bank it wishes to have.

Mr. President, the fate of the Export-Import Bank has been debated at length. In hearings, on the floor of the Senate, and in conference, the Bank has received the most intensive scrutiny in its 30-year history. The issues have been explored fully and now, in this third conference report, the Senate's position has been fully sustained.

With approval of this conference report, the Senate can be assured that the Bank's ability to assist U.S. exports will be continued and, indeed, improved, but that the Congress will have a continuing opportunity to oversee and influence the Bank's policies and practices. The Senate can have confidence that there will be no major commitments of Exim assistance for energy projects in the Soviet Union unless Congress approves. The Senate can have confidence that it will have an opportunity to scrutinize every proposed major transaction throughout the world before the Bank gives final approval. The Senate can have confidence that the Bank will be wary of extending assistance to other countries if there are potential adverse domestic economic consequences. And the Senate can have confidence that the Bank will be sensitive to the need to reduce international credit competition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. STEVENSON. Vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER) is recognized.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the conference report. I would like to begin by commending the conferees for making substantial progress in getting the Proxmire budget amendment included in this report and in getting or beginning to get a grip on the Soviet energy problem.

However, I would have to say that I am still disappointed on the Soviet energy problem, because I had hoped that Congress would have an absolute oversight in all energy explorations in the Soviet Union.

The report, as I understand it, says production is not permitted under the Export-Import Bank financing program, but that research, exploration, and drilling are.

Well, you do not have to be a genius in oil exploration or gas exploration work to know that that is where all the action is, in the drilling, the exploration. That is the risk; that is the gamble. Once you find you have something down there, anybody is willing to finance it, and I am sure even the Soviet Union, once they find the tremendous reserves of energy are there, will not have any trouble coming up with the money, notwithstanding the trouble that they are having in coming up with it right now. I am sure the Japanese would be glad to finance it once somebody took the risk, and which would necessitate such an investment in capital, and which is the gamble.

Under this proposal, the U.S. taxpayers will take the gamble, they will take the risk. If it should be a dry field or a dry well, we will be the ones holding the bag. Yet, ironically, we are doing it for them, and we are doing it at a time, and we are giving them 7 or 8 percent money, when our energy developers here at home cannot get that kind of money.

So, obviously, there is encouragement and inducement here for drilling equipment, for exploration equipment to go abroad—of all places, to the Soviet Union—because, in fact, they can get it at 7 or 8 percent money on the long-term versus 10, 12, or 13 percent money here at home. So we still have a sweetener in there for energy exploration abroad in the Soviet Union.

In addition, we encourage the shipment of this kind of equipment abroad. Just a little while ago I read an article which said that we were having trouble getting drilling rigs for the reserves that are off our shores, because drilling rigs were in short supply and drilling equipment was in short supply.

Well, it certainly is going to be in even shorter supply now, because we give it the impetus of 7 and 8 percent money.

So while we have made progress, and while we have certainly come a long way from the other body being unwilling to regulate the Export-Import Bank in any way, I still, as a Senator, have trouble understanding how we are promoting Project Independence and energy sources here at home when we put a taxpayer sweetener in of 5 to 6 percentage point interest which, over a long period of time, can amount to an awful lot of money.

In addition, I hope that the distinguished Senator from Illinois is correct in that we are not going ahead with the Yakutsk energy deal. I hope he is correct. I certainly trust his word and acknowledge his word. But I must say that I am not as excited about the Bank's situation in this regard because, quite frankly, it was just this past year where I had the General Accounting Office make a study of the last law we passed on the Eximbank and, lo and behold, they very clearly violated the law, the intent of Congress, and completely ignored the will of Congress.

The GAO report certified to that extent. We could never get them to undo the harm done, because they would never acknowledge, or acknowledge Congress own order.

So while I would be glad to hear the Senator from Illinois believes that, I am sure he does and I hope he is right—

Mr. STEVENSON. Would the Senator yield for one clarification?

I did not say or intend to say that Yakutsk was not going ahead.

What I intended to say, and I believe did say, was that the Yakutsk transaction could not go ahead without congressional approval.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. So the Senator is saying, though, that the changes he is making now would absolutely prohibit Yakutsk unless Congress gives further approval?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is correct.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. And I commend the distinguished Senator for his position, and his stand and belief.

What I am saying is that I have heard that song before from the Eximbank and we had a rule of law—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

We had a rule of law that Congress wrote, it was written in this body, it said very specifically that no money could be loaned to the Communist countries unless the Presidential determination was found that that particular loan was in the national interest.

The Eximbank turned that around so that the President wrote a letter and said that from now on, henceforth and forevermore, it is in the national interest to loan money to the Soviet Union under that provision.

No attempt to make a specific finding in each case, no judgment in each case. Clearly a circumvention of the Senate's will.

It went back with a ruling from the Congress and from our Comptroller General. They still ignored the law.

So that is why I am rightfully a little bit skeptical and suspicious, and because there is not a bit of exploration, which I happen to think is one of the biggest investments in oil and gas. Once we know it is there, there is no problem, everybody wants in on the deal, like the gold strike, we all want part of it.

Financing is no problem. It is a problem to dig a dry well and holes in fields one hopes is there.

So all I say is this did not give us the assurance that we will not be subsidizing energy development in the United States.

Therefore, Mr. President, I will have to vote against this conference report. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SCHWEIKER. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CHURCH. First of all, I want to express my sincere appreciation to the members of the Senate conference. I think they did everything possible to uphold the Senate position in the final conference, and I commend them for the changes that were made in the bill.

It is a much-improved bill in terms of the measure of congressional control that has now been conceded, particularly with reference to loans through the Export-Import Bank in the energy field.

But I, too, cannot be satisfied that we have fully achieved our goal. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania that, without requiring the prior express consent of Congress at the commencement of one of these ventures, there can be no assurance that Congress will not afterwards be pressured—on the basis of money already lent—to approve a further commitment of American credit to underwrite the development of a gigantic natural gas project in Siberia, such as that contemplated in the Yakutsk negotiations, or that contemplated in the negotiations respecting the North Star project.

December 19, 1974

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the Senator yield long enough for me to ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. CHURCH. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I believe the only way we can be certain that major energy development projects inside the Soviet Union are not to be underwritten with American capital, is to insist upon the right of Congress to pass judgment, prior to the making of any foot-in-the-door loans through the Export-Import Bank, on whether the ultimate purpose of the transaction serves the best interests of the United States.

That is one reason why, despite the fact that a portion of the amendment which I originally offered has now been retained in a different form, I feel constrained to vote against the conference report.

The other reason, Mr. President, is that I do not believe economic circumstances any longer warrant giving preferred status to foreign purchasers of American goods and services over our own domestic purchasers.

The subsidized interest rate on Ex-Im bank loans, several points below the market, give foreign businesses a definite advantage in competing against our own.

For this reason, I supported the amendment offered earlier by the distinguished Junior Senator from Pennsylvania. The amendment failed. The subsidy continues. And since it is now outdated by economic conditions, and no longer serves our national interest, I shall vote against the conference report.

But in doing so, I recognize the strenuous efforts made by the Senate conferees and I commend them for fighting very hard to uphold the Senate position. I want them to know how much I appreciate their attempt to preserve the entire Church amendment in the final version of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President—
Mr. PACKWOOD. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator.

Actually, I want to ask him if he would explain a couple of items to me, so we will be using my time.

I would very much like him to answer briefly for me, when we sent the bill back I think I understand that there were three very distinct conditions.

I understand we could not send them there saying, do them or do not bring back a report. Generally, they would try to get the three.

The third of the three was Senator STEVENSON's request that we keep all the good compromises that were in.

As I understand it, those were all kept? Mr. PACKWOOD. That is correct.

Let me answer this way, there were three requests, keep everything in the second conference report.

Mr. DOMENICI. And that was done.

Mr. PACKWOOD. That was done.

Try to get the Proxmire amendment, including the Export-Import Bank in the unified budget.

That was done. It would go in as of 1977 fiscal budget.

That is done. That is in.

Third was to attempt to get the Church amendment in its entirety.

We did not get it in its entirety. We have substantially tightened what was even in the second conference report. We did not get that in its entirety.

Mr. DOMENICI. Could the Senator tell me what he got in that regard?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes. As we came out of the initial second conference report, there was a ceiling of $300 million on future loans and credits to Russia. Although I might say that any time during the 4 years Congress could increase the ceiling, the President could ask for an increase, but it would have to be granted by Congress. I do not want to give the impression that the ceiling is frozen for 4 years.

Mr. DOMENICI. That was before we had the second recommitment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. That is right. What we have done within the $300 million on credits to the Soviet Union is to say none of the $300 million can be used for the production of fossil fuel energy projects. Up to $40 million can be used for what you would call nonproduction purposes, exploration and research—for the purchase of drilling rigs, for the purchase of trucks to haul the drilling rigs across the tundra, whatever. But not for production. That is, $40 million of the $300 million can be used for purposes of fossil fuel energy research and exploration.

In addition to that, if the President comes in and asks for an increase above the $300 million authorization for the Soviet Union, he has to indicate what proportion of the increase he would plan to use, relative to fossil fuel energy, for production and for nonproduction, and submit that proportion with the request for the increase of the ceiling to this Congress. We would have to approve it. That is how we tightened it up.

Mr. DOMENICI. As I understood the Church amendment, even though we were not talking about the same use, we were talking about a $25 million figure instead of $40 million. Is that correct?

Mr. PACKWOOD. His would have required approval, as we were finally talking about it, of any fossil fuel project in the Soviet Union in excess of $25 million, although you could have used the entire $300 million for the purpose. We have put a lid of $40 million on loans and guarantees, and beyond that it cannot be used at all unless Congress approves a recommendation for an increase submitted by the President.

Mr. DOMENICI. What makes the Senator think that limiting the use to exploration as compared with development and production is a distinguishing feature when you consider the various arguments that were made here in the Chamber about not knowing where we stood with reference to helping undeveloped Siberian energy at all?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I think it is in response to the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania. He said we are taking all the risk. If there is a dry hole, we are taking the risk. If they happen to hit oil and gas, everybody will be happy to come in and put up money to finance it.

The only risk we are taking is not whether they are hitting a dry hole or not. The risk is will they pay us back.

If we extend credit and they buy drilling rigs, will they pay us back, whether they hit a dry hole or not?

Senator HUMPHREY has said time and time again—and his is correct—the Russian repayment record is excellent. I am not talking about the World War II lend lease.

Mr. DOMENICI. On the other hand, the objection of the Senator from New Mexico was that we have a worldwide shortage of technology and exploration equipment. We do not yet know whether or not it should be used in Siberia or in more friendly nations. I take it that with reference to that concern we have not directed our attention there other, than no more than $40 million out of the $300 million will be used there; is that correct?

Mr. PACKWOOD. We have not in this act. We have, under the Export Control Act, the power to prohibit the export of any item, of any kind, to the Soviet Union or any other country. If the Senator from New Mexico is worried about the export of these rigs, which are paid for, and we have enough here, then I think the concern should be worldwide rather than just the Soviet Union. The particular amendment of the Senator from Idaho was limited to the Soviet Union, and this amendment is limited to the Soviet Union.

Mr. DOMENICI. I understand that. However, the Senator from New Mexico knows it is worldwide. My concern remains that if we have to pick and choose we may have no alternative to pick and choose if it is in Russia and there are more friendly nations where this short supply of rigs, tool and die, equipment, tubular equipment, could be placed. Once we have made certain commitments to use it in Siberia, we could not pick and choose. My concern remains as I see it, other than it has a $40 million limitation on it. Is that correct?

Mr. PACKWOOD. No, I do not think so. There is a $5 billion increase in authorization in this bill, apart from the $300 million lid on the authorization to the Soviet Union. The $5 billion can be used any place, for drilling rigs or for anything else. We are not really faced with an either/or alternative. If you used all $300 million of this money for the Soviet Union, you would still be left with $4.7 billion to extend credits or loans elsewhere.

December 19, 1974

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator. Mr. PACKWOOD. Just so there is no misunderstanding, let me say the $300 million provided for future financing of exports to the Soviet Union is not viewed by the conferees as being an absolute, inviolate ceiling. Our options will remain open. Foremost in our minds was the need for Congress to approve of any financing in excess of the $300 million level. Under the terms of the conference report, this can be done.

Congress will stand ready to consider a higher ceiling for transactions with the Soviet Union at any time the President submits a recommendation. We will deal with any such recommendation on its merits and act accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I cannot say anything substantively on the conference report which has not already been said. But as the ranking minority member of the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee, from which this bill emanated, I would be remiss if I did not make note here of the superb job that the manager of the bill on behalf of the minority (Mr. Packwood) has done in getting this measure to the Senate, getting it to conference, and getting it out of conference.

The conference procedure was extremely difficult. There were some rather sharp disagreements between House and Senate conferees. Throughout all of this, Senator PACKWOOD deported himself in a manner that reflects credit to the Senate, to himself, to his State, and to our committee. He has done a superlative legislative job.

I would not like to see us finally act on this measure without commending him for the very splendid managerial job that he has done on this bill.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I rise to speak in support of this conference report on the Export-Import Bank Act Amendments of 1974.

After long and detailed debate on this legislation, in committee, on the Senate floor, and in three conferences with the House, I think we have finally arrived at a satisfactory result: a conference report which adequately reflects the views and concerns of the Senate in this matter.

I commend the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD), the majority and minority leaders on this bill, for their long and diligent work on this important legislation. I also think it is in order to commend a number of other Senators, most particularly the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN), and the Senator from Virginia (Mr. BYRD), for the major contributions they made to educating the Senate and the public on the issues involved in this legislation and to achieving a conference report which offers a reasonable compromise on these issues. Finally, I would like to express to the other distinguished Senators my appreciation for their respecting our right to conduct a prolonged discussion of these issues and for voting overwhelmingly on two occasions to stand firm on the Senate position in conference. It is only because of this strong support that we are able to bring before the Senate today an Export-Import Bank Act conference report which is really responsive to the major concerns of the Senate.

The provisions contained in this conference report have been described in some detail by my colleagues. I would simply note that this Eximbank Act extension now includes a $300 million limitation on Bank loans and financial guarantees to the Soviet Union, and this ceiling can only be raised on recommendation of the President if both Houses of Congress express their approval through a concurrent resolution. We also now have a requirement for prenotification of loans, guarantees, or combinations thereof of $60 million or more to Congress at least 25 days of continuous session prior to final approval of the transaction.

By action taken in conference yesterday, the Bank will go back in the Federal budget effective at the close of September 30, 1976. This repeals the language adopted by Congress in 1971 removing the Bank from the budget and restore it to the budget and to the full scrutiny of the Appropriations Committees starting with fiscal year 1977. Finally, the conferees agreed to place a limitation of $40 million on loans and financial guarantees to the Soviet Union for fossil fuel energy research or exploration, and to bar altogether loans or guarantees for the production of fossil fuel energy resources in the Soviet Union. This limitation can only be raised at the recommendation of the President if Congress agrees by concurrent resolution. Although this language does not meet all of the concerns expressed by some Senators, I do feel that it represents a reasonable compromise and a very substantial improvement over the language in previous conference reports.

I should like to say a few more words about the budget provision in the conference report. Section 13 of that report states that effective at the close of September 30, 1976, section 2(a) (2) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 is repealed. That section, passed in 1971, excluded the Bank's receipts and disbursements from the Federal budget totals and exempted the Bank from any annual expenditure and net lending—budget outlays—limitations imposed on the budget. As the Senators know, I sponsored the amendment to repeal the budget exemption, which the Senate has now approved on two occasions, most recently by a vote of 81 to 8. I am pleased that this conference report includes a firm determination that the Eximbank will go back in the Federal budget, effective for fiscal year 1977.

This action by Congress to repeal the first of several statutory budget exemptions passed by Congress in recent years—and the largest one in terms of net lending volume—is most significant and indicates a continuing commitment to fiscal responsibility and to the establishment of congressional control of the budget. That commitment has been shown in the passage of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, in a multitude of cuts made in fiscal year appropriations bills this session, and now in this repeal of the Eximbank's budget exemption, which should set a precedent for consideration of other statutory budget exemptions.

Under the Congressional Budget Act, the Budget Committees of the Senate and House are directed to study on a continuing basis those provisions of law which exempt agencies of the Federal Government, or any of their activities or outlays, from inclusion in the budget.

The chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, the distinguished Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), stated here on the Senate floor that action by the Congress now to repeal the Eximbank's budget exemption was not inconsistent with this provision in the budget control legislation, since the October 1, 1976 effective date gives the Budget Committees ample time to conduct their study, while giving evidence of the Senate's desire with respect to the Eximbank. I am pleased to have the views of the Senator from Maine on this question, and I look forward to following the deliberations of his committee with great interest. As the Senator knows, it is the authorizing committees which must take final action on the matter of these statutory budget exemptions, in light of the recommendations of the Budget Committees, and most of the agencies involved here fall within the jurisdiction of the Banking Committees of both Houses of Congress.

The conferees, in agreeing to this provision repealing the Eximbank's budget exemption, took note of the fact that this matter would be under consideration by the Budget Committees. Language in the explanatory statement of the conference committee indicates that this action is not intended to prejudice the recommendations of the Budget Committees with respect to this question. As I have stated, I shall follow the progress of this study with great interest, and I think it will be valuable for all of us to have a detailed study with recommendations by the Budget Committees on the question of the proper budget status of agencies currently exempted from the Federal budget.

At the same time, I am pleased that Congress has now made an affirmative commitment to place the Export-Import Bank back in the budget. This is an important question, and I think it is proper for Congress to act to resolve it now, when we have this 4-year extension of the Bank in front of us and when we are facing great problems of inflation, high interest rates, and lack of credit available to meet pressing domestic needs such as housing, farming, and business investment.

Putting the Export-Import Bank back in the budget will make the Bank more accountable to Congress and to the American people for the loans it makes and the effect of its lending activities on the economy as a whole. It will enable us to balance competing demands for credit resources against each other and to set national priorities. Passage of this legislation today indicates the commitment of Congress to the principles of fiscal responsibility and congressional control of Federal spending.

I support final passage of the conference report on the Export-Import Bank Act Amendments of 1974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I want to be associated with the remarks of the Senator from Texas, and thank the very skillful Senator from Oregon for his cooperation, his help, and the hard work that he has invested in this effort, which I believe has led now to a very good piece of legislation which will produce an Export-Import Bank which will, in turn, continue its activity in support of U.S. exports abroad.

Mr. President, with that being said, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the conference report. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) is necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), and the Senator from Florida (Mr. GURNEY) are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 71, nays 24, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT). There will be order in the Senate.

DESIGNATION OF A NATIONAL LABORATORY AS THE "HOLIFIELD NATIONAL LABORATORY"—H.R. 17628

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 17628.

I ask that there be a 1-minute time limitation on this measure. It has been cleared on both sides of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate H.R. 17628, an act to designate a national laboratory as the "Holifield National Laboratory," which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A CONCURRENT RESOLUTION AUTHORIZING A CORRECTION IN THE ENROLLMENT OF H.R. 14689—HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 694

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a message from the House be laid before the Senate on House Concurrent Resolution 694, with a 1-minute time limitation. This has been cleared on both sides of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 694) authorizing a correction in the enrollment of H.R. 14689.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

H.R. 11897—AN ACT TO NAME THE U.S. COURTHOUSE AND FEDERAL OFFICE BUILDING AT 110 MICHIGAN STREET NW., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., THE "PRESIDENT GERALD R. FORD FEDERAL OFFICE BUILDING"

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 11897, with a 1-minute time limitation. This has been cleared on both sides of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate H.R. 11897, and act to name the U.S. Courthouse and Federal Office Building at 110 Michigan Street NW., Grand Rapids, Mich., the "President Gerald R. Ford Federal Office Building", which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. HRUSKA) may proceed for not to exceed 2 minutes, after which the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) has a matter he wishes to call up. I understand the time limitation is agreeable to both sides. The time limitation is not to exceed 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IMPROVEMENT OF JUDICIAL MACHINERY

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 663.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 663) to improve judicial machinery by amending title 28, United States Code, with respect to judicial review of decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission and for other purposes as follows:

Page 4, line 11, strike out "(h)", and insert: "(g)".

Page 4, line 15, after "28", insert: "of the United States", Code.

Page 4, line 19, strike out "Commission", and insert: "Commission".

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, the House returned this bill with minor technical amendments. Having cleared the matter with the leadership on both sides, with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and with others on that committee, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF TITLE VIII OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT TO REVISE AND EXTEND THE PROGRAMS OF ASSISTANCE UNDER THAT TITLE FOR NURSE TRAINING

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 17085.

December 19, 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate H.R. 17085, an act to amend title VIII of the Public Health Service Act to revise and extend the programs of assistance under that title for nurse training, which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause and substitute an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives (H.R. 17085) entitled "An Act to amend title VIII of the Public Health Service Act to revise and extend the programs of assistance under that title for nurse training", do pass with the following amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE TO ACT

SECTION 1. (a) This Act may be cited as the "Nurse Training Act of 1974".

(b) Whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Public Health Service Act.

TITLE I—CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE
EXTENSION OF GRANTS AND LOAN GUARANTEES AND INTEREST SUBSIDIES

SEC. 101. (a) (1) Section 801 is amended by striking out "and" after "1973", and by inserting before the period a comma and the following: "$25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977".

(2) Section 802(c) (1) (A) is amended (A) by inserting "(1)" after "proposed facilities", and (B) by inserting before the semicolon, or (1) in expanding the capacity of the school to provide graduate training".

(b) (1) (A) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 809 are each amended by striking out "1974" and inserting in lieu thereof "1977".

(B) (1) The last sentence of subsection (a) of section 809 is amended (1) by striking out "(1)" and (2) by striking out all after "the project" and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

(1) The amendment made by clause (1) shall apply with respect to loans guaranteed under subpart I of part A of title VIII of the Public Health Service Act after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) Subsection (e) of such section is amended by striking out "and" after "1973", and by inserting after "1974" a comma and the following: "$2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977", and by inserting a period after "Treasury" the second time it appears in the fourth sentence and by striking out the remainder of that sentence.

(c) (1) Subsection (a) of section 809 is amended by inserting "or the Federal Financing Bank" after "non-Federal lenders".

(2) Subsection (b) of section 809 is amended by inserting "or the Federal financing bank" after "non-Federal lenders".

TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

SEC. 102. (a) (1) Title VIII is amended by inserting after the heading for part A the following:

"Subpart I—Construction Assistance".

(2) The heading for part A is amended by striking out "GRANTS" and inserting in lieu thereof "ASSISTANCE".

(b) Section 809 is inserted after section 804 and is redesignated as section 805.

TITLE II—CAPITATION GRANTS

EXTENSION AND REVISION OF CAPITATION GRANTS

SEC. 201. (a) Section 808(a) is amended by striking out paragraphs (1) and (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) Each collegiate school of nursing shall receive $400 for each student enrolled in each of the last two years of such school in such year.

"(2) Each associate degree school of nursing shall receive $275 for each student enrolled in the last year of such school in such year.

"(3) Each diploma school of nursing shall receive $250 for each full-time student enrolled in such school in such year."

(b) (1) Subsections (c), (d), and (f) of section 806 are repealed and subsections (e), (g), (h), and (i) are redesignated as subsections (c), (d), (e), and (f), respectively.

(2) Section 805(f) (1) (as so redesignated by paragraph (1) of this subsection) is amended by striking out "and" after "1973", and by inserting before "for grants" the following: "$45,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $55,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977".

(c) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for each of the next two fiscal years, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to continue to make annual grants to schools of nursing under section 808 (a) of the Public Health Service Act (as in effect before the date of the enactment of this Act) based on the number of enrollment bonus students (determined in accordance with subsections (c) and (d) of section 806 of such Act (as so in effect)) enrolled in such schools who were first-year students in such schools for school years beginning before June 30, 1974.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. 202. Title VIII is amended by inserting after section 805 (as so redesignated by section 102(b) of this Act) the following:

"Subpart II—Capitation Grants".

TITLE III—FINANCIAL DISTRESS GRANTS
EXTENSION OF FINANCIAL DISTRESS GRANT PROGRAM

SEC. 301. Title VIII is amended by inserting after subpart II of part A (as provided by title II of this Act) the following:

"Subpart III—Financial Distress Grants

"FINANCIAL DISTRESS GRANTS

"Sec. 815. (a) The Secretary may make grants to assist public or nonprofit private schools of nursing which are in serious financial straits to meet operational costs required to maintain quality educational programs or which have special need for financial assistance to meet accreditation requirements. Any such grant may be made upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines to be reasonable and necessary, including requirements that the school agree (1) to disclose any financial information or data deemed by the Secretary to be necessary to determine the sources or causes of that school's financial distress, (2) to conduct a comprehensive cost analysis study in cooperation with the Secretary, and (3) to carry out appropriate operational and financial reforms on the basis of information obtained in the course of the comprehensive cost analysis study or on the basis of other relevant information.

"(b) (1) No grant may be made under subsection (a) unless an application thereof is submitted to and approved by the Secretary. The Secretary may not approve or disapprove such an application except after consultation with the National Advisory Council on Nurse Training.

"(2) An application for a grant under subsection (a) must contain or be supported by assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that the applicant will expend in carrying out its functions as a school of nursing, during the fiscal year for which such grant is sought, an amount of funds (other than funds for construction as determined by the Secretary) from non-Federal sources which is at least as great as the average amount of funds expended by such applicant for such purpose (excluding expenditures of a nonrecurring nature) in the three fiscal years immediately preceding the fiscal year for which such grant is sought. The Secretary may, after consultation with the National Advisory Council on Nurse Training, waive the requirement of the preceding sentence with respect to any school if he determines that the application of such requirement to such school would be inconsistent with the purposes of subsection (a).

"(c) For payments under grants under this section there are authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977."

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. 302. Section 805 and 808 (as in effect on the date before the date of the enactment of this Act) are repealed.

TITLE IV—SPECIAL PROJECT ASSISTANCE
SPECIAL PROJECT GRANTS AND CONTRACTS

SEC. 401. (a) Title VIII is amended by inserting after subpart III of part A (as added by section 301(a) of this Act) the following:

"Subpart IV—Special Projects

"SPECIAL PROJECT GRANTS AND CONTRACTS

"Sec. 820. (a) The Secretary may make grants to public and other nonprofit private schools of nursing and other public or nonprofit private entities, and enter into contracts with any public or private entity, to meet the costs of special projects to—

"(1) assist in—
"(A) mergers between hospital training programs or between hospital training programs and academic institutions, or
"(B) other cooperative arrangements among hospitals and academic institutions, leading to the establishment of nurse training programs;

"(2) plan, develop, or establish new nurse training programs or programs of research in nursing education, significantly improve curriculums of schools of nursing, or modify existing programs of nursing education;

"(3) increase nursing education opportunities for individuals from disadvantaged backgrounds, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, by—

"(A) identifying, recruiting, and selecting such individuals,

"(B) facilitating entry of such individuals into schools of nursing,

"(C) providing counseling or other services designed to assist such individuals to complete successfully their nursing education,

"(D) providing, for a period prior to the entry of such individuals into the regular course of education at a school of nursing, preliminary education designed to assist them to complete successfully such regular course of education,

"(E) paying such stipends (including allowances for travel and dependents) as the Secretary may determine for such individuals for any period of nursing education, and

"(F) publicizing, especially to licensed vocational or practical nurses, existing sources of financial aid available to persons enrolled in schools of nursing or who are undertaking training necessary to qualify them to enroll in such schools;

"(4) provide continuing education for nurses;

"(5) provide appropriate retraining opportunities for nurses who (after periods of professional inactivity) desire again actively to engage in the nursing profession:

"(6) help to increase the supply or improve the distribution by geographic area or by specialty group of adequately trained nursing personnel (including nursing personnel who are bilingual) needed to meet the health needs of the Nation, including the need to increase the availability of personal health services and the need to promote preventive health care; or

"(7) provide training and education to upgrade the skills of licensed vocational or practical nurses, nursing assistants, and other paraprofessional nursing personnel.

Contracts may be entered into under this subsection without regard to sections 3648 and 3709 of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. 529; 41 U.S.C. 5).

"(b) The Secretary may, with the advice of the National Advisory Council on Nurse Training, provide assistance to the heads of other departments and agencies of the Government to encourage and assist in the utilization of medical facilities under their jurisdiction for nurse training programs.

"(c) No grant or contract may be made under this section unless an application therefor has been submitted to and approved by the Secretary. The Secretary may not approve or disapprove such an application except after consultation with the National Advisory Council on Nurse Training. Such an application shall provide for such fiscal control and accounting procedures and reports, and access to the records of the applicant, as the Secretary may require to assure proper disbursement of and accounting for Federal funds paid to the applicant under this section.

"(d) For payments under grants and contracts under this section there are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977. Not less than 10 per centum of the funds appropriated under this subsection for any fiscal year shall be used for payments under grants and contracts to meet the costs of the special projects described in subsection (a) (3).

ADVANCED NURSE TRAINING PROGRAMS

"Sec. 821. (a) (1) The Secretary may make grants to and enter into contracts with public and nonprofit private collegiate schools of nursing to meet the costs of projects to—

- "(A) plan, develop, and operate,
- "(B) significantly expand, or
- "(C) maintain existing, programs for the advanced training of professional nurses to teach in the various fields of nurse training, to serve in administrative or supervisory capacities, or to serve in other professional nursing specialties (including service as nurse clinicians) determined by the Secretary to require advanced training.

"(b) For the purposes of making payments under grants and contracts under this section there are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977.

NURSE PRACTITIONER PROGRAMS

"Sec. 822. (a) (1) The Secretary may make grants to and enter into contracts with public or nonprofit private schools of nursing, medicine, and public health, public or nonprofit private hospitals, and other public or nonprofit private entities to meet the cost of projects to—

- "(A) plan, develop, and operate,
- "(B) significantly expand, or
- "(C) maintain existing, programs for the training of nurse practitioners.

"(2) (A) For purposes of this section, the term 'programs for the training of nurse practitioners' means educational programs which meet guidelines prescribed by the Secretary in accordance with subparagraph (B) and which have as their objective the education of nurses (including pediatric and geriatric nurses) who will, upon completion of their studies in such a program, be qualified to effectively provide primary health care.

"(B) On or before March 1, 1975, after consultation with appropriate educational organizations and professional nursing and medical organizations, the Secretary shall prescribe guidelines for programs for nurse practitioners. Such guidelines shall, as a minimum, require—

- "(i) a program of classroom instruction and supervised clinical practice directed toward preparing nurses to deliver primary health care;
- "(ii) a minimum course of study of one academic year of which at least four months must be classroom instruction; and
- "(iii) a minimum level of enrollment in each year of not less than eight students.

"(b) No grant may be made or contract entered into to plan, develop, and operate a program for the training of nurse practitioners unless the application for the grant or contract contains assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that the program will upon its development meet the guidelines which are in effect under subsection (a) (2) (B); and no grant may be made or contract entered into to expand or maintain such a program unless the application for the grant or contract contains assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that the program meets the guidelines which are in effect under such subsection.

"(c) The costs for which a grant or contract under this section may be made may include costs of preparation of faculty members in order to conform to the guidelines established under subsection (a) (2) (B).

"(d) For the purposes of making payments under grants and contracts under this section there are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977.

"(e) Sections 810 and 868 are repealed.

TITLE V—ASSISTANCE TO NURSING STUDENTS

EXTENSION OF TRAINEESHIPS

Sec. 501. (a) Subsection (a) of section 821 (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) There are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977, to cover the costs of traineeships for the training of professional nurses—

- "(1) to teach in the various fields of nurse training (including practical nurse training),
- "(2) to serve in administrative or supervisory capacities,
- "(3) to serve as nurse practitioners, or
- "(4) to serve in other professional nursing specialties determined by the Secretary to require advanced training."

"(b) Section (b) of section 821 (as so in effect) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In making grants for traineeships under this section, the Secretary shall give special consideration to applications for traineeship programs which conform to guidelines established by the Secretary under section 822(a) (2) (B)."

EXTENSION OF STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM

Sec. 502. (a) Section 822(b) (4) (as in effect before the date of the enactment of this Act) is amended by striking out "1975" and inserting in lieu thereof "1977".

"(b) Section 823(b) (2) (B) is amended by inserting "or training to be a nurse anesthetist" after "professional training in nursing".

"(c) Effective July 1, 1974, section 824 is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR STUDENT LOAN FUNDS

"Sec. 824. There are authorized to be appropriated for allotments under section 825 to schools of nursing for Federal capital contributions to their student loan funds established under section 822, $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $35,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $40,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1978, and for each of the next two succeeding fiscal years there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to enable students who have received a loan for any academic year ending before July 1, 1977, to continue or complete their education."

"(d) Section 826 is amended by striking out "1977" each place it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "1980".

"(e) (1) Section 827 is repealed.

"(2) The nurse training fund created within the Treasury by section 827(d) (1) of the Public Health Service Act shall remain available to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for the purpose of meeting his responsibilities respecting participations in obligations acquired under section 827 of such Act. The Secretary shall continue to deposit in such fund all amounts received by him as interest payments or repayments of principal on loans under such section 827. If at any time the Secretary determines the moneys in the fund exceed the present and any reasonable prospective further requirements of such fund, such excess may be transferred to the general fund of the Treasury.

"(3) There are authorized to be appropriated without fiscal year limitation such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to make payments under agreements entered into under section 827(b) of the Public Health Service Act before the date of the enactment of this Act.

thetist)" after "professional training in nursing".

"(c) Effective July 1, 1974, section 824 is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR STUDENT LOAN FUNDS

"Sec. 824. There are authorized to be appropriated for allotments under section 825 to schools of nursing for Federal capital contributions to their student loan funds established under section 822, $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $35,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $40,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1978, and for each of the next two succeeding fiscal years there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to enable students who have received a loan for any academic year ending before July 1, 1977, to continue or complete their education."

"(d) Section 826 is amended by striking out "1977" each place it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "1980".

"(e) (1) Section 827 is repealed.

"(2) The nurse training fund created within the Treasury by section 827(d) (1) of the Public Health Service Act shall remain available to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for the purpose of meeting his responsibilities respecting participations in obligations acquired under section 827 of such Act. The Secretary shall continue to deposit in such fund all amounts received by him as interest payments or repayments of principal on loans under such section 827. If at any time the Secretary determines the moneys in the fund exceed the present and any reasonable prospective further requirements of such fund, such excess may be transferred to the general fund of the Treasury.

"(3) There are authorized to be appropriated without fiscal year limitation such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to make payments under agreements entered into under section 827(b) of the Public Health Service Act before the date of the enactment of this Act.

EXTENSION OF SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM

Sec. 503. Effective July 1, 1974, section 860 is amended—

- "(1) by striking out "1972" in subsection (b) and in subsection (c) (1) (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "1975";
- "(2) by striking out "1975" in the second sentence of subsection (b) and in subsection (c) (1) (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "1978"; and
- "(3) by striking out "1974" in the second sentence of subsection (b) and in subsection (c) (1) (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "1977".

TITLE VI—TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Sec. 601. (a) (1) Section 802 is amended—

- "(A) by striking out "this part" each place it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "this subpart";
- "(B) by striking out "subsection 806(c) of this Act" in subsection (b) (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "section 810(c)";
- "(C) by striking out paragraph (5) of subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(5) the application contains or is supported by adequate assurances that all laborers and mechanics employed by contractors, or subcontractors in the performance of work on a project will be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing on similar construction in the locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Act of March 3, 1931 (40 U.S.C. 276a—276a-5, known as the Davis-Bacon Act), and the Secretary of Labor shall have with respect to such labor standards the authority and functions set forth in Reorganization Plan Numbered 14 of 1950 (15 F.R. 3176; 5 U.S.C. Appendix) and section 2 of the Act of June 13, 1934 (40 U.S.C. 276c).";

"(F) by striking out "section 806(e)" in the last sentence following such paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof "section 810(c)";

"(G) by striking out in such last sentence "806(a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "810(a)"; and

"(H) by striking out "paragraph (A)" in subsection (c) (1) (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "subparagraph (A)".

"(b) (1) Subsection (a) of section 803 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The amount of any grant for a construction project under this subpart shall be such amount as the Secretary determines to be appropriate after obtaining the advice of the National Advisory Council on Nurse Training; except that—

- "(1) in the case of a grant—
- "(A) for a project for a new school,
- "(B) for a project for new facilities for an existing school in cases where such facilities are of particular importance in providing a major expansion of training capacity, as determined in accordance with regulations, or
- "(C) for a project for major remodeling or renovation of an existing facility where such project is required to meet an increase in student enrollment, the amount of such grant may not exceed 75 per centum of the necessary cost of construction, as determined by the Secretary, of such project; and

"(2) in the case of a grant for any other project, the amount of such grant may not, except where the Secretary determines that unusual circumstances make a larger percentage (which may in no case exceed 75 per centum) necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subpart, exceed 87 per centum of the necessary cost of construction, as so determined, of the project with respect to which the grant is made."

"(2) Subsections (b) and (c) of section 803 are each amended by striking out "this part" and inserting in lieu thereof "this subpart".

"(c) Section 804 is amended (1) by striking out "this part" and inserting in lieu thereof "this subpart"; and (2) by redesignating paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) as paragraphs (1), (2), and (3), respectively.

"(d) Section 805 (as redesignated by section 102(b)) is amended by striking out "this part" each place it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "this subpart".

"(e) Section 806 is redesignated as section 810.

"(f) Section 807 is redesignated as section 811 and is amended—

"(1) by striking out "section 805, 806, or 810" in subsections (a) and (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "this subpart"; and

"(2) by amending paragraph (1) of subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(1) is from a public or nonprofit private school of nursing";

"(g) (1) Title VIII is amended by inserting after the heading for part B the following: "Subpart I—Traineeships".

"(2) Section 821 (as amended by section 501) is redesignated as section 830.

"(3) Title VIII is amended by inserting after section 830 (as so redesignated) the following:

"Subpart II—Student Loans".

"(h) Section 822, 823, 825, 826, 828, and 830 (as in effect before the date of the en-

(B) Section 826(b) is amended by striking out "other than so much of such fund as relates to payments from the revolving fund established by section 827(d)".

(C) Section 828 is amended by striking out "or loans".

(5) Section 830 is—

- (A) transferred to section 823 and inserted after subsection (1) of such section; and
- (B) is amended by striking out "Sec. 830. (a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(j)".

(1) (1) Sections 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 828, and 829 (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act) are redesignated as sections 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, and 841, respectively.

(2) Section 835 (as so redesignated) is amended (A) by striking out "829" each place it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "841", and (B) by striking out "823" and inserting in lieu thereof "836".

(3) Section 837 (as so redesignated) is amended (A) by striking out "825" and inserting in lieu thereof "838", and (B) by striking out "822" and inserting in lieu thereof "835".

(4) Section 838 (as so redesignated) is amended by striking out "824" each place it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "837".

(5) Section 839 (as so redesignated) is amended by striking out "822" each place it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "835".

(6) Section 841 (as so redesignated) is amended (A) by striking out "822" and inserting in lieu thereof "835" and (B) by striking out "part D" and inserting in lieu thereof "subpart III of this part".

(j) (1) Part D of title VIII is inserted after subpart II of part B of such title and redesignated as subpart III; and section 860 and 861 are redesignated as sections 845 and 846, respectively.

(2) Section 845(a) (as so redesignated) is amended by striking out "this part" and inserting in lieu thereof "this section".

(3) Section 846 (as so redesignated) is amended (A) by striking out "this part" the first time it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "section 846", and (B) by striking out "to the sums available to the school under this part for (and to be regarded as) Federal capital contributions, to be used for the same purpose as such sums" and inserting in lieu thereof "to the student loan fund of the school established under an agreement under section 835. Funds transferred under this section to such a student loan fund shall be considered as part of the Federal capital contributions to such fund".

(4) Section 860 is repealed.

(k) (1) Sections 841, 842, 843, 844, and 845 (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act) are redesignated as sections 851, 852, 853, 854, and 855, respectively.

(2) Section 851 (as so redesignated) is amended (A) by striking out "part A of applications under section 805" in subsection (a) (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "subpart I of part A, of applications under subpart III of part A"; (B) by striking out subsection

(b); (C) by striking out "(a) (1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(a)"; and (D) by striking out "(2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(b)".

(3) Section 853 (as so redesignated) is amended—

- (A) by striking out "part A" in paragraph (f) and inserting in lieu thereof "subpart I of part A";
- (B) by striking out "806" in paragraph (f) and inserting in lieu thereof "810";
- (C) by striking out "part B" each place it occurs in paragraph (f) and inserting in lieu thereof "section 835";
- (D) by striking out "825" in paragraph (f) and inserting in lieu thereof "838";
- (E) by redesignating paragraph (a) through (j) as paragraphs (1) through (10) respectively;
- (F) by redesignating clauses (1), (2), and (3) of paragraph (6) (as so redesignated) as clauses (A), (B), and (C), respectively;
- (G) by redesignating subclauses (A) and (B) of such paragraph (6) as subclauses (i) and (ii), respectively; and
- (H) by redesignating clauses (1) and (2) of paragraph (9) (as so redesignated) as clauses (A) and (B), respectively.

(4) Part C is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"DELEGATION

"Sec. 856. The Secretary may delegate the authority to administer any program authorized by this title to the administrator of a central or regional office or offices in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, except that the authority—

- "(1) to review, and prepare comments on the merit of, any application for a grant or contract under any program authorized by this title for purposes of presenting such application to the National Advisory Council on Nurse Training; or
- "(2) to make such a grant or enter into such a contract, shall not be further delegated to any administrator of, or officer in, any regional office or offices."

TITLE VII—MISCELLANEOUS

INFORMATION RESPECTING THE SUPPLY AND DISTRIBUTION OF AND REQUIREMENTS FOR NURSES

Sec. 701. (a) (1) Using procedures developed in accordance with paragraph (3), the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall determine on a continuing basis—

- (A) the supply (both current and projected and within the United States and within each State) of registered nurses, licensed practical and vocational nurses, nurse's aides, registered nurses with advanced training or graduate degrees, and nurse practitioners;
- (B) the distribution, within the United States and within each State, of such nurses so as to determine those areas of the United States which are oversupplied, undersupplied, or which have an adequate supply of such nurses in relation to the population of the areas and the demand for the services which such nurses provide; and
- (C) the current and future requirements for such nurses, nationally and within each State.

(2) The Secretary shall survey and gather data, on a continuing basis, on—

- (A) the number and distribution of nurses, by type of employment and location of practice;
- (B) the number of nurses who are practicing full time and those who are employed part time, within the United States and within each State;
- (C) the average rates of compensation for nurses, by type of practice and location of practice;
- (D) the activity status of the total number of registered nurses within the United States and within each State;

(E) the number of nurses with advanced training or graduate degrees in nursing, by specialty, including nurse practitioners, nurse clinicians, nurse researchers, nurse educators, and nurse supervisors and administrators; and

(F) the number of registered nurses entering the United States annually from other nations, by country of nurse training and by immigrant status.

(3) Within six months of the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall develop procedures for determining (on both a current and projected basis) the supply and distribution of and requirements for nurses within the United States and within each State.

(b) Not later than February 1, 1976, and February 1 of each succeeding year, the Secretary shall report to the Congress—

(1) his determinations under subsection (a) (1) and the data gathered under subsection (a) (2);

(2) an analysis of such determination and data; and

(3) recommendations for such legislation as the Secretary determines, based on such determinations and data, will achieve (A) an equitable distribution of nurses within the United States and within each State, and

(B) adequate supplies of nurses within the United States and within each State.

(c) The Office of Management and Budget may review the Secretary's report under this section before its submission to the Congress, but the Office may not revise the report or delay its submission, and it may submit to the Congress its comments (and those of other departments or agencies of the Government) respecting such report.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

Sec. 702. (a) The Health Revenue Sharing and Health Services Act of 1974 is amended by striking out section 305 and by redesignating section 306 as section 305.

(b) Section 401(a) of such Act is amended by striking out "310" and inserting in lieu thereof "319"; and the section amended by such section 401(a) is amended by striking out "310" and inserting in lieu thereof "319".

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the amendment that I have sent to the desk is in behalf of myself, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. PELL, Mr. NELSON, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. MONDALE, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. HATHAWAY, Mr. SCHWEIKER, Mr. BEALL, and Mr. STAFFORD.

This, for the information of the Senate, is the Nurses' Training Act. It will be a continuation of the capitation program which we presently have under implementation. It will provide a modest construction program, and also a nurse training scholarship program. It has been supplemented this year with a program to provide extended nurse training, and also to provide for additional graduate training for nurses.

Otherwise, it is virtually the continuation of the program which has been in existence, and builds upon that program. It is urgently needed at the present time.

The amendment has been worked out with the excellent help and cooperation of the members of the House Subcommittee on Public Health and Environment, which is chaired by my friend and colleague the distinguished PAUL G. ROGERS of Florida.

I understand that this amendment is acceptable to the House. And I hope and expect that this legislation can be expedited by the House prior to adjournment.

Before describing the bill, Mr. President I want to take this opportunity to briefly summarize the nature of the amendments now pending.

The House-passed bill contains a wholly new program to encourage the training of nurse practitioners. This is a most welcome development because there is reason to believe that increased numbers of high quality nurse practitioners will be of assistance in providing more primary health care to the American people. Five of the amendments propose changes for this new program. First of all we propose to increase the range of eligible applicants from just collegiate schools of nursing to all schools of nursing as well as schools of public health and medicine and public or nonprofit private hospitals.

Second, the amendment proposes to include pediatric and geriatric nurses within the scope of the program.

In addition the amendment liberalizes two provisions concerning the nurse practitioner course of study. My amendment requires that not less than eight students be enrolled in an approved program and that the minimum course of study be 1 academic year of which at least 4 months must be classroom instruction.

And finally the amendment broadens the professional and educational groups with which the Secretary of HEW must consult in the development of guidelines for the program to include appropriate educational and medical organizations.

Mr. President, my amendment also adds an additional program to the special project authority contained in the bill. This new authority is specifically designed to enhance professional mobility within the nursing profession by providing support for programs to upgrade nursing skills.

In addition the amendment adds authority in the special projects program to emphasize increasing the supply of nursing personnel who are bilingual.

Finally with regard to the special projects programs the amendment earmarks not less than 10 percent of the funds appropriated be reserved for programs to encourage the full utilization of educational talent in the nursing profession.

In deleting the special program "full utilization of educational talent" and, in its place, including programs for the recruitment and retention of students from disadvantaged backgrounds among those authorized under the special project grant authority of the new section 820 of the Public Health Service Act, there was no intent to change the intent or scope of the current program which has been administered under the authorities of the current section 868 of the Public Health Service Act. It is stressed that in addition to the categories of individuals who are specified in the current section 868, it is important to recruit individuals with the ability to speak a language—in addition to English—used by major U.S. population groups with limited English-speaking ability, as is made clear in the new section 820(a) (6) of the bill as amended by the Senate—special project grant for increased bilingual nursing personnel.

To insure that the level of support available for programs for the recruitment and retention of prospective students who are disadvantaged due to socioeconomic factors is maintained at least at the level of previous years, no less than 10 percent of the funds appropriated for special projects under the authority of the new subsection 820(d) are earmarked for this purpose.

The amendment finally proposed two technical and conforming changes to the Health Revenue Sharing and Service Act of 1974, H.R. 14214.

I specifically want to point out to my colleagues that the proposed amendment to the bill includes no increase in funding levels. The total cost for fiscal year 1974 in the House-passed bill is $187 million which compares to a total of $254.5 million for fiscal year 1974.

I am very pleased to be able to bring this bill to the floor today. As you know the issue of health manpower is of major concern to all of us in the Labor and Public Welfare Committee. We have studied the issue carefully. The Nurse Training Act is really the only significant education and today I am asking your support of my amendment to H.R. 17085 which extends the current law with some significant additions and deletions for a 3-year period.

To briefly summarize the nursing statistics there are some 823,000 RN's now practicing. About 226,000 of those work part time. Three years ago when we enacted Public Law 92-581 there were 187,551 students enrolled in nursing schools. Last year, there were 232,589 students for a gain of 45,038. Keeping in mind that the administration never requested budget support for most programs of the Nurse Training Act and that capitation was as a result only funded at about 40 percent of authorization, this is a very significant increase. Graduations have increased from 47,000 in 1971 to 58,307 in 1973—again a significant gain. The major purpose of the 1971 law was to increase numbers and to improve quality of programs so I think the results show that we in the Congress were on the right track. Nursing schools should be commended for their response. We hope they will put greater emphasis on preparing their graduates to practice in communities in real need of their services. That includes big city hospitals and nursing homes as well as urban clinics and rural communities.

The bonus provision for nurse practitioners in the current law and the eligibility requirements for capitation that required every school to carry out three projects in specific areas to move the schools in the direction we felt was necessary—both of these were Senate provisions—have had a real impact. Nursing schools are increasingly adapting their curriculums to include the nurse practitioner skills in the basic programs. However, in the interim and for those nurses that have been out of schools for a period of time the provisions of section 822 in the bill before you for the first time earmarks funds exclusively for the development, maintenance, and evaluation of nurse practitioner programs.

The more effective utilization of nurses in providing health care—sometimes referred to as expansion of the nursing role—is an encouraging development. We have examples of rural and inner-city communities in which the only available health care is being provided by nurses. The States of Washington, New Mexico, California, Tennessee, North Carolina, and my own State of Massachusetts are just a few places where this is now being effectively demonstrated. The continuation of some of the outreach clinics after Federal demonstration grants expire is a point that we must watch as third party payers continue to refuse to pay reimbursement for nursing services not provided in close proximity to a physician. In such circumstances the clinics may have to close for economic reasons even though their quality of care and effectiveness is proven and a real community need is being met. I should point out that the clinics I refer to do have physician support and consultation. It is just that the physician may be 20 miles away and visits the clinic at intervals.

To mention a few other points in terms of the effectiveness of the current law some 26,000 students are receiving nursing student loans, 20,000 are on nursing scholarships and 3,800 are in advanced training programs with traineeship assistance. Obviously, in today's economy, these student aid programs are badly needed.

The Institute of Medicine cost study reports several important facts about Federal support of schools of the health professions. Out of more than 1,600 schools providing education in the eight health professions studied over 1,300 of those are nursing schools. Two-thirds of all health professional students are in nursing. Nursing schools get no significant amounts of research funds and patient care dollars go to hospital-based schools only. The bulk of support for nursing schools comes from tuition and State and local funding. There are schools of nursing in every State of the Union. My own State has 60 nursing programs and 10,500 undergraduate students.

There are, however, still major geographic differences in the nurse-to-population ratios State to State.

In its testimony before our Health Subcommittee on June 26 of this year, the ANA stated that:

Federal support for nursing education has made it possible for many young people to enter nursing who otherwise would not have been able to do so and for others to obtain the graduate education necessary for increased nursing responsibilities today. Nurses are functioning in many new ways, expanding their roles to fill gaps in health care, and working to upgrade the quality of care that is available. The potential benefits in improved health care of expanding the scope of nursing practice were outlined in the 1971 report of H.E.W. Secretary's committee to study extended roles for nurses. That this potential is beginning to be realized today is due in no small measure to the federal assistance which the Congress has made available to nursing schools and students.

The bill before you today will provide funds for some of the activities started under the expiring law and it adds two significant new sections that will provide the resources needed to greatly increase the number of nurses prepared as nurse practitioners, clinical specialists, and administrators of nursing services.

These are the areas in which there is unanimous agreement among all the nursing groups, that greatest need for increased numbers exists. We think these provisions—section 821 and 822—pinpoint the move where it will do the most good.

Mr. President, I now want to briefly describe this vital health measure.

TITLE I—CONSTRUCTION GRANTS—SECTION 101

This provision remains essentially the same and authorized $25 million for fiscal year 1975 and for each of the two succeeding years. Priority in funding is established for expanding the capacity of schools to provide for the major expansion required if enrollments of nurses for advanced training are to be adequately expanded.

TITLE II—CAPITATION GRANTS—SECTION 201

There are several significant changes in this section. For the first time there is a different amount designated for different types of nursing schools. The reason for this is to reflect the differences in costs as determined by the Institute of Medicine cost study. Capitation grants are restricted to undergraduate programs as there is a special section in this bill to fund advanced training.

Baccalaureate degree programs are eligible for $400 per student enrolled in the last 2 years of the program.

Associate degree programs—community or junior colleges—are eligible for $275 per student enrolled in the last year of the program.

Diploma—hospital-based—schools are eligible for $250 per full-time student enrolled for each year of the program.

Authorizations for appropriations for capitation are $45 million in fiscal 1974, $50 million for fiscal 1976 and $55 million for fiscal 1977. Provision is made for funds to be appropriated to continue payment for "enrollment bonus students" for students enrolled as first year students in such schools for school years beginning before June 30, 1974.

TITLE III—FINANCIAL DISTRESS GRANTS

This program is continued to provide special assistance to schools of nursing that are in serious financial straits to meet operational costs required to maintain quality educational programs or which have special need for financial assistance to meet accreditation requirements.

The Secretary of DHEW must consult with the national advisory council on nurse training before approving or disapproving an application for a financial distress grant.

The authorization is $5 million for each of the 3 years 1975-1977.

TITLE IV—SPECIAL GRANTS AND CONTRACTS—SECTION 820

This section has provided funds to schools and health agencies to try out better methods of teaching to better utilize faculty, increase enrollment and several other types of projects. The new provision makes some modifications providing funds for:

Mergers between hospital training programs or between hospital training programs and academic institutions, or

Other cooperative arrangements among hospitals and academic institutions, leading to the establishment of nurse training programs;

Plan, develop, or establish new nurse training programs or programs of research in nursing education, significantly improve curriculums of schools of nursing, or modify existing programs of nursing education;

Increase nursing education opportunities for individuals from disadvantaged backgrounds, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, by:

Identifying, recruiting, and selecting such individuals.

Facilitating entry of such individuals into schools of nursing.

Providing counseling or other services designed to assist such individuals to complete successfully their nursing education.

Providing, for a period prior to the entry of such individuals into the regular course of education at a school of nursing, preliminary education designed to assist them to complete successfully such regular course of education.

Paying such stipends—including allowances for travel and dependents—as the Secretary may determine for such individuals for any period of nursing education, and Publicizing, especially to licensed vocational or practical nurses, existing sources of financial aid available to persons enrolled in schools of nursing or who are undertaking training necessary to qualify them to enroll in such schools; Provide continuing education for nurses.

Provide appropriate retraining opportunities for nurses who—after period of professional inactivity—desire again actively to engage in the nursing professions; or

Help to increase the supply or improve the distribution by geographic area or by specialty group of adequately trained nursing personnel needed to meet the health needs of the Nation, including the need to increase the availability of personal health services and the need to promote preventive health care.

Again the National Advisory Council on Nurse Training must review all applications for these project grants.

SECTION 831—ADVANCED NURSE TRAINING

This is one of the new section I referred to earlier. It provides funds for graduate programs and other advanced training programs to meet the costs of projects to plan, develop, operate, significantly expand enrollments and maintain existing programs, for the advanced training of professional nurses to teach, to serve as administrators of nursing services, or to practice in nursing specialties including nurse clinicians of various types determined by the Secretary to require advanced training. Authorizations are $20 million for fiscal 1975, $25 million in fiscal 1976 and $30 million for fiscal 1977.

We have great hopes that the size of grants made to schools under this section will be adequate to provide for a very significant increase in those categories mentioned above by 1978.

SECTION 822—NURSE PRACTITIONER PROGRAMS

The nurse practitioner and nurse clinician movements hold great potential for improving primary care to the American public. The early programs have ruled out appropriate teaching methods and have demonstrated the effectiveness of the care provided. The field is now ready for an increase in the number of nurse faculty prepared to teach in these special programs and for a major increase in the number of practitioners to be prepared, the time for these increases is now. I am gratified at the progress being made in this regard but there is a long way to go. The quality of these educational programs is important. We want only well-prepared nurses functioning as nurse practitioners. We want first-class health care provided by expert nurses working in cooperative relationships with physicians.

Just teaching by physicians and nurses needs to be provided first. Funds for such purposes are provided in this section of the bill.

Grants can be made to plan, develop, operate, significantly expand or to maintain existing programs for training nurse practitioners.

Authorizations for this section are $20 million for fiscal year 1975, $20 million for fiscal 1976 and $30 million for fiscal year 1977.

TITLE V—ASSISTANCE TO NURSING STUDENTS

There are currently some 26,000 nursing students receiving loans under the nurse training act. Only 20,000 are now receiving scholarship aid since the President's budget eliminated any new awards. Some 3,800 RN's are receiving traineeships for advanced training.

Authorizations for traineeships in H.R. 17085 are $20 million for the first year, $25 million for the second and $30 million for the final year included in the bill.

Student loan authorizations are $30 million in fiscal 1975, $35 million in 1976 and $40 million in 1977.

The scholarship program has an open-ended authorization to cover the formula which is based on the number of students.

That, in brief, is a summary of the bill before you. The total authorization is well below the current authorization and is close for most sections of the bill to the last amount appropriated by the Congress.

The total authorization for this bill is $187 million as compared to $254.5 million for fiscal year 1974.

Section 858 speaks to the delegation of authority for programs authorized by this bill. I am sure many of you share my frustration in trying to get information about the numbers of grants, numbers of students on scholarships or loans and so on, now that there is no centralized administration for these programs. It is our intent to change this by specifying central office control of the review and award mechanisms. I would like to be able to call the division of nursing for all information on these programs and have adequate staff and resources to quickly respond.

I urge the adoption of the amendment. Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support the proposed Senate amendments to the House passed H.R. 17085, the Nurse Training Act of 1974. I understand that the proposed amendments have been worked out by the staff of both the House and Senate and that the House will concur in the proposed Senate amendments.

The proposed Senate amendments address the following concerns in the House-passed bill:

First. Adding the language "including nursing personnel who are bilingual" to section 820(a)(6). It is the purpose of this amendment to address the special health needs of minority population groups whose members have limited English-speaking abilities and overcome the limited ability of these population groups to secure adequate health care resulting from the inability of the non-English-speaking individual to enter the system as a patient because of his inability to make himself understood, or to understand the system, or cultural sensitivities which interfere with communicable understanding of the nuances of or benefits available under various health programs;

Second. Adding a new specific special project grant to provide training and education to upgrade the skills of licensed vocational or practical nurses, nursing assistants, and other paraprofessional nursing personnel. It is the purpose of this amendment to continue the provision in existing law which is vital if we are to provide the appropriate career ladder training;

Third. Adding a new provision to section 820(d) which insures that 10 percent of appropriations are earmarked for special projects which would increase nursing education opportunities for individuals from disadvantaged backgrounds.

Fourth. Broadening the eligibility of applicants to participate in establishing and operating nurse practitioner programs under section 822(a)(1). It is the purpose of this amendment to insure that in addition to collegiate schools of nursing that other public or nonprofit private schools of nursing, medicine, and public health, public or nonprofit private hospitals are eligible to train, plan, develop, operate, expand, or maintain existing programs for the training of nurse practitioners;

Fifth. Adding language to section 822(2)(A) to insure that the objective for the education of nurses in programs for the training of nurse practitioners include "pediatric and geriatric nurses" who upon completion of their studies will be qualified to effectively provide primary health care.

Sixth. Modifying section 822(B) to insure that nurse practitioner programs eligible for funding support shall at a minimum require that the minimum time of study of 1 academic year must include at least 4 months of classroom instruction and that the minimum level of enrollment shall be not less than "8 students" in lieu of the House requirement of "25 students."

Mr. President, it is essential, if we are to have a nurse training bill enacted into law in this session of Congress, for us to proceed now, despite the recognition that this is quite a modest bill in terms of the funds that it would authorize for support of nursing education.

In essence the bill includes some new authority and refinements directed at meeting changes in the kinds of nursing services most in demand and most needed today. Great progress has been made in increasing the supply of registered nurses with Federal support to nursing schools and students in past years—enrollments have risen from 187,000 in 1970-71 to some 233,000 in 1974.

New facilities and teaching equipment made possible under construction grants have helped to improve the quality of nursing education and resulted in expanded enrollments. For example, the College of Nursing at Niagara University, New York, was able to expand its places for first-year students from 105 to 126 with its new teaching facility. The college expects to triple graduations to 1,037 during the decade 1972-81.

The opening of opportunities in nursing for minorities was expanded as the result of an amendment for minority recruitment that I introduced in 1966. I am pleased that that provision is retained in the current bill in the special projects section and I will continue to watch it with the greatest interest.

Special projects are a most significant part of this legislation because they foster innovations and improvements in nursing education that lead, as well, to improved nursing care.

One continuing education project at New York University, for example, is tied to improving the delivery of health services in the community.

A project at the Helene Fuld School of Nursing of the Hospital for Joint Diseases in New York is designed to help those with inadequate academic preparation for nursing to qualify through counseling and tutoring services.

The section on special projects is tightened and given more specific form in the bill on areas of special need today.

The bill also continues "capitation" or basic support to schools to help with operating costs. It provides different amounts for different types of nursing education programs reflecting a cost study that was done by the Institute of Medicine.

The bill puts special emphasis on preparing nurses for positions in the areas of greatest need. And one great need today is for nurse practitioners, pediatric nurse practitioners, nurse midwives, nurses prepared to provide therapeutic care for our elderly citizens, and others.

Today we find many nurse practitioners serving in rural and inner-city areas. Nurse practitioners prepared under previous nursing education legislation are demonstrating that they can substantially extend the delivery of health services in underserved rural and urban areas.

The NTA of 1974 includes a new authority to assist schools of nursing in establishing programs to train nurse practitioners so that more nurses can get that kind of preparation.

There also is a critical need for additional nurses with advanced training for positions as teachers, directors of nursing, and clinical specialists.

Schools which now have advanced training programs should expand them; other schools must be assisted to start such programs.

Graduate programs are expensive both to initiate and maintain, and in these difficult times, especially, schools are reluctant to undertake their development. Funds are needed for planning, research, and curriculum development. Highly qualified faculty must be recruited or prepared. Specialized practice settings must be provided.

Clinical nursing specialists are making an increasing contribution to high quality care in this country. Coronary care units using specially prepared nurses, for example, have shown marked decreases in in-hospital mortality rates of heart attack patients.

Many studies are underway and some have been completed that show that clear benefits to patients occur when specially prepared nurses are optimally utilized as in nurse clinics in rural areas, in inner cities, in HMO's, and so on.

Nurse-midwives in Mississippi have clearly demonstrated their ability to dramatically lower the infant mortality rate, an item that has been of much concern to all of us in the Congress for several years.

Psychiatric nurse specialists are working cooperatively with psychiatrists, providing family counseling and group therapy.

This bill includes new authority to help schools in establishing advanced training programs. I believe that this is absolutely essential if we are to have the increased supply of highly qualified nurses that we need with the kind of special knowledge and skills in demand today. The bill also continues traineeships for students wishing to get advanced education and it continues the scholarships and student loans.

Mr. President, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, this is a modest bill in terms of funding. But it is of major significance in assuring that we will have the numbers and kinds of nurses that are needed to bring essential health services to the people of this country.

It represents a greatly increased emphasis on making nursing services more readily accessible and available.

This trend has been started under the previous legislation and should be accelerated by the provisions of this bill. Nursing has moved to try to meet expanding and changing needs for health services in all settings and areas of our country. We believe this bill helps to further that objective.

I strongly urge passage of this legislation.

NURSE TRAINING ACT OF 1974

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am delighted to support the Nurse Training Act of 1974, as amended by the Senate.

Under the nurse training authorities of title VIII of the Public Health Service Act, nursing schools throughout the Nation have been able to increase the number of students trained, to improve the quality of training programs, to establish new roles for nurses in the provision of health care, and to improve curriculum to be more responsive to changing social needs, in addition to the establishment of many other beneficial programs.

The bill as passed by the House continues the Federal role in support of nurse training and retains the incentive to assist nursing schools in meeting their responsibilities to provide the nurses needed by our continually expanding national needs and to train nursing personnel to fulfill the new responsibilities required by changing health care patterns.

The Senate offered a number of amendments, which I proposed to, first, emphasize the importance of continuing the program for recruitment of students who, due to socioeconomic factors are financially or otherwise disadvantaged, by earmarking a minimum of ten percent of the funds appropriated for special project grants for these programs.

The Senate amendments also clarify the need to recruit students with the ability to speak a language, in addition to English, used by major U.S. population groups with limited English-speaking ability, and added to the list of programs eligible for support under the special project grant authority, programs to provide training and education to upgrade the skills of licensed vocational or practical nurses, nursing assistants, and other paraprofessional nursing personnel.

Other amendments we are proposing would encourage the establishment of programs for training nurse practitioners by making institutions and entities other than collegiate schools of nursing eligible for grants, and amending the limitations in the House bill as to duration and size of class to more accurately reflect the diversity of programs which have already proven their excellence. The Senate amendments, Mr. President, also clarify that geriatric nurse practitioners and pediatric nurse practitioners are among the types of nurse practitioners who should be trained under the special projects authority for nurse practitioners.

I am very gratified by the responsiveness shown by the House in agreeing to these amendments.

I would like to clarify, Mr. President, in deleting the special program "full utilization of educational talent" and, in its place, including programs for the recruitment and retention of students from disadvantaged backgrounds among those authorized under the special project grant authority of the new section 820 of the Public Health Service Act, there was no intent to change the intent or scope of the current program which has been administered under the authorities of the current section 868 of the Public Health Service Act. In addition to the categories of individuals who are specified in the current section 868, it is our intention that the recruitment of individuals with the ability to speak a language—in addition to English—used by major U.S. population groups with limited English-speaking ability, as is made clear in the new section 820(a)(6) of the bill as we propose to amend it—special project grant for increased bilingual nursing personnel.

To insure that the level of support available for programs for the recruitment and retention of prospective students who are disadvantaged due to socioeconomic factors is maintained at least at the level of previous years, we have provided that no less than 10 percent of the funds appropriated for special projects under the authority of the new subsection 820(d) is earmarked for this purpose.

I am pleased that the bill authorizes the Secretary to provide assistance to the heads of other Federal Agencies to encourage and assist in the utilization of medical facilities under their jurisdiction for nurse training programs.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and Hospitals of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I am very familiar with VA programs in this regard. The Veterans' Administration hospitals currently are operating a great many educational programs for nurses; 145 VA hospitals are affiliated with 407 nurse training schools; 24,995 nurses received a portion of their training in VA hospitals in fiscal year 1974. In addition, Mr. President, the VA has several programs for the advanced training of nurses. To date, about 150 nurse practitioners have received their training in Veterans' Administration-university-based programs.

VA programs for the training of nurses began as long ago as 1943. At first, students from three hospital schools of nursing were accommodated for instruction in psychiatric and tuberculosis nursing in VA hospitals. Thirty years later, the VA is providing educational opportunities in fundamentals of nursing, and in all clinical specialties for students from many schools of professional nursing. More than 50 percent of these programs are in cooperation with university schools of nursing. Other dimensions have been added and the large clinical nursing resources of the VA are being utilized for clinical experience for graduate education in nursing, for nurse intern-residency programs, for practical nurse education, and for preservice nurses' aide training programs.

The VA nursing service's education and training of professional nurses and other nursing personnel is a substantially increasing number of students in training and the number of VA hospitals participating in these programs. Since fiscal year 1970, the number has increased from 14,191 nursing students receiving training in 123 hospitals to 24,995 in 145 hospitals. The number of schools affiliated with VA hospitals also increased from 254 schools in fiscal year 1970 to 407 schools in fiscal year 1974, representing 28 percent of all the schools in the country.

In order to further the concept of extending the scope of nursing practice in the VA, the VA has been striving to prepare nurses for the nurse practitioner role. This is a concept and practice which I have strongly encouraged. In 1972, 57 nurses were prepared to perform expanded roles in 12 test-model sites for VA admission services. Most of the preparation and training has been occurring on the job. Today, there are approximately 150 nurse practitioners who have been prepared through VA-university based programs.

Mr. President, I believe close coordination already exists between those who administer these programs in the Veterans' Administration Department of Medicine and Surgery and those who administer nurse training programs in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The language in the House-passed bill would encourage further coordination along these lines, and I thus support that provision.

Mr. President, these are the reasons I support the House bill, as it would be amended by our Senate amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. McCURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 4152) to amend the act of October 13, 1964, to authorize the transfer of earned purchaser credits between national forests timber sale contracts, which was referred to the Committee on Public Works, be re-referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR ALLEN

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) may be recognized for not to exceed 4 minutes, to call up a measure which has been cleared on both sides of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 4 minutes.

SENATE RESOLUTION 467—RELATING TO AGRICULTURAL CREDIT

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 1331.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows: A resolution (S. Res. 467) relating to agricultural credit and the current liquidity problem facing agricultural borrowers that threatens the viability of agriculture, rural communities, and the national economy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, this is a sense of the Senate resolution approved unanimously by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which calls on the Government lending agencies and private lenders to give every consideration to the credit needs of agriculture during these critical times.

Notwithstanding the fact that this is a committee resolution, I ask unanimous consent that the names of the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT) and the distinguished Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) be added as cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL INSTITUTIONS MUST RESPOND POSITIVELY TO THWART AN AGRICULTURAL CREDIT DISASTER

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, at my instance, the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry unanimously reported Senate Resolution 467 which deals with the increasingly serious credit crunch in which many of the Nation's farmers now find themselves.

There is no need for me to recount in any detail on the serious economic conditions which now prevail in Alabama and generally in America. But the rapidly increasing unemployment rate and many other factors are grim reminders of the terrible Depression of the 1930's.

I would, however, remind the Senate that prior to that general economic collapse, our farm economy fell apart. Due to a lack of liquidity there were wholesale foreclosures on farmers. That same specter is raising its ugly head today.

Since 1971, in response to Government urging for all-out food production, farmers expanded their borrowing by 60 percent. This was in order to purchase the essential inputs which are vital in food production. Much of this debt was incurred at record high interest rates.

Farmers were able to take these credit risks because of record demand for their food and fiber and resulting good prices. But all of that has changed.

In the past 2 years the livestock, poultry, and dairy segments of our farm economy have been decimated by higher costs of production; market disruptions and drastically lower prices.

Markets for cotton have been depressed because American families, in their attempts to fight inflation, have sharply reduced their clothing budgets.

In addition, many crop farmers have had a variety of disasters which made their labor and investment a cataclysmic mockery. In spite of generally high grain prices, many farmers lost everything.

As a result of this, farmers are being forced to assume even greater debts in order to refinance their pending obligations and many others are simply going out of business.

Although I have not been able to find any statistics on this, my mail and personal contacts with my constituents make me certain that the number of farm bankruptcies is increasing rapidly.

The loss of these farmers to the system is a direct threat to the need for increased food production for America and the world. This production base must be strong if we are to meet the double-barreled problems of inflation and recession.

Further, the agriculture economy lies at the heart of the viability of small communities. We are already aware that many rural banks have reduced their lending significantly and some have closed their doors for good.

The financial liquidity of the family farm must be preserved if we are to assure adequate food supplies at fair and reasonable prices.

As a result of this desperate situation, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has resolved that agricultural lenders immediately respond to the credit needs of agriculture. Chairman TALMADGE has resolved that immediately after the first of the year, the Committee will re-examine the Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973 in order to insure a fair return to the farmers. But unless agricultural lenders do their part now, those efforts will be too late.

Therefore, all of those institutions which farmers rely on for credit must use every means possible to assure agricultural solvency—this includes the merchants who sell vital inputs for farming.

Further, the Farmers Home Administration must fully implement all lending authority in law, including the Emergency Livestock Credit Act of 1974 and other disaster aid programs.

The Farm Credit Administration must use its good offices to the fullest extent possible to insure that adequate credit is made available to farmers.

Finally, the Federal Reserve Board must fully support those commercial banks which represent the largest source of farm production credit.

Mr. President, I can understand that in these troubled economic times, many lenders might feel it wiser to restrict their loan activities sharply. But farmers continue to exist almost solely on the basis of huge annual loans which are essential to the production of food in this country. Any wavering in support for this credit system by any of the vital institutions involved will certainly produce famine abroad and much higher food prices at home. This is not to mention the disruption of farm families and rural communities.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has just completed the week-long exercise of its annual Outlook Conference. In my mind it was more of a back look conference, reflecting on what a good year last year was instead of the impending problems which any casual observer can foresee for the coming year in the entire food and fiber sector.

If we cannot rely on the Department of Agriculture for this information, then it seems to me that it is incumbent upon Congress to come to some determination of how the problem of financial liquidity will affect the farmers themselves, the economy of rural areas and the American housewife.

I intend to undertake a personal survey in my own State of Alabama, conversing with farmers, bankers, and merchants wherever I can find them.

December 19, 1974

Their desperate voices must be heard. And this Congress must demonstrate that it is listening. Therefore, Mr. President, I urge the Senate to unanimously adopt Senate Resolution 467.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:

S. Res. 467

Whereas a strong and viable agriculture is essential to the well-being of the Nation's economy; and

Whereas agriculture is the economic base of most rural communities; and

Whereas farmers and ranchers have sharply expanded their use of credit in response to domestic and world demand for food and fiber; and

Whereas skyrocketing production costs and plummeting farm prices have forced agricultural producers into a position of limited liquidity; and

Whereas inclement weather has further limited cash flows of farmers and ranchers this year; and

Whereas this situation of limited liquidity at a time of record indebtedness and high rates of interest threatens the welfare of producers and consumers as well as the longrun economic well-being of this Nation; and

Whereas the problem is immediate and proposed major legislative efforts will be too late unless all agricultural lenders immediately respond to the needs of agriculture: Now therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that all agricultural lenders, including commercial banks, insurance companies, Production Credit Associations, Federal Land Bank Associations, and merchants and dealers, during this period of economic distress, use every means possible to assure agricultural solvency and, therefore, long-term agricultural production; and, therefore, be it further

Resolved, That it is hereby declared to be the sense of the Senate that—

(1) The Farmers Home Administration facilitate and fully implement all lending authority in law including the Emergency Livestock Credit Act of 1974 and other disaster loan programs; and

(2) The Farm Credit Administration use its good offices to the fullest extent possible to support and continue agricultural producers with necessary financial support including necessary refinancing; and

(3) The Federal Reserve Board fully support those commercial banks which represent the largest source of agricultural production credit, in their efforts to maintain their agricultural borrowers.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session to consider a nomination which the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) will send to the desk in behalf of the Committee on Government Operations, and that there be a 1-minute time limitation on the consideration thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADMINISTRATOR FOR FEDERAL PROCUREMENT POLICY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Hugh E. Witt, of Virginia, to be Administrator for Federal Procurement Policy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR JAVITS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEADERSHIP IN ECONOMIC CRISIS

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if the necessary leadership cannot now be shown by the President and the Congress the peril of real national and world depression faces us. The real question is are we up to it?

The Nation is in serious economic crisis. At home and abroad the world is beginning to realize the decisive position the United States could occupy to bring about recovery both from recession and unacceptable inflation. Critical examination is being made of the leadership ability of the United States to fulfill this role. Major improvement or the basis for it in this crisis are not yet clearly discernible. This means that we must complete whatever it is humanly possible to complete within these next few days; and, summon all the Nation's resolution to inspire the President and the Congress and enlist the dedication of the people for major decisions in the next few weeks.

The key point in resolving these grave issues for the immediate future now rests on whether we can get on top of the oil crisis. In order to do this the United States must so limit its reliance on imports of oil as to enable it to take a leading position with the OPEC countries in first stabilizing and then reducing price and assuring supply. This cannot be done without a major cut in U.S. consumption of not less than 1 million barrels of imported oil per day within a period of a few months.

I am convinced that the people of the United States are prepared for strict mandatory conservation authority capable of significantly reducing consumption to these levels, even if this means rationing. And that in this respect the President and the Congress lag behind the people.

There is nothing reassuring in the situation, for the OPEC nations have just announced a new increase in the price of oil by an additional 7.4 percent.

Action has been singularly lacking on the national front and we cannot allow this situation to continue. Our program of voluntary conservation is not doing the job. And until we have legislation with teeth, conservation is the only method we have of cutting oil imports and the general use of energy; it is not enough.

Unless the Congress has the will, no significant reduction of energy consumption can be achieved. Our Nation should lead the world in this effort, but instead of leading the world, we are following at our feeble best.

European nations are taking tough, positive steps. For example, Britain has just announced a 10-percent reduction in the consumption of oil products for automobile and heating use. France has announced—weeks ago in fact—that it will limit its oil imports to $10 billion regardless of the consequences. And other nations are carrying out other programs to cut consumption.

What we need now is that leadership, that balance, that reordering of our priorities—which was so ably demonstrated on public service jobs and emergency unemployment compensation this week—to be again applied to the most urgent pending business before the Senate the Emergency Energy Act (S. 3267) which is critically necessary to our immediate economic future.

We have made considerable progress toward beginning the massive job of achieving energy independence in the 1980's. The Energy Research and Development Administration has been established, and its Director confirmed. Within weeks it will begin to give impetus and direction to our medium and long term energy policy. We have also passed and sent to the President the Energy Research and Development Act, which provides the authorizations and the mechanisms for the combined government-industry crash program so necessary for domestic energy self-sufficiency.

But while we have been able to reach agreement on these long term policies, we have not been able to muster the will and determination to deal effectively with the urgent problem of excessive oil imports and the resultant cash drain. Officials in the Administration, as well as Members of Congress, have refused to compromise their differences and put aside proposals embroiled in controversy in order to enact the truly necessary legislation that almost all agree we cannot do without: emergency conservation authority and petroleum import control. This legislation should be one of the foremost priorities of the next Congress. I hope we can display the leadership needed, to prevent ideological and regional disputes from delaying this measure's (S. 3267) enactment further.

What we need in the Senate right now is leadership and statesmanship, not by a select few who were elected to leadership positions, but by all. Such collective leadership and a collective willingness to compromise was exhibited in the highest way by the action of the Republican conference last Wednesday, when it unanimously adopted its proposals on the economy in an effort to speed solutions to our pressing problems. Among the actions endorsed by the conference was enactment of strict mandatory conservation authority capable of significantly reducing consumption. This was the first item—the priority item—on the energy proposals adopted. In this closing week of the 93d Congress, the leadership demonstrated at the conference must be implemented by similar leadership of all Democrats and all Republicans on the Senate floor on S. 3267.

I hope that we can rise to meet this challenge as this session draws to a close. The opportunity exists for enactment of a major emergency energy act. The country cries out for governmental leadership in this area. It asks us to lead the way. We ought not let that opportunity pass us by.

On the economic side, I should mention the outstanding work of the Republican conference in adopting a broad economic policy statement, and dealing specifically with employment, energy, food, and productivity. Some results have already been obtained in respect of but-tressing unemployment compensation for the longer term unemployed and providing what is now an aggregate of about 330,000 public services jobs as an additional safety valve. The enactment of the trade bill and the extension of the Export-Import Bank loom as other immediate and helpful developments.

The measures to relieve serious unemployment now are to be established as an equal priority—no greater and no less—than the major reduction in consumption of oil and gas.

The decline in productivity in the last year has been alarming. A significant way to counter this decline is through strengthening the National Commission on Productivity; and establishing regional and industrial productivity councils to deal with productivity problems at their source, but these measures are not enough and will not bite in fast enough.

Hence the urgent need for an increase under proper conditions for equalization of the investment tax credit, and a material improvement in making capital available at reasonable interest rates both for equity and debt.

This will require the Federal Reserve to pursue a policy permitting moderate growth in the monetary aggregates and the Government to pursue a fiscal and tax policy seeking to avoid unjustified and continuing deficits and acting on high priority tax reform.

Also, it may require new financing institutions like a Reconstruction Finance Agency and a Domestic Development Bank.

Food price increases have been a major element in our inflation. The much-abused consumer is in for another round of price increases, as much as 15 percent in the coming year. Rigid devotion to market forces is unrealistic in a world of big grain companies, state-owned trading companies which can buy huge amounts of grain secretly, and large food companies which control very significant portions of the market. We live in a world in which cattlemen slaughter their calves because feed prices allow them no room for profit, while millions are malnourished or starving abroad and cannot afford to buy any grain. This need not have happened if we had had a policy that would have encouraged full production, but would have required the maintenance of reserve stocks, which would have put both a floor under prices and a ceiling on the most extreme price increases. Such a policy would also have required a much closer monitoring of exports, with authority to limit large sales. This policy is incorporated in my bill, S. 2411, the Export Priorities Act, and in Senator HUMPHREY's bill, both of which are now pending. In fact, we have now come to this policy even without a specific statutory structure, but after the damage has been done. However, we have still not made basic decisions regarding the balance between commercial sales to traditional and new customers, and humanitarian exports to the poorest countries. It is impossible to continue the pretense that market forces will fairly allocate our agricultural production, when so many monopolistic or other disruptive forces intrude.

I would finally mention the continuing debate over wage and price controls. I have long argued that the Council on Wage and Price Stability needs additional powers, especially the power to order a cooling off period for significant wage and price increases for a period up to 60 days. I feel that such powers are essential and I introduced a bill yesterday to do just that. However, this position is not inconsistent with the decision of the Republican Conference that discretionary wage and price control authority should not be granted to the President, but the hard decisions on specifying and implementing controls should be taken by Congress. Obviously Congress cannot administer such a system, which must be done by the executive branch. However, if we should find it necessary to impose wage and price controls again, we must determine in advance the industries to be covered and the triggering to justify increases or roll-backs. Renewed controls should cover only key industries with significant price setting power. The latest very large price increases announced by United States Steel emphasize the need for a cooling off period and subpoena power.

We must also recognize that labor deserves a catchup in view of the 5 percent or better loss of purchasing power of the average worker in the past year. Since inflation is not demand generated at this point, in fact, there is a growing slack in a number of industries, we cannot realistically expect wage and price controls to reduce prices that are beyond our control, for example foreign oil prices. But we must consider the usefulness of controls next year in tandem with efforts to reflate the economy, to ensure that the means of pulling us out of recession do not also lead to a renewed round of inflation.

The diversity and complexity of our economic problems, the close relationship between energy use and production, the impact of higher fuel costs on agricultural production—these indicate the urgent need on a national level for the more intelligent and orderly establishment of national priorities. It is clear that this country needs an Office of National Planning; but without compulsion. We need not and should not establish a National Planning Office to regiment our lives, but the cruel fact is that our lives can be regimented, even impoverished, by forces beyond our control if we do not attempt to deal with the totality of our economic problems in a systematic manner.

I have proposed a mechanism that would attempt to carry out such planning functions, in S. 5, which would establish national goals and priorities. Such an agency should include among its functions the setting of national priorities, making national forecasts and predicting with reasonable accuracy, the probable effects of any given combination of proposed policies. Certain elements of national planning already take place in the Office of Management and Budget and the Budget Committees of the House and Senate, but their focus is not adequate to deal with the complex problems we face. A National Planning Agency should be a major priority in the new Congress.

Finally, the whole country—workers and management—is concerned about the rapid downward plunge of our economy.

Consumer confidence has fallen to its lowest level in decades and the housing and automobile industries are in severe recession. If the Federal Government continues its present tight fiscal policy the recession is likely to deepen.

Finally as a priority matter at the beginning of the 94th Congress, we must consider the advisability of a tax cut on lower and moderate personal incomes of up to $12 billion; such a tax cut in tandem with an easing of monetary policy could pump back funds into the economy and provide the necessary stimulus to pull us out of the recession by mid-year. This tax cut on personal income can be offset by revenue raising measures in the second half of the year, such as an energy tax, or an increase in the excise tax on liquor and tobacco, for example, a 50-percent increase in the excise tax on liquor and tobacco, would raise almost $4 billion, or on higher personal incomes.

We need to establish an Office of National Planning to deal with the totality of our economic problems.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for not to exceed 5 minutes in order that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT) may call up some nominations that have been reported by his committee today.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The second assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Monroe Leigh, of Maryland, to be legal adviser of the Department of State.

December 19, 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

The second assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of William B. Saxbe, of Ohio, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to India vice Daniel P. Moynihan.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, on that nomination, I would say it is deeply gratifying to all of Bill Saxbe's colleagues, friends, and fellow Senators that he has done the job he did in the Attorney General's office and is now going to a post which was held by another former Senator, Senator Keating, with brilliance and distinction, and we look forward to the same kind of incumbency by Bill Saxbe, and wish him and his family all the best in this very important post.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I just wanted to say that Senator Saxbe has held many high positions of responsibility in his State and then at the Federal level. He has made many friends. He has proven his worth. He is a man of ability and integrity, and his colleagues in the Senate wish him well in his new assignment as Ambassador to India.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, as one of a small group of Senators who voted against the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Saxbe to be Attorney General of the United States—and I and those other Senators who voted against him voted purely on the basis of constitutional questions that we thought were important—I want to add my pledge of support for the nomination of Mr. Saxbe to be Ambassador to India.

May I say for the Record that while he has been Attorney General of the United States, for the most part, I have certainly wanted to support the positions that he has taken. I have not agreed with him in every instance, but I think he has done a fine job as Attorney General.

I want to say this: He appeared before the Judiciary Committee and, under oath, assured the Judiciary Committee that he would give his full 100 percent backing to Mr. Jaworski, Special Prosecutor, and that he would not in any way ever attempt to impede that investigation.

As far as I know—and I have stated this many times—Mr. Saxbe never once deviated from his promise to the Judiciary Committee.

I feel that he ought to be given that praise because I know there must have been times when it was difficult for him. So I want to say that I give my wholehearted support to this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Of course, my committee voted on this unanimously, and I associate myself with all that the Senator from West Virginia has said.

I wish to make it clear that Senator Saxbe has been a very close friend of mine, and I have every confidence that he will make a very fine ambassador. He has a wonderful wife to accompany him. Everybody is deeply impressed by them as a couple, and there is no question that he will make a fine ambassador.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I join my colleagues in the Senate and, particularly, on the Foreign Relations Committee in warm support of our former colleague, Bill Saxbe, in his nomination to be ambassador for our country to India.

I know he is going to do a good job. He has the capacity, he has the sense of compassion and interest in people that assure his success as a representative of our country to that great nation, and not the least of his assets is a most lovely and charming wife. She will add greatly to his ability to represent us in that vast land.

I join my colleagues in warm support of the commission.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators may be permitted to include their statements in the Record if they so desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The second assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas J. Scotes, of Maryland, a Foreign Service officer of class 3, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Yemen Arab Republic.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay this, but I am bound to confess that this appointment particularly appeals to me this morning. Here is a man with unusual qualifications for this particular assignment to a country that is a very difficult country. I merely want to—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please suspend. The well will be cleared by the Senators and others.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I wish to compliment the Department and the President for sending us a name so eminently qualified for this post. It is not always that we get this kind of a selection.

I hope it is a trend toward the selection of people so well-qualified by their experience for such an appointment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

The second assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Michael A. Samuels, of the District of Columbia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Sierra Leone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask that the President of the United States be notified of the Senate confirmation of the several nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to legislative session.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. FULBRIGHT may proceed for not to exceed 10 minutes on a measure which he wishes to call up.

AN ACT FOR THE RELIEF OF KIYONAO OKAMI

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H. R. 10827.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT) laid before the Senate H. R. 10827, an act for the relief of Kiyonao Okami.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I would just say this bill was considered by the committee this morning. It is a private bill. It passed the House and has been cleared by both sides of the leadership, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOOKING BACK—AND LOOKING AHEAD

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, in these final hours of my 32-year career in the U.S. Congress, I wish to express my gratitude and esteem, both to Members of this body with whom it has been my privilege to work, and to the institution itself.

I have participated in many vigorous debates over these years in the Senate, but with rare exceptions these have been free of rancor and personal recrimination. We have engaged here in a practice the British used to call "government by discussion." It has not by any means been an exercise in pure reason, but neither in general are human affairs, and we politicians—contrary to rumor—are members of the human race. However much I have agreed or disagreed with my colleagues over the years, I have always been deeply impressed with the ability of Senators—past and present—to represent the people who sent them here. For my own part, I take pride and satisfaction that, as part of the team of Congressmen and Senators representing the State of Arkansas, I have been able to make a contribution to the remarkable progress which has brought the people of my State from comparative poverty and underdevelopment 30 years ago to their present vibrant prosperity.

Wrote Walter Bagheot:

A constitutional statesman is in general a man of common opinions and uncommon abilities.

Having been privileged to know a great many Members of this body over three decades, I can testify to the accuracy of that statement. The Senate as I have known it is a representative, democratic institution composed of some of the most gifted individuals in our society.

December 19, 1974

I leave the Senate at a time when it has achieved a new self-confidence and a renewal of its constitutional power and responsibility. I trust and hope that the congressional resurgence will not go too far, just as one resists the excesses of Presidential power. But as matters now stand, the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives probably constitute as strong, independent, and responsible a parliamentary body as exists in the world today. This accomplishment, so noteworthy in its own right, is the more so for the fact that it comes at a time when parliamentarism is on the decline and authoritarianism is on the rise in many parts of the world.

There are few greater presumptions than a politician speculating on his "place in history." It involves, for one thing, the assumption that he is going to have one. It assumes too that you are going to be remembered favorably, when there well may be things you would rather have forgotten. It will not bother me in the slightest, for instance, if history fails to record that I supported the Gulf of Tonkin resolution in 1964; or a speech I made back in 1961 complaining that we had hobbled our Presidents with "too niggardly a grant of power" in foreign policy—that was shortly before I launched my campaign to restore congressional authority in foreign policy.

Allowing for the pitfalls, I should like, nonetheless, to recall a few of the things I have tried to do and tried to prevent, leaving it to others—if they care to—to judge how well or how badly I succeeded. Early in my career I focused on the two areas of activity in foreign relations that I considered to be the most crucial, and also the most promising. One was the need of an international peacekeeping organization, the other the need of international education. I still believe in the United Nations—not the debilitated, often irresponsible body which sits in New York, but the concept underlying the United Nations, which cannot be said to have failed, because it has never seriously been tried. It also seemed to me—and still does—that the vital mortar to seal the bricks of world order was education across international boundaries, not with the expectation that knowledge would make us love each other, but in the hope that it would encourage empathy between nations, and that this sense of each other in turn would encourage a measure of tolerance and rational restraint.

With few interruptions the trend of events since World War II has been against these concepts. Accordingly I have found myself resisting what seemed to me the excesses of the cold war, culminating in the tragic and unnecessary hot war in Vietnam. I am not a pacifist in the sense of believing that military force should never be used. I would prefer to consider myself a rationalist who deplores the vanity and emotionalism which leads a nation to fight unnecessarily, or to arm to the teeth far beyond the necessities of defense or deterrence, at colossal and debilitating cost, with the overkill serving no purpose but "prestige," which is nothing but a synonym for vanity.

In Vietnam our GI's used to speak of "wasting" the enemy. It is an apt phrase, suitable for more general application. In Vietnam we "wasted" friends and enemies alike, with a fine impartiality. In the arms race with the Soviet Union we have wasted countless billions that might have gone for the education and welfare of the American people. As a result of the arms race, the Vietnam war, and such fatuous ventures as the race to beat the Russians to the moon, we have wasted some of the best hopes and best opportunities of our own people. I have suggested on occasion in the past that every nation has a double identity—as a power drawing down its resources through the conduct of foreign relations, and as a society replenishing its domestic resources through the inventiveness of its citizens. Of recent decades we Americans have drawn dangerously deep upon our reservoir of economic, political, and moral resources. That is the waste which I have deplored and resisted.

If I am remembered, I suppose it will be as a dissenter. That was not what I had in mind, but when things go contrary to your highest hopes and strongest convictions, there is nothing you can do except dissent—or drop out.

But I never made a principle of dissent. It has always seemed to me that a Senator has a responsibility to be independent in his judgments, not just contrary. Some individuals who supported my stand against the Vietnam war have accused me more recently of "selling out" with my support of Mr. Kissinger's détente and Middle East policies. I am frankly nonplussed by the criticism—to retain my credentials as a dissenter I should have had to reverse previously held views to denounce policies I think sound and wise.

In a Senate speech back in 1965, following my criticism of the Dominican intervention and the resulting controversy, I tried to define the role, as I perceived it, of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. The chairman, I said, "has special obligation to offer the best advice he can on matters of foreign policy; it is an obligation, I believe, which is inherent in the chairmanship, which takes precedence over party loyalty, and which has nothing to do with whether the chairman's views are solicited or desired by people in the executive branch."

Looking back, I recall that my views were seldom solicited and, I suspect, even less often desired. But I crashed the party and offered them anyway—for better or for worse.

Now, as I retire to private life, to a new role as observer rather than participant in our public affairs, I wish that I could express great optimism about such matters as our economy and our foreign relations in the immediate future. In truth I cannot do that, but I can with all conviction express my unflagging confidence in the vitality and viability of our American democracy. The strength of our institutions is a reflection of the strength and basic decency of our people. One of the great educational experiences of being a democratic politician is that one is under a continuing obligation to go home to take counsel with the people. I have gone home many times over these last 32 years and have returned each time with heightened respect and appreciation for the people of Arkansas. I have also been to other parts of our country, to college campuses and elsewhere, and on these occasions, too, my hopes for our country have been strengthened.

I depart, therefore, with confidence and gratitude—confidence in the future of my State and of our country, and with gratitude to my colleagues in this body and to the people of Arkansas who for so long have honored me with their trust.

Finally, I wish especially to thank my colleague from Arkansas, JOHN MCCLELLAN, for his friendship and cooperation during these 30 years. He has made a great contribution to the welfare of the people of Arkansas through his strong leadership of our congressional delegation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON LIBRARY AND INFORMATION SERVICES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on Senate Joint Resolution 40, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated by title.

The second assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 40) to authorize and request the President to call a White House Conference on Library and Information Services in 1976, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report, as follows:

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 17, 1974, at pp. 40547-40550.)

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, yesterday, I filed the report on the conference, and it is available to the Senators.

There were four essential elements to the matters before the conference. The first concerned the White House Conference on Library and Information Services. The House and the Senate were virtually in agreement on this White House conference, except for some minor details as to the date, the composition of the committee, and certain other technical matters. The only major difference between the House and the Senate was with regard to the level of authorization, the House having authorized $3 million, whereas the Senate had authorized $10 million. The Senate acceded to the House's wish and has brought back a bill which authorizes up to $3.5 million for such a conference, to be held not later than 1978.

The second major provision in the conference was the Senate amendments to the so-called Buckley amendment, the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974, section 438 of the General Education Provisions Act. I can report to the Senate that the conference report brought back virtually unchanged the amendment agreed to by Senator BUCKLEY and myself and adopted within the past week in this Chamber.

The changes which were made in the Buckley language are:

First. The Senate amendment had a section which read:

Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter the confidentiality of communications otherwise protected by law as confidential.

The House conferees expressed their concern that the effects of this provision were unclear and that we were dealing with a wide variety of State statutes and court decisions pertaining to confidentiality, as well as to parent/child, doctor/patient, lawyer/client, and a wide variety of other protected relationships. The House was concerned that this language would have a detrimental effect on a State with respect to enforcing its own laws and might provide a major loophole in enforcing the other provisions of the Buckley amendment. Therefore, that whole section was dropped, with the understanding that it is expected that the so-called common law and parental and student rights of confidentiality will be maintained; deletion of this section should not be construed as congressional intent to disrupt existing confidential relationships.

Second. The amendment, as sent to the House, set up a provision whereby a college student could waive his right to access to certain confidential recommendations for admission, employment, and receipt of awards. During the consideration of this provision, in a colloquy with Senator MONDALE, I clarified the fact that it had not been our intent to permit institutions to require a student to waive his rights. The conference agreement spells this out in the legislation. Of course, the institution could well take into consideration the failure of a student to sign a waiver. The school has every right to evaluate the character of a student, and the objection to giving a waiver could be taken into account in that evaluation.

Third. The Senate amendment authorized release of student information to State and local officials pursuant to State law. The House expressed a concern that States would use this provision as a loophole and enact subsequent legislation giving blanket exemptions from confidentiality to all sorts of records. The conference agreement closes this loophole by specifying that applicable State statutes must have been in effect by November 19, 1974.

The other two amendments were technical in nature and had to do with the use of personally identifiable information in the conduct of studies and ongoing evaluations. In deleting the specific reference forbidding the use of social security numbers as a means of identifying students, it is not the intent of the conferees that widespread use, or indeed abuse, of these numbers should now be permitted.

A question was raised pertaining to the meaning of the language:

Except for the conduct of hearings, none of the functions of the Secretary under this section shall be carried out in any of the regional offices of such Department.

As the author of that section, I can state my intention that the words, "none of the functions of the Secretary under this section shall be carried out in any of the regional offices of such Department," clearly mean that regional personnel are not allowed to have any power to administer the Buckley amendment. The exception for hearings is very clear, and, since the hearings can only be conducted by the Board established by the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, acting together as a Board, what this section means is that the hearings of this Board can be held in the regional offices, as well as in post offices or in State capitols. Nothing more should be read into it.

The next subject of the conference was the so-called Bayh amendment having to do with clarifying coverage under title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, Public Law 92-318, pertaining to sex discrimination. The House accepted the language with a minor technical change to assure that the intent expressed by the Senate was carried out.

The final portion of the conference was the so-called Griffin amendment, which was adopted on the Senate floor and which affected title XVIII of the Social Security Act, the so-called medicare provisions. As we understood the intent of this amendment from its mover, the junior Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), it was to permit medicare payments to persons in certain Masonic hospitals and nursing homes.

There was concern that adoption of this amendment could have wider unknown effects than the limited purpose which Senator GRIFFIN sought.

I understand that the problem stems from a recent ruling from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare with regard to the classification of certain payments. It is my view that medicare payments are a matter of personal right, and, no matter whom the hospital is run by, the client should be able to exercise his choice as to where he wants to be treated. I sympathize with the problem faced by the Senator from Michigan and hope that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare will reverse its ruling and permit nursing home and hospital patients to continue to receive medicare payments, no matter where the patients are situated, without the necessity for further legislative action. To my mind, medicare payments, like social security payments, must be paid out for the benefit of the beneficiary, no matter where the beneficiary is located.

Mr. President, I believe we have brought before the Senate a most inclusive conference report, one which has adopted virtually all the provisions of the Senate bill. Its signature into law by the President will not only provide for a White House Conference on Library and Information Services, but will also give to students, parents, and educational institutions guidance with regard to their rights under "The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974". I, therefore, move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I do not intend to oppose this conference report even though I am not happy about some aspects of the agreement reached by the conferees. I realize that this legislation carries important and meritorious provisions relating to the availability of student files held by colleges and universities. There are some serious problems with existing law, as I understand it. The Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) and the junior Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) have been able to work out important language that will help to make the existing law with respect to student files more reasonable and workable.

When this legislation having to do with libraries came to the Senate floor last week, I was surprised that another Senator offered several civil rights amendments to the bill. When it became apparent that the Senate would adopt those amendments, I felt that it was an appropriate time to address a problem which has come to light in my State.

I do not happen to be a member of the Masonic Order myself. However, like every Senator in this body, I have many friends and even some relatives who are members of that fine fraternal organization.

For many years, the Masons in my State have operated an old folks home in Alma, Mich., for members of the order; it is a fine facility, of which all the Masons in Michigan are very proud.

So, it was something of a shock for me to learn recently that the civil rights division of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has been threatening to cut off medicare payments of the old people in this Masonic home—to hold them hostage, so to speak—as a means of compelling compliance by the Order with some highly questionable interpretations of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

It is the position of HEW that older folks now in the home stand to be penalized by having their medicare benefits cut off unless some undetermined percentage of blacks are admitted, even though they may not be members of the order.

Well, I do not know what sins the Masonic Order may have committed. The only thing I do know is that it would be a sad and tragic thing if older people who have already retired—who are in the twilight of their life, trying to survive with medicare benefits, are to be penalized by HEW because the HEW has some differences with the Masonic Order.

I would have no particular objection if the HEW wanted to direct its attention toward the membership policies of the Masonic Order itself, although I do not see any constitutional basis for such a challenge. However, the HEW could go right ahead if its purpose were to pursue that course directly. What is most regrettable and obnoxious, I suggest, is the tactics of HEW to challenge the Masonic Order indirectly by threatening to hold old people as hostages who are dependent upon medicare benefits. The purpose is to force compliance by the Masonic Order with strained, highly questionable interpretations which HEW bureaucrats seek to put on the civil rights laws.

I think the Senate ought to be aware of what is going on. If HEW should succeed with the high-handed tactics it is using with regard to this old folks home in Alma, Mich., it will soon be threatening to cut off the medicare benefits of the old folks in other States as well—not only those in homes operated by the Masonic Order but those operated by other organizations as well.

Of course, I was not a conferee and I was not a party to the conference committee meetings. I do hope that the Senate conferees who were appointed did argue and seek to persuade the House conferees to accede to the Senate amendments, one of which dealt, of course, with the Alma home problem.

Mr. ERVIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. If the Department of HEW will read a little history, they will find that the Constitutional Convention which framed our Constitution was presided over by a great Freemason, George Washington.

To read history just a little bit further, they will find that the cornerstone of this Capitol was laid by a great Master Mason, and if they will study just a little bit more they will find that a very substantial part of the men who wrote the Constitution of the United States were members of the Masonic fraternity.

If they will read just a little bit more, they will find out that no organization at any time in this Nation has contributed more stability and wisdom to the American way of life than those who happen to be and to have been Freemasons.

I think that we see the most arrogant tyranny practiced on many occasions by the HEW, whose officials are not elected by anybody and not responsible to anybody, and who have the most tyrannical thirst for power of any bunch of bureaucrats that I have ever known anything about, and that is saying something, because bureaucrats have a thirst for arrogant and arbitrary power.

I want to commend the Senator from Michigan for standing up for sanity.

I guess the HEW would like to see the old folks thrown out on the street.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator from North Carolina for his contribution.

He speaks with great wisdom, as always, and I hope that his expressions will be read downtown by those bureaucrats in HEW.

I yield now to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. I just wanted to assure the Senator from Michigan that, as chairman of the Senate conferees, together with the ranking minority member, we voted for the Senator from Michigan's amendment. The enthusiasm of the rest of the conferees on the Senate side for the amendment of the Senator from Michigan admittedly was very muted because of its unknown effects, other than the limited purposes for which the Senator sought.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Well, I thank the Senator from Rhode Island.

I had not intended to get into the details of the conference. However, I will say that I hope one report I heard is not true. I refer to a report that Senate conferees moved to recede from the Senate position on the Alma home amendment, even before the House conferees had a chance to consider and accept it. I hope that report is not true.

Mr. PELL. If the Senator will yield, the question has been raised, it should be answered.

The amendment had been discussed before on both sides, but the report the Senator heard was correct.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me on that subject?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. I was the ranking minority member and I did stand up for the Senator's amendment. Representative BRADEMAs referred to the House position in connection with the matter generally. The vote was taken on the Senate side, and Senator PELL, as he stated, he and I voted no. That was the vote to stand by the Senate position, and, specifically, by the Senator's amendment.

I would like to say to the Senator that, looking forward, I would like to ask the Senator if he would be good enough to supply me with the data obtained on this matter. It was obtained very suddenly in conference, as the Senator knows. I was not aware that it was even in existence. I was informed that the Senator had an amendment. I would urge the Senator to let me have the material so that the matter may be looked into. We do have legislative oversight over HEW.

There is no reason why, in a specialized case, I would not do all I could to apply that legislative oversight responsibility to this particular case. I will be glad to do it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the senior Senator from New York for his contribution.

I want to say to the Senator from New York, as I indicated, that the particular amendment I offered would not have been added to this library bill if two other civil rights amendments had not first been accepted.

Mr. JAVITS. I understand it perfectly and can only assure the Senator that I will try to get for him what he wants, which is some action in a substantive way.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I move the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair. Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, there was a time limitation on that matter of 5 minutes. Has that time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Mr. BAYH. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield for one moment?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH) may proceed for 3 minutes.

Mr. BAYH. One minute will be ample. I appreciate the courtesy of our colleague from West Virginia, Mr. President.

I just want to add to the colloquy which just transpired a little different note of special appreciation to the Senator from Rhode Island for the manner in which he has handled this bill and some other amendments which the Senator from Indiana and others were concerned about.

Of course, I was not a member of that parent committee, I was not a member of the conference, and I was not aware of what went on there. But I do have a good idea of the type of effort that the Senator and his staff have put into this particular amendment, the library resolution, and the special courtesy and attention he has given the problem which has been raised by the fact that HEW has totally misrepresented the intent of Congress in the application of title IX, which the Senator from Indiana put on the higher education bill.

The way in which they have tried to say that the wording and the legislative history of that title makes it impossible for our country to continue to have Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, or YMCA's and YWCA's, or fraternities and sororities totally misses the mark.

We were trying to root out discrimination as far as salaries, promotion, access to universities, loan funds, scholarships—those things that go to the very foundation of an equal and open higher education system.

I want to express my gratitude to the Senator from Rhode Island for the inconvenience which he, his staff, and the committee as a whole were put to, but I am very grateful for his recognition of his need to deal with this problem.

I thank my colleague from West Virginia.

FRANK P. MUTO, AND OTHERS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 251, and that the Senator from Nebraska may proceed for not to exceed 3 minutes.

December 19, 1974

Sec. 2. (a) In the administration of subchapter III (relating to civil service retirement) of chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code, and subject to sections 8334(c) and 8339(h) of such title, Arthur D. O'Neill, Joseph H. Avery, Junior, Joshua Cosden, Keith Jewell, Bertha Seelmeyer, Thomas Dennis O'Neill, Robert H. Brockhurst, Michael Senko, Salvatore La Capria, C. J. Moore III, and Ann C. Siegal shall be deemed to have rendered creditable service during such periods as they were employees of the Democratic National Congressional Committee or Republican Congressional Committee prior to January 1, 1975.

(b) The Civil Service Commission shall accept the certification of the Speaker of the House, or his designee, concerning the service of, and the amount of compensation received by, the individuals named in this section.

Page 2, line 7, strike out "subsection (a) of this section", and insert: "this Act"

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act for the relief of Frank P. Muto, Alphonso A. Muto, Arthur E. Scott, F. Clyde Wilkinson, Arthur D. O'Neill, Joseph H. Avery, Junior, Joshua Cosden, Keith Jewell, Bertha Seelmeyer, Thomas Dennis O'Neill, Robert H. Brockhurst, Michael Senko, Salvatore La Capria, C. J. Moore III, and Ann C. Siegal."

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, this bill originated in the Senate. It went to the House and there were certain amendments added to it. I have cleared this with the leadership on both sides, and with the chairman and ranking member on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

I was authorized and requested to move that we concur in the amendments of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I move that we reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

(Later in the day the following proceedings occurred:)

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which S. 251 was passed by the Senate today. I just want to enter the motion under the rule.

I am trying to contact the Senator from Tennessee, who is interested in this matter. We will act on it tonight or tomorrow, at his pleasure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 251) for the relief of Frank P. Muto, Alphonso A. Muto, Arthur E. Scott, and F. Clyde Wilkinson.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

AMENDMENT OF THE ACT OF MAY 13, 1954, RELATING TO THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I am informed that the House message on H.R. 17558 has been cleared on both sides of the aisle. I therefore ask that the Chair lay that message before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate H.R. 17558, an act to amend the act of May 13, 1954, relating to the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation to provide for a 7-year term of office for the Administrator, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. CLARK may be recognized for not to exceed 4 minutes, that the Senator from Virginia (HARRY F. BYRD, JR.) be recognized for not to exceed 8 minutes, that the Senator from Florida (MR. CHILES) be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes, and that the Senator from New Mexico (MR. DOMENIC) be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, is it concerning a House message?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, the Senator from Idaho is recognized.

OLDER AMERICANS

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, with the year almost at end, I would like to take a few moments to discuss the needs of this country's older citizens—what has been done in 1974 to help meet those needs and what should be done in 1975.

Earlier this month, the Long Term Care Subcommittee of the Special Committee on Aging released another report on nursing home care in the United States. The instances of mistreatment and neglect need not be recounted here, but the subcommittee conclusion should be repeated time and time again: The problem of substandard nursing homes can be traced in part to a deeply negative attitude toward aging in the United States.

The attitude is all too pervasive in the United States, and it is a fundamental cause of more than just inadequate nursing homes. That attitude makes itself felt everywhere there are problems for the elderly—in housing, nutrition, employment, health care, transportation. As the subcommittee's report suggested, a particularly potent form of bigotry has developed toward the elderly, a particularly demeaning form of discrimination.

The discrimination is as ironic as it is indefensible. If we are fortunate, we all will grow old, and when that happens, none of us will want to face the kind of problems that confront so many older Americans today. Yet the discrimination endures—even though every one of us may eventually become victims of it.

But it is not necessary to rely on purely selfish reasons to end discrimination against the elderly. We need the help, the enthusiasm, and the experience of every older American if we are ever going to solve the array of problems that faces this country.

There are 21 million older men and women in this country. They represent an invaluable natural resource, and it is time we put their experience and talents to work. They have lived through some of our most difficult years, through two world wars and a depression. They have helped build this country's wealth and abundance. To deny this country the potential contributions of older citizens just because they are older is unjust and shortsighted.

Many Americans have made great contributions after they have reached the age of 65 or 70. Chief Justice Holmes wrote his book on jurisprudence, "The Common Law," at 72, and he was an advisor to the President of the United States at 90. Eleanor Roosevelt was a member of the U.S. delegation to the United Nations at 77. Noah Webster was 70 when he compiled his dictionary. And Benjamin Franklin was 70 when he signed the Declaration of Independence and became Ambassador to France.

The litany of names could continue, but its lesson is clear: We do need the active participation of older Americans, and that alone is reason to give them the help and assistance they need.

Because of the work of many groups and individuals, there have been significant accomplishments in this effort. Groups like the National Council of Senior Citizens, the American Association of Retired Persons, and the National Retired Teachers Association, the National Council on Aging, the National Caucus on Black Aged, the Gerontological Society, and the American Association of Homes for the Aging all have helped bring the concerns of older Americans to this Nation's attention. They have played a significant role in the passage of important legislation—increased social security, medicare, supplemental security income, the Older Americans Act and its amendments of 1973, and the title VII nutrition program which all contribute to the well being and independence of older citizens.

Much has been accomplished, but much remains undone.

INFLATION AND INCOME

Mr. President, reviewing these challenges that face the elderly means reviewing their concerns, and no concern is more immediate than the effect of inflation on income.

December 19, 1974

Inflation—coupled with a growing recession—is this country's most pressing problem.

The prices of the most basic items—food, housing, health care, transportation, and public utilities—have risen at unprecedented rates. These essential goods and services are claiming an increasingly large proportion of every family's budget. But there are some individuals in this country who inevitably suffer more from the inflated cost of living—those people living on relatively low fixed incomes, especially the elderly. For them, an inflated economy has taken away many of their hopes and left them to bargain for survival with increasingly inadequate incomes.

The Congress has made an effort to protect senior citizens from inflation, but to little avail. Social security benefits—the economic mainstay for the majority of older citizens—have increased 68½ percent since 1969. That increase should represent a milestone in economic and social progress, but because of higher and higher prices, it has been whittled away.

Last December, for example, Congress approved a two-step social security benefit increase totaling 11 percent. The first step was a 7-percent increase effective in March, 1974, with the full 11-percent increase effective in June.

As a result of last year's increases, the average monthly benefit to a single retired person increased from $162 to $181. For couples, it went from $277 to $310. The minimum monthly social security benefit for a single person increased from $84.50 to $93.80 during this period, and from $126.80 to $140.70 for couples.

Yet, higher food, health, fuel, and utility costs have more than offset these increases.

The next scheduled social security increase will be in July 1975, under the automatic cost-of-living escalator signed into law in 1972. But for many elderly people, that increase will be too little, too late. At the current rate of inflation—over 1 percent a month—older citizens cannot afford to wait for that increase. Waiting for increased benefits is tantamount to losing them.

The automatic cost-of-living escalator is based upon the Consumer Price Index, but it does not really represent older people's inflation because they spend a disproportionately large share of their income on food, transportation, utilities—all of the items which have led the ever-increasing Consumer Price Index.

So when social security is increased next July to reflect the increase in the Consumer Price Index as it affects all Americans, it will not really reflect the impact of inflation on the elderly.

That is why there should be legislation to provide for a "Consumer Price Index for Older Americans"—one that will more accurately represent their particular cost of living. It also would be helpful to recalculate the automatic cost-of-living escalator twice a year, instead of once a year as the present law provides. In that way, increases would come closer to meeting the rate of inflation. Each of these proposals would help older Americans fight inflation, supplementing the four across-the-board social security increases of the last 5 years.

There have been other congressional initiatives that have benefited older people. One of the most important of these is the supplemental security income program—SSI—which established for the first time a minimum floor under the incomes of all older Americans. And, during the 93d Congress, a cost-of-living escalator for SSI was approved which is comparable to the present social security cost-of-living escalator.

The SSI program has been a great help to many of the elderly poor but the program's minimum income is shamefully low. Right now, elderly couples with no other income receive $219 a month—for older individuals it is $146 a month. By definition, individuals enrolled in the SSI program represent the poorest of elderly citizens, and they deserve at least enough to bring them above the level of poverty. At the beginning of the next session of Congress, I plan to introduce legislation which would accomplish this.

The social security system does not operate in a vacuum, nor should it. By itself, social security cannot provide a decent retirement income. It needs the help of supplemental income earned by older people and income from private pension plans, and both of these are areas of special concern to the elderly.

SOCIAL SECURITY REFORM AND MANDATORY RETIREMENT

Legislation enacted earlier in this Congress raised the amount a social security beneficiary may earn in any year and still receive full benefits from $2,100 to $2,400. In January 1975, it will go up to $2,520, allowing many wage earners to further supplement their retirement incomes.

But with the current economic conditions, there is no doubt that the cutoff level needs to be raised again to insure that individuals who want to work will not be penalized unduly.

Changing the mandatory retirement policies that flourish in this country would accomplish the same goal—giving older workers the opportunity to earn a decent living. Besides being just plain discriminatory, using age as the sole criterion for retirement is unfair and unreasonable. Mandatory retirement deprives this country of the productivity and enthusiasm of millions of people each year, and it deprives these people of the opportunity to support themselves with dignity and purpose.

By forcing retirement, we are doing a great disservice, not only to those who have to retire, but to the Nation. Forced retirement all too often means forced reliance on others for income, an especially ironic practice since one of this country's major challenges is providing enough income for older Americans.

Because of the importance of older workers, it is imperative to reassess retirement policies and move toward a more flexible system to allow older individuals willing and able to work the opportunity to maintain their independence and activity. Other countries have experimented with flexible retirement with very encouraging results. They have found that older people not only live longer when they continue to work, but they also maintain their health and play a useful and productive role in their communities.

As the social security program has provided increasingly higher benefits for more beneficiaries over the years, it has become more costly. As a result, there has been a great deal of discussion about the way the social security system is financed.

Right now, over half of the Nation's taxpayers pay more social security tax than Federal income tax. Everyone pays close to 6 percent social security tax on earnings up to $13,200 a year, and this results in serious inequities.

The Special Committee on Aging is studying the problem now as part of its comprehensive investigation of the future directions of social security. One alternative is the well-conceived and well-timed use of general revenue funds to finance a portion of the social security program. No matter what plan finally is adopted it must recognize an important principle: Workers should continue to contribute some portion of their income so that the benefits continue to be an earned right, not just another form of "welfare."

Everyone realizes that it is expensive to help over 21 million older Americans maintain a decent standard of living. As social security benefits have increased, so has the payroll tax—and so has the dissatisfaction of those who have to pay it. With each increase in the tax, greater resistance builds against future increases in benefits. We are going to have to reform our entire taxing mechanism if we are to meet our goal of increasing the real incomes of older Americans. Fundamental tax reform will go a long way toward insuring a comfortable life for every older person in this country.

Establishing an independent Social Security Administration also will be an important measure for the next Congress to consider. Now, the Social Security Administration is part of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Senator FRANK CHURCH—chairman of the Senate Special Committee on Aging—and I have introduced legislation to establish an independent Social Security Administration free from the pressures of changing administrations. An independent agency would be under the direction of a three-member governing board appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and responsible for making recommendations for providing economic security through social insurance.

The new agency also would be responsible for the continued successful administration of the social security programs—old age, survivors and disability insurance program, medicare, supplemental security income, and part of the black lung benefit program now administered by the Social Security Administration.

December 19, 1974

In addition, the legislation to create an independent Social Security Administration contains important safeguards against political abuses.

PENSION REFORM LEGISLATION

Many people work all their lives to build an adequate retirement income through a private pension plan, and they want to be sure that investment is protected while it is growing and available when it is needed. This is one special concern of the elderly already addressed by Congress which has passed legislation to safeguard workers' private pensions. It is a major step toward insuring that those people enrolled in private pension plans get the pension security they have earned.

In the past, many employees have been denied their pension benefits after years of investment in a private plan. This legislation is designed to prevent that from happening. Its enactment means that over 30 million individuals enrolled in over 300,000 private pension plans will have greater income security in their later years.

The legislation establishes reporting and disclosure requirements so that the participants in a private pension fund know the status of their investments, and it provides a reinsurance system to take care of pension plan failures—with standards to insure that pension funds are not mismanaged.

Under this legislation, there are national standards for vesting to grant individual employees a nonforfeitable right to their own pension contributions, and beyond that, every firm that provides a pension must cover all its employees.

All of these reform measures have the same goal: to provide older Americans with economic security. But they are only a beginning—a long overdue installment on what we, as a nation, owe older Americans. Older people have made a significant contribution to the success and prosperity of this country. They deserve a share of its benefits.

And that includes health security, as well as financial security.

HEALTH SECURITY

When medicare was enacted in 1965, many people thought it established comprehensive health care for people over 65 as a matter of right. It never did that, and it does not today. Medicare falls short of the goal. Coverage of health expenses has dwindled, and the cost to the participant has increased.

The plain fact is, that older people are now paying more in out-of-pocket costs for their medical care than they did the year before medicare was established, and that means many people cannot get the care they need because they cannot pay for it. Since its inception, the monthly premium under medicare has risen from $3 to $6.70—more than doubled. The deductible—the amount the patient must pay for hospital costs—has gone from $40 in 1966 to $84 today—more than doubled. Coinsurance, the part of the hospital bill the patient pays after 60 days, has gone from a daily rate of $10 to $21—again, more than doubled. And, just recently, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare announced that the hospitalization deductible will increase almost 10 percent in 1975, from $84 to $92.

In response to that, Senator RIBICOFF and I have introduced legislation which would freeze medicare out-of-pocket costs at present levels to put an end to the additional costs burdens on older Americans. In my State of Iowa alone, over 390,000 individuals enrolled in medicare would have to pay more for hospital care in 1975. This legislation would prevent that from happening.

Medical problems are compounded by the substantial number of services not covered under medicare: Out-of-hospital prescription drugs, dental services, eyeglasses, hearing aids and custodial nursing home care. Today, medicare covers only about 40 percent of the elderly's health care costs. All of this means that older Americans really do not have the opportunity to enjoy the comforts and security generally available to the rest of society. The elderly have no greater concern than the concern for their health, and because the medicare system continues to be the primary source of health care for older Americans, it must be expanded and improved to meet the needs of these citizens.

The cost of out-of-hospital prescription drugs should be included in medicare coverage. A comprehensive long term care and home health care benefit should be established as well. In the next session of Congress, I plan to introduce legislation to make these changes in the medicare system. But they, too, will be inadequate until health care for everyone is put on a comprehensive basis.

Congress has been debating a number of national health insurance proposals and, hopefully, a bill will pass next year. National health insurance is critically important to many, many people in this country—especially the elderly.

Older people have a 1 in 4 chance of being hospitalized during a year—twice as great a chance as for those under 65. Once in a hospital, older people stay twice as long as younger people. And, about 85 percent of all older people have one or more chronic care conditions.

When the Congress begins active consideration of national health insurance legislation in the next Congress, we must not be satisfied with another patchwork, stopgap program which does not confront the basic health care problems. Health care is too important for a "band-aid" approach.

One of the most serious problems is the availability and distribution of health care personnel. Senator KENNEDY—chairman of the Senate Health Subcommittee—and I introduced legislation during this session of Congress which would address the problem directly.

This bill would have required medical students to pay back their public-supported education with 2 years of public service in a medically underserved area, and it would have placed special emphasis on the training of primary care physicians.

The legislation met significant opposition, and it failed to win approval in the Senate. That failure was a serious blow to the elderly for whom good medical care is not readily available simply because they live in the country. In Iowa, for example, most rural counties have an elderly population of over 15 percent—twice the percentage of urban areas. Yet, most physicians practice in urban areas, leaving most towns of 1,000 and under with no doctor at all.

When the 94th Congress convenes in January, it will have a great many challenges to face—the health of the Nation's citizens is among the most important. We need a comprehensive health insurance program, one that will guarantee everyone the health care they need—not just the health care they can afford.

Continuing our research efforts into the aging process and the special health needs of the elderly is equally important. The 93d Congress passed legislation to establish a national institute on aging within the framework of the National Institutes of Health. The institute will be responsible for conducting and supporting psychological and biomedical research relating to the elderly, and it will provide grants for training health care personnel in the aging process.

NUTRITION

Proper nutrition is basic to the health and well-being of older Americans. Unfortunately, many older Americans do not get the diet they need—they cannot afford it. Over the past 2 years, food costs have risen more than 30 percent, and as a result, older people have had to cut back food consumption. No single item has effected older people more forcefully than the soaring cost of food.

Last July, Congress responded to these needs by approving a 3-year extension of the title VII nutrition program for older Americans.

This legislation authorizes $150 million for 1975, $200 million for 1976, and $250 million for 1977 to provide at least one hot, nutritious meal a day to senior citizens. Right now, about 215,000 meals are being served each day, and that figure will increase as Congress provides more funding.

The title VII program is one of the most successful and effective Federal programs for older Americans. Not only does it provide older citizens with a nutritious meal every day, but just as importantly, it enables them to meet friends and neighbors in a comfortable social setting.

In Iowa, over 4,100 meals are being served to senior citizens each day at almost 100 sites. I have had the opportunity to share a meal with many of them, and without exception, older people have told me that this is one Federal program really working for them. But at the same time, they are concerned that the meal program may be cut back because of the inflation that has forced many meal sites to close. There are many people waiting to enroll in the program—over 115,000 nationwide.

In spite of the obvious need for good nutrition for the elderly, President Ford directed the Department of Agriculture to cut back the food stamp program to reduce Federal spending. Nearly 2 million elderly citizens could be directly affected. Mr. President, there are programs in the national budget which need to be trimmed, and others that should be eliminated altogether, but programs that help older Americans get the nutrition they need are not among them. Without food stamps older people will be deprived of adequate diets, and eventually this will be reflected in disease levels, mortality rates, and admissions to institutions. To curtail Federal spending in this area is a false economy and a disservice to the elderly.

December 19, 1974

TRANSPORTATION

Transportation is another great need of older Americans. Transportation determines the opportunities that are available to them and often means the difference between isolation and an active life. The 1971 White House Conference on Aging found that elderly citizens must have public transportation if they are to maintain a fair and reasonable degree of mobility.

Yet we have failed to provide these services.

In many rural and urban areas, public transportation services do not exist. Where they do exist, they often are inaccessible because bus stations or stops are not within reasonable walking distances. And, many transportation vehicles have high steps or other design barriers that prevent older people from using them.

Fewer than half the individuals 65 and over are licensed to drive. Not surprisingly, older Americans are forced to rely on the most expensive forms of transportation. They must pay someone with a car to get to the doctor's office, to pick up a prescription, or to cash a social security check—simply everyday activities that most people take for granted but which pose enormous difficulties for people of limited mobility.

During congressional hearings this year, title VII nutrition project directors and participants stressed that transportation is one of their most serious problems. Where there is no transportation or meals on wheels program, it is difficult for older people to participate in the nutrition program.

That is why the Congress authorized $35 million under title III of the Older Americans Act to provide transportation services to older Americans. This authorization placed special emphasis on providing transportation services to support the nutrition programs, but it extended to other areas as well.

The Congress recognized long ago that older people should be provided adequate transportation to enable them to participate fully in society. Some money has been appropriated for this, and several major bills have been passed to meet the transportation needs of the rural and urban elderly.

Title III and IV of the Older Americans Act, the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1973, and the Urban Mass Transportation Act all include provisions to develop and improve public transportation for older citizens. It is essential that these programs not only be maintained but expanded and improved in future years.

HOUSING

Housing is another major concern of the elderly—if only because it is their No. 1 cost. Many older people's homes have grown too old or too expensive to keep; apartments have deteriorated, and many stand in need of repairs.

Perhaps as many as 6 million elderly people are living in substandard housing now, and in some parts of the country, there are people on the waiting list for every existing unit of elderly housing. In January 1973, President Nixon placed a moratorium on all housing programs, falling to take account of the proven success of housing programs for the elderly. As a result, Congress enacted new legislation to reinstate the section 202 housing program—the most successful program ever enacted for older Americans.

This legislation will allow us to move toward the goal of building 120,000 units of elderly housing each year—the goal set by the White House Conference on Aging. The Housing Act of 1974 also provides that low-income elderly living in federally subsidized housing will not have to pay more than 25 percent of their income for rent. The Federal Government will assume the remaining cost.

While this legislation begins to address the housing problems of older Americans. It does not mean a total solution. Far from it. There is a desperate need to increase the availability of supportive social services—such as home helpers, counseling, and transportation services—to enable people to stay in their homes. The Federal Government should continue to share the cost of providing these services because they will prevent many older people from being institutionalized and give many older people the opportunity to remain active.

OLDER AMERICANS ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1973

One of the most significant congressional responses this session to the concerns of the elderly was the enactment of the Older Americans comprehensive services amendments which increased the funding levels of a variety of programs directly serving the elderly and provided authority for new programs in the field of aging. One very important section of the new bill, title IX, authorized funds for an older Americans community public service employment program for the low-income wage earner 55 and over.

Administered by the Department of Labor, the program is designed to provide part-time employment opportunities for older people who wish to work. During fiscal 1975, $12 million was appropriated for the program and, hopefully, that amount can be doubled next year to help older workers supplement their retirement income.

Not enough attention is being given to older workers. Once unemployed, the older worker is unlikely to return to the labor force even though he or she may be particularly knowledgeable or skilled. One solution—already successful—is retraining older workers for new careers. Experience demonstrates that older workers are extremely dependable when given the opportunity to work, and the Department of Labor's Operation Mainstream is one particularly successful example. It puts the skills and talents of the elderly to work through programs like Senior Community Service Aides, Green Thumb, and Senior Aides. And under title IX of the Older Americans Act amendments—the Older American Community Services Employment Act—more employment opportunities will become available as the appropriations increase.

OLDER VETERANS

For older people who once served in the Armed Forces, the problems of growing old are complicated by the inadequacies of the veterans' pension system. The system often provides only minimal help to those who have the greatest need. This year, the Congress approved the Veterans and Survivors Pension Adjustment Act to substantially improve benefits for veterans, widows, and dependents. The measure includes a 12-percent increase in veterans' pensions, and it will increase by $400 the amount of outside income an individual may receive before any reductions are made in veterans' pensions.

This will prevent this year's social security increases from causing sharp cuts in veterans' pensions. While this legislation is a step in the right direction, more can and should be done. Extensive reform of the veterans' pension system is needed to make the system more responsive to the needs of veterans and their families, and to insure that future social security increases do not diminish the veterans' pensions. Hopefully, the new Congress will take additional affirmative action to make these changes.

Mr. President, there are other problems that have not been touched yet: Consumer fraud, the special problems of the rural and minority aged, and the necessity for education programs. This Congress has helped more older Americans live a comfortable and active life, but we must increase those efforts. Too much is at stake—the lives and happiness of too many older people—for us to stop now.

I yield back the remainder of my time. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

THE M-60 TANK

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I was disturbed to learn this week that the cost of the M-60 tank has increased by 38 percent within the past year.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on General Legislation of the Committee on the Armed Services, I have scheduled hearings on this matter for January 14.

I have sent a letter to the Secretary of the Army, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

December 19, 1974

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

Washington, D.C., December 18, 1974.
U.S. SENATE,
Hon. HOWARD H. CALLAWAY,
Secretary of the Army,
The Pentagon,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In a reprogramming hearing I conducted yesterday for the Senate Committee on Armed Services, I was shocked to hear testimony that the cost of the Army's newest modern M60 tank has risen 38 percent within the last year. President Ford just this morning expressed strong concern over an eight to ten percentage increase in the price of steel.

I think it important that the Army demand a thorough and detailed justification for such a tremendous increase in price of the M60 tank. A 38 percent increase seems to me totally unreasonable.

Just as President Ford has expressed strong concern over the eight to ten percent increase in the price of steel, I want to express my strong concern over the 38 percent increase in the price of the M60 tank. I am scheduling a hearing on this matter before the Subcommittee on General Legislation of the Armed Services Committee. The hearing will be held at 9:30 a.m. on January 14, 1975. I would appreciate your cooperating fully in assuring the availability of expert witnesses and I would hope that between now and the Committee hearing the Department of the Army would delve deeply into this matter and be in a position to submit to the Committee detailed information concerning such a huge price increase.

Sincerely,

HARRY F. BYRD, JR.,
Chairman, Subcommittee on General
Legislation.

THE EMBARGO AGAINST CUBA

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, the Associated Press yesterday, in an article datelined Washington, carried the following report, of which I shall read three paragraphs:

Henry A. Kissinger, the Secretary of State, was reported yesterday as willing to support a move in the Organization of American States that could lead to an end of the economic and diplomatic embargo against Cuba.

Sol M. Linowitz, a former United States ambassador to the organization, told reporters Mr. Kissinger assured the Commission on United States-Latin American Relations that American policy concerning Cuba might be changed, perhaps as early as March when inter-American foreign ministers meet in Buenos Aires.

Mr. Linowitz used a peculiar phrasing. "We were assured by the secretary that the policy now in progress would through another mechanism advance . . . in subsequent meetings, perhaps in Buenos Aires."

Mr. President, regardless of what the Organization of American States may do, an OAS decision in the future to terminate its sanctions policy against Cuba would not obligate member States to renew diplomatic relations with Cuba or alter their bilateral policies. Insofar as the United States is concerned, legislation would be required. Proposed legislation was introduced in this session of Congress. Nothing has come of it, and of course nothing will come of it in this session.

I do not see how the United States can change its policy toward Castro until Castro changes his policy toward the United States. That, Mr. President, is the position of the President of the United States.

I have a letter signed by Brent Scowcroft, lieutenant general, USAF, Deputy Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs. It is addressed to former Ambassador Pawley, who is now a resident of Miami. I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D.C., November 16, 1974.
Hon. WILLIAM D. PAWLEY,
Miami, Fla.

DEAR AMBASSADOR PAWLEY: The President has asked me to thank you for your letter of September 5 in which you expressed your opinion that the United States should not reestablish relations with Cuba because of Cuba's ties with the Soviet Union. The enclosed publication on Cuba-Soviet relationships was also appreciated.

As you know, the Organization of American States has been considering whether to continue its economic and diplomatic sanctions against Cuba. At the recent meeting in Quito, a proposal to lift the sanctions was not passed because of insufficient support. In any event, an OAS decision in the future to terminate its sanctions policy against Cuba would not obligate member states to renew diplomatic relations with Cuba or alter their bilateral policies.

The President has stated publicly on several occasions that the U.S. would be willing to consider changing its policy toward Cuba when Cuba changes its policies toward us and the other nations in this Hemisphere. Cuba's military ties with the Soviet Union would, of course, be one element which the U.S. would consider. However, as the President has also noted, we have seen no real evidence of a change in the attitude of the Cuban government towards us and therefore see no basis for a change in our policy at this time.

Sincerely,

BRENT SCOWCROFT,
Lieutenant General, USAF, Deputy Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs.

FUNDING FOR THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that three editorials dealing with the United Nations—one from the Northern Virginia Daily of December 5, one from the Danville, Va., Bee of December 5, and one from the Roanoke Times of December 5—be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Northern Virginia Daily, Dec. 5, 1974]

LOCKED IN ON DISASTER COURSE

Senators Hubert Humphrey and Gale McGee recently shocked millions of Americans when they issued this statement expressing their joint view relative to the United Nations:

"The United Nations Charter as adopted by the Congress of the United States and ratified by the Senate, has the same standing as a provision of our Constitution. It is the supreme law of the land."

We think it safe to say that there aren't many Americans, except for a small handful of one-worlders, who are willing to endorse the tenet that the Charter of the United Nations is the supreme law of the United States. Yet, this is precisely what two distinguished members of the U.S. Senate said must be the motivating basis and the determining inspiration in our consideration of international affairs.

It would be stupid folly, indeed, to follow their advice. There has been nothing in the U.N.'s actions in recent years to justify a complacent faith in its sense of justice or right.

The world body has indeed become a charade, a place where the irresponsible among both large and small member governments can and do join to punish those of whom they disapprove, and a parade ground for the oddities of world diplomacy.

In any recital of the names of sovereign U.N. members which have been victimized by a militant, unreasonable and vindictive majority in the U.N., the names of Rhodesia, National China, and South Africa would lead the list. This same list will soon contain the name of Israel if the African, Communist and Arab nations have their way.

In the category of an oddity, totally inappropriate in a body seeking only peaceful means to determine differences, the reception given the gun-toting terrorist, Yasser Arafat of the Palestine Liberation Organization, takes honors.

Going back a bit farther, one finds the rape of Hungary by Soviet Russia and the bludgeoning of Czechoslovakia distressing reminders of U.N. inability to act effectively to protect the rights of the trampled.

Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr., in a speech before the Senate, pointed out the utter hopelessness of a U.N. under the domination of the African, Asian and Communist bloc nations, which represent 64 percent of the total membership, ever being able to treat international matters on a totally unbiased basis.

The Senator told his colleagues: "During the 29 years that have passed since its formation, its character and composition have changed radically."

"Originally having a membership of 51 countries, all with long-established records of government, it now has 138 members, most having come into being only in recent years. "The United States is pathetic in its impotence. On the motion to oust South Africa, which the United States strongly opposed, our country was able to muster only 22 votes—against 91 affirmative votes."

"On the resolution permitting the terrorist Arafat to address the United Nations, the United States found itself with only three allies—with 105 nations in opposition. On the motion to give official observer status to the Arafat group, the vote was 95 to 17."

"The United States, which puts up most of the money to run the world organization, and which has been shamelessly courting the African and Asian nations, has received in return nothing but contempt."

"The natural question, since we are irrevocably committed to the U.N., is what can this country do at this point to instill a sense of responsibility into an organization that is rapidly being taken over by a group of member nations that lack a sense of historic national perspective?"

The U.S. possesses one very strong, convincing weapon. According to Sen. Byrd, since the creation of the U.N. the United States has contributed a total of $4.7 billion to the world body. The U.S. can and should demand that the U.N. put its financial affairs in order.

Of the 138 members in the U.N., 92 have an outstanding debt of $204 million in back dues. The Soviet Union and its two member Republics of Byelorussia and the Ukraine owe $110 million.

The Foreign Aid Authorization bill—which the Senate will soon consider—provides a total of $194 million for the U.N., an increase of $37.5 million, or 24 percent, over the previous year. How can this kind of increased support be justified in keeping afloat an organization the majority of whose members are out to push the U.S. around?

December 19, 1974

Only money, or the prospect of the lack of it, will be a strong enough tool to restore some semblance of sanity to U.N. actions. A 24 percent increase in our financial support is clearly not justified at this time.

On the contrary, the use of our weapon—a substantial reduction in the amount we are currently allocating to U.N. support—may bring the maverick nations to their senses.

We thoroughly agree with Sen. Byrd's promise to oppose the $37.5 million increase on the grounds that the move may send a signal to those who are prostituting the purposes of the U.N. We would suggest going the extra mile by telling the U.N. that unless it shapes up we may even consider reducing the allocation we are now making.

[From the Danville, (Va.) Bee, Dec. 5, 1974]

REDUCE UN FUNDING

The United Nations came into formal existence October 24, 1945, when 29 nations ratified its charter.

In retrospect, that may have been the world organization's finest hour.

Despite the many humanitarian accomplishments of UN agencies, the recent actions of the General Assembly and the Security Council have soared to the heights of irresponsibility.

In almost back-to-back moves, the UN ousted a legitimate member—South Africa—because of its internal policies, a specific violation of the UN Charter.

Before the world could absorb this move, the UN turned around and, in effect, recognized a government in exile—the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). This, too, violated the UN Charter, not to mention the irresponsibility of conferring legitimacy on an organization bent on the destruction of a UN member nation—Israel.

These are just some of the most recent excesses by the world body, many of which have caused its most ardent supporters to question its present activities.

The list of its past exercises in hypocrisy is lengthy. The UN stood virtually mute while the USSR suppressed liberalization moves in Czechoslovakia and brutally repressed similar moves in Hungary. Then there was the expulsion of Nationalist China, a sovereign nation to please the Peoples Republic of China.

In addition, the UN has shown a growing toleration for totalitarianism, judging by the actions of some member nations, notably the African bloc.

For these and so many past abuses, we support Sen. Harry F. Byrd Jr.'s proposal to reduce U.S. aid to the UN. We would suggest abandoning this East River diplomatic brothel altogether except it might be turned into a base for terrorist operations within this nation.

Since the birth of the UN, the U.S. has poured $4.7 billion into the operations of the world body.

Sen. Byrd has noted that 92 of the 138 UN members owe $204 million in back dues. The USSR and its two member "republics"—Byelorussia and the Ukraine—owe $110 million.

The U.S. Senate now is considering the Foreign Aid Authorization bill which will deliver $194 million to the UN coffers, a 24 percent increase in the U.S. annual contribution.

There is no justification for this increase and, in the absence of some more mature action by UN member nations in the future, there is precious little justification for any U.S. funding at all. The money could be put to far better use, such as aid to the City of New York, which must tolerate the excesses of UN delegates who are immune from prosecution for violation of that city's laws. And diplomatic violators are legion.

We will go Sen. Byrd one better. Not only do we oppose any increase in U.S. aid to the UN, but we suggest a reduction in our standard contributions to signal our displeasure—to put it mildly—at the growing irresponsibility of this world organization.

[From the Roanoke Times, Dec. 5, 1974]

WHY REWARD THE U.N.?

U.S. Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr., Ind.-Va., deserves support in his opposition to increasing the amount of the money the United States gives to the United Nations. The United States will show patience enough merely by remaining the largest financial contributor to another failure in the search for a parliament of man. To continue to pay the same amount will be seen by some as too much; there is no need to feed the hand that bites you.

To the idealists and the hopeful, whom this newspaper has encouraged over the years, the Byrd proposal will seem like a display of sour grapes. Granted, the disappointment with the U.N. leaves a sour taste. But when the United Nations was formed it was composed of 51 governments with different ideologies but with reasonable maturity. Now it has 138 members and is completely dominated by the African, Asian and Communist bloc nations which have 64 percent of the total membership.

Theoretically a majority should have its way, but a majority of what? If China, India and the Soviet Union should vote together, a majority of the world's people would be represented therein (whether they knew it or not). But it would not represent the preponderance of power, literacy, health or wisdom and experience in government. There is something silly in listening to advice from Uganda where the government chops up opponents and feeds them to crocodiles. It is bad enough to read the hypocrisy of speeches from the Soviet Union.

The African bloc in the United Nations is completely in accord with the Arab bloc. Together, with the Soviet Union and Communist China, they led the irresponsible endorsement by the United Nations General Assembly of Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). There is no need to reward an organization which approves the one group for which negotiation with Israel is impossible.

Not only should Mr. Byrd's warning be heeded. The United States should consider abandoning voting in the General Assembly. The act of voting carries implications of obedience and conformity which ought not to and do not exist. The United Nations now is something to be observed and listened to and not to be automatically approved and overly-assisted by American money.

HUGE SOVIET GRAIN APPETITE

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial published in the Staunton, Va., Leader, captioned "Huge Soviet Grain Appetite," be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

HUGE SOVIET GRAIN APPETITE

The USSR harvests about twice as much wheat as the United States and produces normally far more wheat than they need for human consumption and for export. Yet, this year, called the second largest harvest year in their history, they tried to buy a half-billion dollars worth of wheat and corn from this country, but finally agreed to a purchase of $380-millions worth.

Why this huge grain appetite? The continuing purchases of grain abroad is explained by the fact that the Soviets are both importers and exporters—importers because they need increasing amounts of animal feed for their livestock expansion program; exporters because they have standing grain export commitments of at least five million metric tons a year, mostly in wheat shipments to their friends, such as India, and allies such as Cuba.

There is also the comparative performance of agriculture in the two systems. Agriculture has a traditionally low priority under the Soviet system, which favors heavy industries and defense. The 48,000 collective and state farms are inherently less productive than the 2.8 million farms of the United States, most of them family-owned and worked by one or two persons.

Granted that the Soviet may be sweating to get enough grain to ship to North Korea, North Vietnam, Cuba, and to other communist East European countries, and to India, as surety of her support for them on world issues—this is not our concern. What is our responsibility is the pale-faced child whose family finds even week-old bread too expensive to buy, and who rarely if ever, gets meat, which would be lower in price if feed grains were plentiful.

While lower and middle income families suffer from the shortage of grains, and the effect of this on their meat and other essential protein supplies, American grain travels across the Pacific for the USSR, saving them from a haul by rail across Siberia. It lands on North Korean, North Vietnam, and India's docks labelled "Wheat From The Soviet Union."

Is the $380-millions worth this and its inevitable consequences?

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I yield the remaining 2 minutes to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I was not seeking recognition.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. I thank the distinguished Senator from Virginia and the distinguished Senator from New Mexico. I will share the 2 minutes with any other Senators who desire time.

SENATOR HAROLD E. HUGHES

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, many of our distinguished colleagues are not going to be with us next year. We are all filled with great feelings of sadness in seeing each of them go, and I know that many of us are putting in the Record tributes to each of them. I join in the tributes to each of our colleagues.

I particularly want to mention now what I think is a unique situation. I do not know that it has ever happened in the United States Senate before; perhaps it has. It is about one of our colleagues who is leaving the Senate, the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES).

Senator HUGHES is not retiring because of being here many years. He is not retiring because he is ready to retire from life, as such. He is not retiring because of an involuntary problem, as could happen to all of us. He is retiring for a very unique reason.

He is retiring after serving one term, after having a very distinguished career in the Senate, after having been the Governor of his State. He could easily have sought and won renomination and reelection to be a Member of the Senate. But we find that Senator HUGHES is retiring because he feels that he can better carry out God's work by retiring from the Senate and by working and devoting all his time for the ministry of God's work and of Christ's work. I think it is unique for a man in public life to feel that calling.

Many of us who have had an opportunity to benefit from the commitment that Senator HUGHES has, and his strong personal life, wish him well at this time. We view with mixed feelings the fact that he will no longer be with us as a Member of the Senate. However, at the same time, it is with great pride that we see him take this commitment, to see that he is going to follow this calling, and we know what that can mean to all the people in the future.

I know that a number of my colleagues wish to speak on this matter, so at this time I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Georgia (Mr. NUNN).

Mr. NUNN. I thank the Senator from Florida.

Mr. President, I certainly endorse what the Senator from Florida has said.

Mr. President, when HAROLD HUGHES decided not to run for reelection, the Senate suffered a great loss. Our loss, however, will be the gain of all who come in contact with his ministry.

His contributions to the Senate during the past 6 years have been of more than passing significance. As a member of the Armed Services Committee, he has developed a very sensitive perception of America's military problems and has made a great contribution in that area.

Through his leadership as chairman of the Special Subcommittee on Alcoholism and Narcotics, congressional attention was focused on efforts to prevent alcohol and drug abuse. The legislation which subsequently passed is landmark in scope for it set up broad programs to deal with alcoholism and drug abuse as medical, rather than criminal problems.

As chairman of the Armed Services Subcommittee on Drug Abuse, he has performed a vital service by working to identify and solve the complex drug problems of the military services. In addition, I have worked closely with HAROLD on other Armed Services Committee matters and have marveled at his in-depth and sensitive approach to military problems. He is a Senator of great ability who has built an outstanding record of service.

However, we will miss his presence here for a far more important reason. Our distinguished colleague from Iowa has been the acknowledged spiritual leader of the Senate. We will miss his inspirational messages delivered at the regular Wednesday morning prayer breakfasts. Both in the prayer breakfast meetings and on the floor of the Senate, HAROLD HUGHES has reminded us constantly that a deep religious faith is the foundation of America's strength and greatness. He has reminded us that we are all children of God and ought to do His will and obey His laws. He has reminded us that God has a purpose for every life and every nation and he has made a deep impact on each and every Member of the U.S. Senate.

What ultimate purpose God has for the life of HAROLD HUGHES, I do not know; but I do know that the purpose will be a great one—for HAROLD is a great man with unlimited potential for goodness. I also know that he is a totally selfless man, whose zeal for the U.S. Senate is surpassed only by his zeal for ministering to the needs of his fellow man. His dedication to God and to his fellow man governs his every action.

Members of the Senate who have benefited from his spiritual guidance—and that includes all 100 of us—will follow HAROLD's future activity with deepest interest and affection, and we hope that he will frequently give us the benefit of his fellowship and guidance. He is, I think, going to find a renewed sense of strength in ministering to his fellow men, not only in Washington and the Senate, but indeed, throughout the country and the world.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR ABOUREZEK UNTIL 3:30

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the time has run on Senators for whom I have already gotten orders, the distinguished Senator from South Dakota may be recognized until the hour of 3:30 p.m. today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise to join my colleagues from Florida and Georgia to pay tribute to Senator HAROLD HUGHES. I hope that everyone understands that we have many distinguished men leaving us at the end of this Congress and that, by singling him out, I certainly do not intend in any way to deny the great efforts and the great contributions that all the others have made. Separately, I shall pay tribute to them in the Record.

I rise today because I can say a little more unequivocally than the Senator from Florida, having had it researched, that indeed, it is unprecedented in the history of the U.S. Senate that a U.S. Senator would resign from this body as an elected person and not seek reelection for the distinct reason that he seeks to dedicate his full life, time, effort, and energy to the service of God.

We have not been able to find that any others have left with that avowed conviction and commitment, in these same circumstances.

Then we look at what the U.S. Senate is and what people around the world think it is, and we know that it is a very aspired-to position. There are leaders all over the Nation who say, "My ambition, my desire, my fulfillment would be to be a Member of the U.S. Senate."

Today, we pay tribute to a man who has been Governor and then reached that great pinnacle of U.S. Senator; he not only reached it, but has been a very successful one. As he looks out at the world, he does not leave the U.S. Senate in fear. He is not leaving it because he does not think we can do things for the world or that we can not do things for humanity, or that we can not serve our God from here. He says:

I feel within me the commitment to give all of my energy and all of my power to bring people closer together by urging that they follow the Word and listen to the message.

I commend him for that. I would be remiss if I did not, before he leaves, say that I think it is unprecedented, but I think he is an unprecedented sort of fellow, with an unprecedented kind of mission in the seventies. Therefore he is the Paul of the seventies, in my opinion. He has been called just as certainly as Paul was called. He has been called from a very distinguished position of leadership and now moves to one where he thinks he can contribute more by helping other leaders throughout the world understand that the chaos and confusion that is in this world will not be solved by us, but can only be solved when we cooperate with that Divine Spirit of which he feels so strongly and that all people know is needed now to guide us, individually and collectively, in the world.

I thank him for what he has done for the Senate. I thank him for what he has done for the country. I thank him for the spirit that he has sent out to the world because of his message.

And last, I thank him for what he has done for me, because he has made me ever more cognizant of my relationship to my God in terms of my role as a Senator. He has made me more cognizant of the Word. He has made me more cognizant of my limitations.

Yet, he has not made me reluctant to strive in this body, knowing that he is out there trying to convince others that, without the message, without the Word, without a relationship with the Almighty, the Creator, we are not going to solve our problems. From my standpoint, I thank him.

For those who are not here who, I know, would want to say that, I extend my thanks for them.

I yield the remainder of my time to the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. President, I join with the other Senators in complimenting the distinguished Senator from Iowa, Mr. HAROLD HUGHES, for making a selection that actually sacrifices political desires that he obviously has, as all of us do who are in the Senate, and for pursuing his desires in another area. It is in this area that he has contributed so much to the Members of the Senate.

He has been a driving force in the national Presidential prayer breakfast meeting, and has had a lot to do with the establishment in all of the States of Governors' prayer breakfasts.

He has also helped us to establish around the world various prayer groups, particularly in the areas of government leadership. I think that this shows his sincerity in leaving the Senate for a higher calling.

Those of us who have been attending the prayer breakfasts in the Senate on Wednesday morning find it very rewarding. We find that it provides for us a better understanding of our own religions, our own role in life, and of how to weigh the obligations we have to God with the obligations that we have to our constituents.

It tends to give a more definitive interpretation to rendering unto Caesar what is Caesar's and unto God what is God's.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUNN). All the time of the Senator from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I have 1 more minute from the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I yield 1 more minute.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is my pleasure to express my sincere appreciation to a colleague in the Senate for his contribution, which I consider to be very important, to the junior Senator from Oklahoma and to other Senators. I think his example has been beneficial to the Senate as a whole, and I am very glad that it will be available and beneficial to the Members of the Senate and to various leaders throughout the world in the future.

I compliment him on his decision. I wish him well, and I look forward to working with him in his endeavor.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from South Dakota is recognized until 3:30.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, did the Senator from Maine wish to speak concerning the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), or on another matter?

Mr. MUSKIE. I wish to speak concerning Senator HUGHES.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Maine be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes, notwithstanding the previous order.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Reserving the right to object, would the Senator include in that order that that 5 minutes be added to the time I shall have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, the Senator from Maine is recognized.

Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN) for his courtesy.

Mr. President, I find it difficult to make this statement about the distinguished Senator from Iowa, HAROLD HUGHES, who has been such a good and close friend. He has decided to end his Government, but not his public, service.

This big, kindly man who has been so great a help to me and to all of us has decided to heed the call of a higher authority, and to take God's work for his own. He served only one term here. But in the 6 years we have been together in this Chamber and these Halls, he has served his people, and his colleagues, well.

His activities as a practicing politician have been marked by one common theme—they concern people. They concern the physical health and psychological well-being of people, the quality of people's lives and the quality of the people's government, and they concern the integrity of the people's institutions.

One of his best known achievements, of course, is the Federal Drug Abuse and Drug Dependence Prevention, Treatment and Rehabilitation Act of 1970, which reshaped the Federal effort to control the abuse of drugs and care for drug-dependent people. The act set Federal programs on a humane and reasonable course, and millions of Americans are the beneficiaries of his efforts.

One of the reasons for his success was his own struggle with alcoholism. HAROLD HUGHES had been at the bottom of life. He knows the meaning of addiction. And he helped us understand it better.

He is a political reformer in the best sense, and it was reform which drew him to politics in his native Iowa. As a trucker in Iowa, he felt changes were needed in the State regulatory agency, so he sought and won a seat on the agency. Since then his name has been associated with a variety of efforts in the course of his career as Governor and then Senator to improve our political and governmental institutions.

His persistence exposed the secret bombing of Cambodia, and he was among the first to perceive the Vietnam mistake. In addition, he has been active in the reform movement of the Democratic Party.

HAROLD HUGHES has also been involved in a wide range of other issues which reflect his concern for people and his commitment to ideas rather than ideology. In a State with less than 1 percent minority population, he was a champion of civil rights. In a State where the ravages of pollution are less severe than in major urban areas, he has been a dedicated environmentalist.

We will miss the expertise and commitment of this Senator of enormous integrity. We will miss his capacity to touch the conscience of the Senate with the depth of his feelings on fundamental values.

But it is more as a man than as a Senator that we will remember HAROLD HUGHES. He is a man whose personality is as big as his frame, whose stability and kindness have been a source of constant support for many of us—a man whose warmth and goodwill can draw people to him and to each other.

HAROLD HUGHES plans to join the Fellowship Foundation and International Christian Leadership. I know that in his new role he will continue to be a people's advocate, and ours and future generations will continue to benefit from his public service.

Jane and I wish him and Eva Mae the best of luck in their new endeavor. I shall be ever grateful to him for the friendship and unswerving loyalty which he extended to me at a time of adversity.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield me the remainder of his time?

Mr. MUSKIE. I yield my remaining time to the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARTLETT). The Senator's time was used up in its entirety.

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent to set aside the regular order for 1 minute.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HAROLD HUGHES OF IOWA

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, no one speaks in the U.S. Senate with a stronger or more persuasive voice than my senior colleague from Iowa, HAROLD E. HUGHES. The Senator from Maine and other Senators have spoken here this afternoon about his strong moral leadership. That phrase expresses it better than any other because he is in many respects the conscience of the Senate.

After 16 years of distinguished service to the people of Iowa in statewide elective office, Senator HUGHES is leaving the Senate for nondenominational religious lay work.

It would be difficult, if not impossible, to do justice to the unique and towering contribution this rare man has made to his State, his country, and the Senate. It has often been said about HAROLD HUGHES that "here is a man who really cares about people." Somehow, I cannot think of a finer and more sensitive tribute that could be accorded to any man.

His great compassion illuminates everything he does—in public life or in his daily contacts with the people around him. He has attained national fame, but he has never forgotten where he came from—he has never lost his love for his own State and his own people. He has made a decision to dedicate all of his time to spiritual work, but he has made it clear that he is not withdrawing from the effort to solve those issues involving human values with which he has been so identified as Governor and Senator—peace, poverty, civil rights, social justice, concern for the deprived and the handicapped. HAROLD HUGHES' new work will be "a continuation, not a withdrawal." As he has said:

Our constitutional system was founded on faith in God as well as love of liberty. And he strikes a chord in all of us when he says:

Reassertion of our moral purpose is the greatest need of our country in this time of crisis.

Many people think of HAROLD HUGHES as a popular and charismatic figure, a man whom people supported even when they disagreed with him because they knew he was honest and fair and compassionate. That feeling is right and appropriate, but it sometimes leads people to forget his extraordinary achievements as Governor and Senator.

Historians will look back at the years he served as Iowa's most popular Governor and note the major accomplishments that extend across the entire range of public affairs—accomplishments like providing adequate and realistic State funding of public school education, replacing the corruption of statewide illegal key clubs by rational State control of liquor, the establishment of area vocational-technical training and educational television, the institution of State civil service and statutory State commissions on the aging and civil rights, tax relief for the elderly and improved subsistence for dependent children, accelerated industrial development. And these are only a few of the extraordinary achievements of the HUGHES years in the Iowa statehouse.

As my colleagues know, he carried this same record of purpose, conviction, and progress into the Senate—leading the way to historic alcoholism and drug legislation, fighting for the ending of American involvement in Vietnam, uncovering the secret Cambodian air war and the Lavelle case, championing the cause of the common man as a member of the Labor and Public Welfare and Veterans' Affairs Committees.

Let me read something HAROLD HUGHES said several years ago:

Within all of us, I sense a deep longing to hear the great themes of America's purpose as a nation reaffirmed—not in the context of old crises and past glories, but against the great challenges of modern times; challenges to the community of man and to the individual human heart.

We must use tough methods and hard-nosed practical programs. We must have order and respect for law in our nation or nothing will succeed.

But we must reject the false prophesy of those who would have us forfeit our decency, compassion and devotion to justice—for any reason.

This statement not only captures essential quality of HAROLD HUGHES, but it gives us sound and morally responsible national direction for the difficult period that lies ahead, a direction that is so desperately needed.

HAROLD HUGHES knows the problems that ordinary and disadvantaged people have because he has lived those problems himself. As we all know, he speaks with utter candor and, sometimes, with wry humor, about his own fallibilities. In short, there is no one like him.

His integrity speaks for itself because it is based in true humility and compassion for his fellow human beings.

We will miss HAROLD HUGHES sorely in the Senate. But we know that his positive influence on the country will continue in his new work as he continues to fulfill his profoundly personal commitment to God.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert a series of articles about Senator HUGHES in the Record.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the Des Moines Register, Sept. 7, 1973]

HUGHES: GOD'S WORK COMES FIRST

(By Jerry Szumski)

God's work comes first, Senator Harold Hughes said Thursday.

"I'm sure that thousands will believe that I have coped out, but that's not the case," Hughes confided as he considered the impact on his party of his withdrawal from politics.

"I only hope that as time passes they will come to understand that I am devoting my life to a cause I feel is more worthy."

Hughes was perspiring heavily and talking quietly, as stunned Democrats stood nearby in hangdog huddles trying to accept the loss of their leader.

Yes, said Hughes, there are unattained goals and, yes, the party people want him—have implored him—to run again in 1974.

But God's work comes first, he repeated. A reporter said the little room in the Hotel Savery resembled a mortician's visiting chamber. Men were on the verge of tears. They shook their heads as Hughes told the press he's quitting politics after the Senate terms ends in January, 1975.

"I'M AT PEACE"

Although Hughes wasn't smiling, he said he wasn't the least bit sad.

"I'm happy. I'm at peace with myself. I've found what I'm going to be doing with a great deal of joy," he told an interviewer.

Hughes said in the press conference that he believes, rightly or wrongly, that "I can move people through a spiritual approach more effectively than I have been able to achieve through the political approach."

But, he was asked, what crystallized the decision? Watergate? Something else in politics?

"The people have been confused for the past decade," said Hughes. "The responsibility is on the people. Government will never be any stronger than they are."

"The past three presidents have stated as a case for a need for spiritual regeneration. None could provide the basic leadership for spiritual regeneration . . ."

"This country is in jeopardy not from the outside, but from within each man and woman."

Let cynics scoff at his beliefs, Hughes said. It won't be the first time.

"I've been against a wall all my life one way or another. The ultimate victory will be God's victory."

Moments earlier he told reporters, "Today I lay down the mantle of my political life," but added that he might be a Democratic candidate someday if the purpose is worthy.

"Specifically, I will have the freedom to do whatever I feel called by God to do," he said. "There is no salary (in his future job with two Washington religious foundations). That's difficult to understand but true. . . . Whatever my needs, they will be met."

He once considered entering the ministry, Hughes said. That was when he emerged from a siege of alcoholism.

"I've devoted much of my life the past 20 years since I quit drinking to the service of God, as I understand it. Friends have told me it's the right thing for me to do. It's not going to be a sacrifice. . . . For me there will be a gain."

"SAVED A LITTLE"

He said he likes to mow his own lawn and tend his roses and be with his family, and politics interferes with such things.

It's been "a beautiful, comfortable, happy life" in politics for 11 years and I've saved a little."

(Hughes said earlier that he has $35,000 in equity in his $65,000 home and has about $20,000 worth of government bonds.)

He stopped speaking. A few people from the audience approached.

"We'll be praying for you," said Bob Erickson, a Des Moines contractor.

Terry Yakish, 19, a student, told Hughes: "You know, there's not much left to believe in in politics any more, but men like you restore my faith in the system."

"God bless you," said Edris (Soapy) Owens, a tough union leader whose eyes were wet.

Polk County Supervisor Tom Whitney compared Hughes to Thomas More, who gave up his head rather than betray his principle. He told the senator:

"God said, 'I will always be with you.' That's all you need to know."

Responded Hughes: "That's all you need to know."

Finally Hughes broke the pall, telling State Democratic Chairman Cliff Larson he could raise a lot of money for the party by throwing a going-away party and a pre-going-away party toward the end of Hughes' term.

"The leader is gone," Larson said after Hughes and aides left the hotel.

"But like he said himself, there's no man who can't be replaced."

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 14, 1974]

SENATOR HUGHES LOOKS TO CHRIST

(By William Greider)

God hath favored our undertakings, as the Great Seal of the republic reminds us.

That is still an important idea in American politics and Washington takes its religion seriously. The trappings of faith are carefully draped about the government, decorative prayers, important cathedrals for important worshippers, a personal church in the White House.

Then a man like Harold Everett Hughes comes along and this town can't handle it. Hughes is a primitive Christian, elemental and mystical in his belief. Friends blush for him, opponents sneer.

"I believe, for me, that Christ has entered my life," said the senior senator from Iowa. "That the Holy Spirit is living with me, directing and guiding me, and I intend to follow it."

The words are too heavy for political coin. Powerful public men do not speak openly on giving themselves over to anything. But Hughes talks about it as if this is the most important thing he can tell you about himself.

"It sort of tickles me," the senator said, laughing gently. "What did Jesus say? Thank you, Father, for confusing the minds of men, the powerful and the rich and playing to simple people and the children the truth of life."

So Harold Hughes, who came to Washington with so much promise for conventional success, is preparing to leave it behind, more or less as a stranger here. Not with rancor, though he has been frustrated by the system. Nor with contempt for it, though he believes that government and politicians are impotent in those things which matter most.

"The one thing you have to realize, that I think has been missed," Hughes said easily, "is that the most important thing in my life is Jesus Christ. And, you see, that makes the difference."

"It's not that I don't believe that I could work in the Senate, effectively and powerfully, and rise to be a powerful man in the annals of this nation. I believe that I would do that if I stayed here. I might even someday again have a shot at the presidency. I don't know, if I willed to stay in the political structure."

"But that's not really the important thing to me. The important thing, I think, that people need to know in this country is that there is something more important than the structures of government on this earth. That there is something more important than the office of President or the office of senator."

"That men and women can lay these things down, without defeat or illness or something else. To say willingly that I give the power to those who desire it and I will work in a greater power, which is the power of prayer and the Holy Spirit."

That paradox is as old as the mystery of Christ—the notion that only by yielding power does one find a greater power, that only spurning wealth and title insures everlasting reward, that one sees God only when blind to self.

What on earth is the senator talking about? It is a difficult idea, especially for the nation's capital where the trafficking in power is the principal industry. It even bothers many of Hughes' fellow Christians, who believe in the same divinity and the same social causes which he championed as senator and as a three-term governor of Iowa.

December 19, 1974

COP-OUT, SAY SOME

Some of them call it a "cop-out," his decision to leave public life at the end of his Senate term next year to become a full-time religious lay worker. He should stay in the Senate they think he can do "the most good."

Hughes treats the objections gently, confidently. It is probably a mistake to leave public office as a Christian gesture, though it is, because Harold Hughes does not deal in symbolic actions. The Holy Spirit is alive and active in this world, today, his faith tells him. The message of the Bible is not poetic metaphor, it is the truth. The power which he seeks is real.

What is the nature of that power? "I just don't think governments, men sitting down together at a table and signing documents, are going to bring peace on earth," said Hughes whose own antiwar politics have been as zealous as anyone's.

"I've been on this earth now going on 52 years and I can't remember a time without war or the threat of war," he said. "Every generation of youth in my lifetime has died and bled, for what we say is to preserve the freedom of democracy on the face of the earth. And, yet, men have not learned the basic truths of life."

"What would happen if this nation would have a conviction of heart and kneel and pray through Christ to God for peace on earth? What would happen if this nation learned, as Jesus said, to confuse your enemy by loving your enemy?"

"The directions of man," Hughes sighed at what seems to him obvious folly. "The nation builds engines of death, continuously and ongoing, saying that this is the way we keep peace on earth, by building engines of death. God says in Christ that the way we bring peace on earth is by learning to love the enemy, by learning to love your neighbor."

MUST TOUCH HEART

So Harold Hughes is convinced that the peace movement begins, not with the defense budgets and the secret government war-making, though he has energetically assaulted both, but in the hearts of American citizens. They must be touched by "the fire of the Spirit," as he calls it, and Hughes means to spread that fire.

The senator talks regularly these days about his religious convictions, as people come around to ask him why a man would leave the club. At first, he wondered about giving interviews on the subject because he knows from experience how difficult it is to explain one man's faith to another, how easy it is for the other to misconstrue things. After prayer, Hughes decided that he should "witness" in print as well as in person.

The trouble is, there is no way to reproduce on the printed page the precise effect of Harold Hughes in person, explaining himself. He is a large man and magnetic by nature, with a brooding cast to his heavy features.

His expression seems always preoccupied with trouble, like Hamlet, but the bulk of the man suggests King Lear, capable of a great rage. In the morning gloom of his Senate office, as he speaks, the reckoning in his eyes holds the listener to each word.

His voice, which is deep and resonant, seems to command seriousness, even when he speaks lightly. It is soon clear that Senator Hughes is there, not so much to be questioned, but to say what he wants to say. That powerful personal effect is last, of course, when the words are reproduced by themselves, which has always been the evangelist's weakness and his strength.

KNOWN AS TOUCH

From truck driver to governor to U.S. senator, Hughes has been a tough-minded guy, which he considers perfectly compatible with a Christian life. As a governor, he twisted arms to push his reform measures past recalcitrant legislators. As senator, he emerged as a guerrilla leader in the political assault on the Pentagon.

The man still has a rough edge that sets him apart from more polished colleagues, which he likes. When Harold Hughes talks about the "work ethic," he says "sweat." Instead of philosophizing about it, he goes on nostalgically about his early days as a young trucker in Ida Grove, Iowa (the hometown name is spoken with the same subtle Iowa lilt which Meredith Wilson captured in his songs).

"We did without," Hughes said proudly. "We never owned a car until I was 29 years old. . . . We got the first GI loan in the county, the home cost $3,000. Bought it for $100 down and $24.77 a month payments. I'll never forget them because, when you're working for $25 a week and you take one week's full wages for payment on the house, you got to figure the pennies, you know."

TYPICAL DRUNK

Working hard, drinking hard, he was married with two children, managing a small truck line. Hughes bombed out in his first year at the state university and never went back. He was religious in the conventional sense, he says, which means that the kids got to Sunday School on time.

"I've heard guys say I used to preach better sermons drunk than they ever heard in church on Sunday," he remembered, with a trace of the old rogue. His faith then was "like hedging your bets."

"If there is a God there, I wanted to be sure I've got at least one foot in Heaven while the other foot's on earth," he said. "I couldn't disprove nor could I prove it, so I was afraid not to accept part of it at least."

Meanwhile, drinking screwed up his life. "It was a hard-drinking business, you know," he explained. "After work, we'd sit down, seven or eight of us, and we might consume seven or eight fifths of whiskey. We'd buy one and share it. You didn't leave as long as someone was buying. It was more or less a matter of manhood and virility to stay until the last bottle was gone. By that time, three or four guys would be under the table."

Hughes' alcoholism is usually recounted with melodramatic stories about his savage binges, waking up in strange hotel rooms, and so on. But the important point to him is that he was a typical drunk. He wasn't down and out in the gutter, he was climbing the career ladder, managing a successful business.

"Most people have the opinion that the alcoholic's on his way to skid row, you know," Hughes said. "It isn't true. He usually becomes an alcoholic while he's climbing the success ladder. And he discovers it, you know, after he's modestly successful."

Hughes still speaks of those working people he was among, when his personal life was a mess. I've known them. I love them," he said. "Most of them have more faith in God than I find around Washington here. They may swear a little, they may drink a little too much occasionally, but I want to tell you, most of them get down on their knees and pray and believe that there is a God. They have to face the hardships of life, you can't run from them."

Hughes couldn't either. As a young man, he experienced a series of harsh and fundamental moments, the kind which often turn people toward deeper thoughts about the meaning of it all. His only brother was killed in an auto accident. "Squashed like a fly for no apparent reason," as Hughes once said. As a soldier in World War II, he saw lots of dying close to him, in combat in North Africa, Sicily and Italy. And he saw his family life nearly destroyed by his alcoholism. He "quit" several times before he pulled back from the brink in his early 30's.

"When I quit drinking," he said, "I made just rigid moral determination to discipline my life. I knew I had to discipline, so I lived by stronger discipline than most people ever make themselves live by. I went through periods of getting up at five o'clock in the morning to read the Bible for an hour before I went to work."

"I got up in the morning to pray, though I really didn't know how to pray. You know, I knew that prayer was talking to God in some way, but I never really did understand how you pray. No one had ever bothered to tell me."

There were no thunderbolts. In fact, as Hughes describes it, his faith was clumsy and unschooled at that point, even after his promise to give his life to God. He became "a working churchman" in the Ida Grove Methodist Church, taught a high school Sunday School from the Bible, served as a church official, and explored the idea of going back to school to become a minister. He decided he lacked the proper temperament.

DRAWN INTO POLITICS

Instead, his job as spokesman for small truckers drew him into politics, first in election to the State Commerce Commission which regulated the industry, then as an underdog candidate for governor.

Among the many ironies along the way Democrat Hughes won in Republican Iowa by campaigning for a liberalized liquor law. He was an alcoholic and rural Iowa was "dry" but voters liked his directness on an issue which politicians usually straddled.

His political views, like his religious convictions were all rooted in concrete personal experiences. Nick Kotz and Jim Risse, reporters who covered him in Iowa and Washington for the Des Moines Register, have described how Hughes discovered issues over the years, from prisons to peace, sometimes before they became fashionable, sometimes after.

Hughes was lukewarm about the . . . toured the small black neighborhoods of Des Moines and Waterloo in 1967. What he heard made him a committed advocate. He announced against the war in Vietnam, only after he had experienced face-to-face what he considered the intransigence of L.B.J.

His private commitment to help alcoholics in trouble, including several of his Senate colleagues, always came before other appointments. Once, when he was running for President, Hughes was called away from an important fund-raiser in New York to help a man near suicide, someone whom he had never met. Hughes left the "fat cats" and saw the man safely through the night.

As governor, Hughes was too busy for the Sunday school class, but he began a personal exploration into the metaphysical mysteries, searching and reading.

"My life began to broaden on the base of spiritual interest," he said "What is life after death? Does it exist? Does it continue? Those sorts of things. . . . Then suddenly it dawned on me in these years that, you know, either the message of Christ is the truth or it's the greatest fraud ever perpetrated in humanity. Got to be one or the other. It's not something neutral."

"You know, you're either an active believer or you're more or less nothing. I don't mean you're immoral. You can have the highest morals and be an atheist, if you want to discipline your life to live that way. But Christ was more than a moral man, either he was God come to earth to reconcile mankind to himself or we are living in deception, as Paul said, we are the greatest fools of all."

GIFT OF THE SPIRIT

About 10 years after he quit drinking, Harold Hughes experienced "the gift of the Holy Spirit." It was an intense, personal perception of God that is too mystical for explanation to non-believers.

"I haven't the ability to explain this to anyone," he said matter-of-factly. "The Holy Spirit can explain it to their spirit. I can't. I can put the words together, but if a man is thinking on the intellect only, he will reject it."

Hughes became convinced that the Bible, its accounts of miracles and mysterious interventions, is not allegory, but absolute truth. When Jesus was on the Mount of Transfiguration, surrounded by the blinding light, the Bible says he was talking to Moses and Elijah, men who were dead for a thousand and two thousand years. Did he believe that?

"So you go on through the Bible," Hughes explained. "Like the voice out of the burning bush. The voice out of the cloud. The spirit descending on Jesus. He saw far off, which was obviously miles away. He met the woman at the well and he knew her whole life. Dreams were translated into reality. It was God speaking to people. Paul on the road to Damascus. Jesus spoke to him personally and said 'Why dost thou persecutest me, Saul?'"

"Well, what are these things? I've had a mind that says: That's great, I believe that God did speak, that Jesus did speak, that Moses and Elijah were on the mountaintop talking to Jesus. But then my mind says: How? And everybody says, well you don't ask questions about that. That's evil."

Hughes still gets hundreds of letters from other Christians warning him against the pursuit of spiritism. In the biblical context, he has continued to explore, however, convinced that the realm is integral to the Bible. Several years ago, right in the middle of his abortive campaign for President, some of the senator's supporters were embarrassed by the revelation that he had attended seances, seeking communication with his dead brother.

"There was a purported communication and it seemed real to me," he once told reporters from the Des Moines Register.

NOT BLACK MAGIC

The subject does not embarrass Hughes, though he assumes it will be misunderstood. He is not promoting black magic, as he puts it, but he is pursuing from a religious standpoint the same phenomena which now interest science under the heading of "paranormal" events.

"What I was trying to understand is: did the miracles die with the disciples or do they continue today? I became convinced that they continue today through the act of the Holy Spirit," he said. Healing, speaking in tongues, the message of dreams, these and other spiritual powers are related in some way and still active, he believes, if one is attuned.

"Go over to Kathryn Kuhlman's healing services someday," he said, "and if you don't see healings take place before your eyes, then you're blind. If even one happened, it would be a miracle by all modern scientific terminology, but there are dozens every service. Here is obviously a woman so attuned to the Holy Spirit, that the power of Christ flows through her in healing the sick and the lame and the blind."

If this perspective seems bizarre to official Washington, Hughes thinks that it is gathering force across the country, expressed in the various pentecostal movements that are enlivening all of the main-line denominations, including middle-class worshippers who are usually less responsive. "I happen to believe that the Spirit is just sweeping the earth right now," Hughes said:

So "doing good" has a different scale for Hughes than it does for those who have criticized him for giving up public office. His belief tells him that it has to start at the other end before it will genuinely change things at the top.

"It was hard for me to learn that you don't find the kingdom of Heaven by good deeds," he said. "I've worked in a world of good deeds. I've tried to act that way in government, in private life, in charity, passing legislation to alleviate pain and agony and hunger. But that isn't salvation. Salvation is free. You don't have to do a thing to get it. Except repent. And accept."

That doesn't mean Hughes, when he is an ex-senator, will be alone on a mountaintop praying or ignoring public issues. Among other things, he intends to work among public officials and their prayer groups. He will keep ministering to alcoholics, as he has done for years.

LIFE'S ONLY PURPOSE

"You become aware of the testament that Jesus gave us," he said. "To love the Lord thy God is the first and only purpose in life, realizing that until you can do that, none of the other things can happen."

"Then Jesus also said that, having done this, all the other things will be added to it. Everything that you could possibly need, you will have, under any circumstances, any way, any how. It eliminates the fear of death, the fear coupled with serious illness, the problems of the world."

"I mean it doesn't wipe them out. You still got to face them, you still got to work, you still got to live, you still got to face pain and agony. But in the midst of it, you see the purpose in life in being."

Harold Hughes thinks that idea is more powerful than the United States government.

WHEN A GREAT LEADER CHARMS US—IS IT REALLY ONLY "CHARM"?
(By Vance Bourjaily)

My subjects are examples of human magnetism, Tony, and Harold Hughes.

Let me start with Tony, who is still vivid to me from the time we were ninth graders together, 36 years ago. I changed schools in tenth grade, and saw him only once again afterward, before he was killed in the Second World War. He had a lot of charm.

At the age of 14, Tony could cause anybody—man, woman, boy and especially girl—to like him immediately and forgive him eventually. Tony was incorrigibly, sometimes offensively, mischievous, and needed a lot of forgiving. It didn't occur to me then, as another boy, reacting with pleasure or with hurt feelings, depending on whether I found myself in or out of Tony's favor, that the purpose of the offense might be to test, the charm.

Using Tony as my example of magnetism at the tricky level of charm, I can begin to see both what produced and what limited it. It seemed to be a product of vitality, physical attractiveness, great verbal ability and warmth—or, at least, the appearance of warmth. When you felt that Tony liked you, you felt that liking you was the center of his life. That wasn't so, of course, so one limit of his magnetism was dishonesty, and there were others like it: Tony was amoral, unstable and full of self-doubt.

Nevertheless, I think he could have made his mother walk off a cliff with one sparkling, blue-eyed glance, and his stepfather was just plain scared of the kid. His smile would have melted anything except, I guess, the Luftwaffe bullets that knocked his P-40 into the English Channel in 1943.

But about charm: I have learned since, as I don't suppose I did with Tony, that while one may have a good time with a charming person, and perhaps be persuaded by him or by her for a time, the insecurity and instability and lack of moral center sooner or later offset the charm. One learns, then, after a while, to handle charming people: Or rather one learns to handle oneself around them, to resist their need to be loved, rejected, loved again.

And then there is the case of Harold Hughes, senior senator from Iowa, where I live. His degree of magnetism is to charm as a jet engine is to a firecracker.

Harold Hughes first saw me about 18 months after his election as governor of Iowa. That was in 1964, when I appeared in his office in Des Moines, from Iowa City 110 miles away, as a constituent, one of a solemn-faced group come to demand an accounting on conservation matters.

Harold Hughes was 46 then. So was I. In 1968, Governor Hughes took me on as a member of the staff in his campaign for the U.S. Senate, which he won—in spite, so the party professionals out here still say, of his having nominated Eugene McCarthy for the Presidency in Chicago. Since then I've either seen, or exchanged letters, or talked on the phone with Senator Hughes two or three times a year.

Somewhere, I have a letter from him apologizing for his delay in answering one of mine, in which he remarks that secretaries had shuffled it around, "not realizing that you are a personal friend." I would feel quite content to accept the phrase, but not quite honest.

I take it to be part of the particular loneliness of public life that when a man reaches a certain level in it he can no longer make new friends in any full sense of the word, unless it be with others at the same level, and only then if both men have decided against competing to rise to the next level. For all the rest of us, he finds himself the prisoner-king of a realm of jockeys and sharpshooters, wherein the highest rank a new acquaintance may attain, except by some miracle of affinity, is something short of friendship—an honorable and useful courtier, perhaps, a favorite jester; at best a trusted counselor and confidant who, taking the risk of independence, may deserve knighthood or dismissal, depending on how things turn out. But it is only with an old friend, from the time before it all began, that the public man need never be on guard; so be it.

There were one or two times in the 1968 campaign when Harold Hughes and I were close; but they came when he indicated a need for someone to talk to, and I was at hand, and it would have been stupid of me to presume that the tone of an evening's dialogue would carry over to our work next day.

It's as simple as this. In hot weather, and if there's no one else to do it and no matter how big and strong the candidate may be, you carry the suitcase to the motel room. You know what breaking into a sweat would do to his shirt collar. I remember Harold Hughes saying to me quite ruefully on a day like that, as we started out campaigning, "You've got to take care of the product if you want to show it, don't you?"

I am, then, no more than one of a number of men Harold Hughes seems to have found more useful than irritating, likes pretty well (I think I can say that), and can count on.

Nor have I, to be wholly truthful, set forth one final awkwardness; to do it, I've got to confess that many of the times I've felt less than comfortable with Senator Hughes have had nothing to do with his position, but were rather a consequence of the personality that put him into the position. Harold Hughes is, quite simply, an overpowering man. I sometimes wonder if he realizes the strength of his magnetism.

This is the thing I continue to ponder, for the phenomenon of human magnetism seems to me a central mystery to be solved in trying to understand how certain men alter history. It is a quality to which we give different names at its different levels of strength.

At a low level—Tony's level, I suppose—we call it charm. At the next we recognize it, perhaps, with an old-fashioned term like character. At a still higher level we call it personal authority, and can be awed (and discomfited) by it. Yet it causes some rebellion in me, too, and some cynicism—I cannot guarantee that I will always like the way I behave with men who have these various degrees of magnetism. This feeling is not unusual in the men around Harold Hughes. I remember one of his staff saying to me, during the '68 campaign:

"You know, I think I'm pretty good. When I go in to make a pitch to him, I always get myself up for it. I'm going to get him this time. But he always takes me. I may get to make my point after he does, but he always has to take me first."

"God," I had to say. "He even takes me over the telephone."

Try him yourself some time.

Once I failed to see that magnetism might exist at levels more potent than charm, a degree that we more often associate with harm politically than good, learning finally to prefer the intelligent, conscientious officeholder who gets his work done. Probably it should have been obvious to me that magnetism at the higher levels is the most essential of the various qualities that combine as leadership, and therefore find myself involuntarily sympathetic with Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon, who have seemed to lack magnetism or even to hold it in negative quantities. "When Nixon comes in green on color TV," my wife said once, "I don't even pink him."

But whatever its origins in personal security, in ego, in great physical and intellectual energy, in moral wholeness, a grown man's degree of magnetism is probably inalterable, like his shoe size or the color of his eyes.

Harold Hughes has more of it than any other man I ever met.

Senator Hughes' voice is a strong, clear bass ("I can't get within an octave of baritone," Harold Hughes once told another writer). The only other American voice I know that resembles it belongs to Johnny Cash, the country singer, but as a speaking voice, Cash's is second best. As boys display their strength by rolling up their sleeves so that you'll note their biceps, Harold Hughes lets you know what's there from the sheer sound of his voice.

Energy is the constant quality in magnetism at every level. But rarest of all, even in the kings and emperors who are supposedly bred and educated for it, is magnetism in its highest degree: dominance.

An actor like George C. Scott sometimes conveys it and I feel it in Senator Hughes. With this kind of person (I'd be more confident in saying so if I knew more than one example) I think the moral certainty has been raised to moral commitment. The emotional certainty is now emotional commitment—yet, oddly enough, the totality of the self-confidence seems somewhat diminished. There is in Hughes (and I would guess other men and women like him) an undisguised strain of humility. I think what has been added to the other qualities, besides commitment, is the kind of intelligence that will not allow any conclusion to be foregone. It reflects. It broods. It asks.

It may not, perhaps, suffer fools gladly, at least not for very long. But genuine dominance, if that is what I've encountered, is not arrogant; it doesn't need to be.

[From the Chicago Today, Sept. 11, 1973]

THE REMARKABLE SENATOR HUGHES

Politics and politicians have rarely been as low in public esteem as now. In this environment, Sen. Harold Hughes [D., Iowa] looms large as both an inspiring and a tragic figure.

A former truck driver and reformed alcoholic, Hughes has announced that he won't run for reelection next year but will begin work as a religious lay worker—specifically in connection with alcoholism and drug abuse.

Hughes has been an admirable man in many ways: Not only for his good record as a senator but for the candor with which he discussed his problem with alcohol even while entertaining ambitions for the Presidency in 1970 and 1971. His decision to devote his life to helping others directly only enhances our opinion of him.

But the other side of the coin is the political atmosphere that prompted his decision. Evidently it has nourished in him what a friend called an "apocalyptic sense of foreboding about what is happening to this country. He has felt our values are all shot to hell—politically, morally, spiritually."

This sounds particularly ominous when attributed to a courageous man like Hughes. If a man of his stature is dismayed by the state of government, how can the rest of us be expected to place any faith in our leaders?

The answer may be that his example could help change government for the better. Some of his colleagues hope Hughes will change his mind about leaving the Senate [for the good of the country, so we say]. One senator, speaking of Hughes' religious convictions, said, "we need some of that around here."

Whether he changes his mind or not, Hughes is clearly an extraordinary man, and the Senate will be better for his having been there.

[From the Washington Star, Sept. 27, 1973]

ODD MAN OUT

There has always been something so different and—whether or not one agreed with him—so open and so splendid about Senator Harold E. Hughes, the big, benevolent Iowa Democrat, that his recent decision to give up an extraordinarily successful career in politics comes as no surprise. In a day when many men in public life have cast their lots with whatever seemed to be expedient, it's refreshing to find a man so utterly true to himself.

Hughes says he will not run for a second six-year term in the Senate next year because he wants to work full time on the problems of alcoholism, drug addiction, peace, social justice and brotherhood, all of which have occupied much of his time as a legislator. In this, he is moved by "profound personal religious reasons." In the somewhat cynical world of Washington, that kind of talk can raise eyebrows. In the case of Hughes, it raises respect.

Here's a farm boy who, in high school, became both "a wild spree drinker" and a state football and discus champion, who, because of his taste for alcohol, "regularly lost control" of himself in college and, by the time he went into the Army, "needed (liquor) the way you need food."

Nothing can be more insufferable than a reformed drunk, but Hughes, a huge, deep-voiced, soft-spoken, quick-tempered bear of a man, has managed to use his conversion as a platform from which to work quietly but effectively to remedy what, from firsthand experience with it, he considers to be "a dirty, vicious illness that destroys human life and happiness and causes staggering economic waste."

Coming out of the Army as he had gone into it—a private—he went on to win many laurels, including three terms as Iowa's governor and a term, now ending, as its first Democratic senator in 20 years.

He has been called a "one issue" man—and surely his alcoholic past made him good newspaper copy—but the thing that stands out about him is a kind of single-hearted integrity. A one-time brawling soldier, he became a formidable force for peace; a one-time big game hunter, he considered gun control legislation "a small inconvenience" that any sportsman should be willing to bear.

It may well be that Harold Hughes can accomplish more good as a religious lay worker than he has as an able governor and senator. At 51, he has hardly begun. The admiration and good wishes of his countrymen are going right along with him wherever he goes.

[From the Christians Century, Sept. 26, 1973]

A SENATOR'S FAITH AND VOCATION

(By James M. Wall)

WASHINGTON, D.C.—As soon as he finishes his present job, former truck-driver Harold Hughes will enter full-time religious work, and a good many religious people are not sure they approve. Me, for one. Not because Hughes won't make a good addition to the religious ranks; his massive (same) resonant deep voice, proven leadership skills and obvious commitment will assure him of influence in whatever setting he chooses. What has distressed many religious leaders about this vocational switch is the forum, influence and political potential he leaves behind. Since Harold Hughes left the trucking business in 1954, he has risen swiftly from three-term governor of Iowa to a seat in the United States Senate, where today he labors vigorously for what my mother used to call "good," at a time when goodness is in short supply in Washington.

A week after making his startling announcement that he would not seek reelection to the Senate when his term expires in 1974, Senator Hughes sat in his office and very quickly convinced me that this decision to leave the Senate for full-time religious work is based on his conviction that it is God's will that he do so. He fixed me with a steady gaze and in a quiet voice, softened only by the presence of a faint smile, asked: "You believe that I believe in what I'm doing, but you don't think it's the right thing to do, do you?" Politicians don't usually speak this frankly, so I hesitated for a moment before admitting that, no, while I respected his religious dedication, I had to question the impact of his decision on the country.

In the issues of war, ecology, party reform, alcohol and drug rehabilitation, and other humanitarian issues, his is a major Senate voice. I had asked for this interview because, with all due respect to the organizations with which he will be connected after 1974—two religious foundations that sponsor, among other things, prayer breakfasts—I couldn't imagine that this religious work could compare in importance with his past and potential impact on American life as a liberal senator from a traditionally conservative midwestern state. I told him frankly that my feeling that he is needed in government is shared by many other religious people who are grateful for his political leadership. His answer was without guile: "Do you doubt that God will use me more in a new work? This nation is on the edge of a precipice; the government will not make the decisions that are necessary unless the people set higher standards and demand these decisions. We raked across the world with our misuse of power; we are raping our natural resources for private profit—and the government will not solve these problems until the people require it."

Mixed disciplines create language barriers. Here I was talking to a man skilled in the political jungles of the Democratic party, aware of the nuances required to convince a conservative Iowa farmer that a liberal vote is finally in his best interest, and here he was telling me, "Didn't Christ say

"Seek the kingdom of Heaven and all else will be added unto you?" Senator Hughes is not a simple man. He will continue as an active senator for the remaining 14 months of his term, and he will no doubt continue to deal in the subtle maneuvering required to push Senate legislation and to influence the reform of his own Democratic party. But the religious drive that has led him to this vocational shift is uncomplicated and direct. He knows as well as the rest of us that one reason his decision surprises us is that we are not used to seeing power given up so easily. Religious thinkers are as much in need of rational explanations as are nonbelievers, so I tried to get a clearer picture of the kind of work he would do for the two foundations after he leaves the Senate. After several questions regarding focus, finances and structure, he cut me off with a devastating counter question: "Why do clergymen doubt that a man has faith?"

This was turning into a theological debate, and the senator clearly had the upper hand. He was, after all, the one who had taken the step to abandon a place of national prominence in order to devote his full energies to religious work. I was in the role of the probing reporter. So I tried another approach. In his present position he affects a nation, while in the future he will probably be dealing with a limited number of individuals. "How do you measure importance?" he responded. "The least life I touch could be the most important in the Kingdom." But what about the forum he has in the Senate? It was one of his committees that secured the information that the executive branch had deceived the American public over the bombing of Cambodia in 1969-70. "You are wanting to limit God; other forums may appear for me," was his blunt answer.

At this point I found myself grasping for the right question and ended by saying nothing. Quietly amused, he alluded to a passage neither of us could immediately quote that has something to do with the ways of God confounding the minds of men. "I've looked at this in every way. I've explored all these things you ask about. I know I have a responsibility to my family, staff, state, party and nation. This decision affects all of them. But when I weighed it all, I knew that the Lord has directed my life until now; and he will use my life for a greater purpose. I can't explain it to you, but I have absolute faith that this is true."

Hughes made a decision in 1954 that changed his life from certain disaster to political success, and that decision continues to control all other choices—including this termination of a promising senatorial career. It was in 1954 that he faced the fact that he was an alcoholic and would always be an alcoholic. "I can't say that in 1954 I actually met Christ; but I quit drinking and I gave my life to God. Since then I've tried to grow spiritually and I've come to know Christ personally as my Savior. I've tried to develop a discipline in my life and to permit God to direct me. I'm not saying for a minute that politics is not important. But for me I am convinced that what is important is a personal experience of Jesus Christ which will lead men and women to realize that their first objective is to serve God. Ministering to God through politics and the social order is not enough for me. I have been in public service for 15 years now, and if I ran again for the U.S. Senate, another six years would reduce the number of years I would have left to devote my full time to leading others to Christ."

On the day of our interview, a reader's letter printed in the Washington Post complained that the senator's decision to enter "social work" was a mistake. This misunderstanding of his decision testifies to the public's uncertainty over what constitutes "religious work." If a man is a clergyman, he is religious. A layman going into "religious work" only loosely connected to institutional religion enters uncertain terrain. But the uncertainty is only in terms of public image, for what Senator Hughes is actually doing is following the will of God and leaving the Senate in 1974 to undertake new service which will allow him to continue his concern with the alcoholic ("I never met an alcoholic I didn't think could be helped") and all other areas of social justice. "I will be just as interested in social problems as I've ever been; I fail to see that this move will affect that. I've never been one to sit on the sidelines. The focus of what I will do is completely unknown to me. I will wait on the Lord to determine that."

This, then, was the insight that secular press coverage had missed. Senator Harold Hughes is not leaving the Senate to go to work for two religious foundations. That's language on the rational level. He is following the will of God that convinces him that after 1974 he should devote his full energies to man's spiritual needs ("You can't keep your soul unless you give it away"). The two foundations will be launching pads for whatever is to follow. As I prepared to leave, I could not resist one final practical observation: "Senator, may I say that while this decision takes you from the Senate, is it not possible that you may later return to public life in some other capacity?" He smiled tolerantly. "God can give me any forum he wants. More people will listen to me now than would have listened a week ago." An ambiguous answer, suggesting that he expects to be heard, but not necessarily in the political arena. And it is there that he must be permitted to stand, for this is the decision of a man who believes that whatever God wants for his future, God will provide. But don't rule out the insight of a Washington cab-driver who commented on the day the decision was announced: "Did you hear about Senator Hughes leaving the Senate to go into religious work? Now, there's an honest politician. We ought to elect him President."

[From the Waterloo (Iowa) Courier]

HUGHES' DECISION TO QUIT IS NOT DISILLUSIONMENT

(By Harrison Weber)

DES MOINES.—Senator Harold Hughes says his decision to go into religious lay work was not the result of any disillusionment with politics.

"In this time of deep trouble for our country, my faith in our political system is stronger than ever," Hughes told the Iowa Daily Press Association.

"In my new work, I will still be doing everything in my power to preserve our free way of life. So far as the American dream is concerned, my decision to devote myself to spiritual work is an act of affirmation, not rejection."

Therefore, Hughes related, he was "greatly disturbed" that it was assumed in some quarters that he had lost faith in America's political system and was leaving it in disgust.

"This country of ours is unique among nations, born in liberty. We are not like older countries traditions that can endure, without too much travail, passage from monarchy to constitutional monarchy to parliamentary government and the reverse."

"We are a composite of many races, colors and creeds, bound together by one cohesive element—the common belief in majority rule under our democratic system. So politics is not intrinsically a dirty word; it is the essence of our being as a nation and that way we must travel to realize our aspirations for the future."

The one lesson we should have learned from Watergate, Hughes emphasized, is that our liberties are not self-perpetuating but must be vigorously worked for and fought for in each succeeding generation.

This means, for each citizen, increased action in the political process, not withdrawal from it, Hughes asserted.

Iowa's senior U.S. Senator said a good example is "the imperative need" for reform in the way political campaigns are financed in the United States.

"We have all seen how the financing of election campaigns by private contributions ties in with corruption in campaigns in government. We all recognize the need to find a better way. Now the question before us is whether or not we have the determination to carry through with reforms that are so clearly indicated."

To its great credit, Hughes observed, the Iowa Legislature has provided Iowans with a way of financing campaigns that would obviate the possibility of elections being bought by private interests.

Hughes was referring to the provision in the Iowa individual income tax returns for diverting one dollar, without additional cost to the taxpayer, to the political party of his or her choice. If the proper entry is made on the state tax form, this one dollar will be paid by the state to the Iowa Election Campaign Fund for the account of the designated political party.

Sen. Hughes called it a "significant step" towards making elections "free from possible corruption."

It does not cost the individual taxpayer any additional money, he noted, nor will it affect his tax return in any way. "But," Hughes added, "it will strike a blow to keep our election process clean of private financial manipulation."

The chairmen of both Republican and Democratic parties in Iowa and the president of the League of Women Voters have issued a joint statement urging voters to participate in this "fair and realistic way" of helping to finance political parties and to broaden the base of political involvement in Iowa.

Hughes said he wants to add his voice to this bi-partisan appeal for citizen participation, through the state income tax check-off system, in the public financing of political campaigns. "The power to achieve this urgently needed form is where it belongs—in the hands of the people," Hughes said.

"I hope and believe that the people of Iowa will respond. The most tragic epilogue to Watergate of which I can conceive would be if we were to slip back, through public indifference, to the old, thoroughly discredited, corruption-prone method of financing political campaigns by private largesse."

Mr. "ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I think HAROLD HUGHES is not one of the most, but the most humane man in the Senate. His actions and words here have amply demonstrated that.

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute and extend best wishes to our colleague from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES) as he prepares to retire from this distinguished body and enter another field of public endeavor.

With the close of this 93d Congress, HAROLD HUGHES will become a religious lay worker in connection with two foundations—the Fellowship Foundation of Washington, D.C., and the International Christian Leadership.

He will retire with a record of 4 years as a member of the Iowa Commerce Commission, 6 years as Governor of his State, and 6 years as a U.S. Senator.

Notable during his careers as Governor and U.S. Senator has been his dedication to human-value goals. His three terms as Governor were marked by achievements in a wide range of social legislation. In the Senate, HAROLD HUGHES introduced landmark legislation in the fields of alcoholism and drug abuse. Important bills were enacted with authority for establishing broad programs which deal with alcoholism and drug abuse primarily as medical, rather than criminal, problems.

December 19, 1974

It is heartening to know that HAROLD HUGHES, still in his most productive years, will continue in his new position to direct his efforts toward many of the areas in which he has been working together with his colleagues in this body—alcoholism and narcotic addiction, peace, social justice, and brotherhood.

His approach, however, will be different. Instead of political, it will be primarily spiritual. As he put it:

This new work will cut across political and religious creeds; ethnic, political and language barriers; and will, I hope, reach into other countries of the world to further better international understanding. I have long believed that government will change for the better only when people change for the better in their hearts.

HAROLD HUGHES' spiritual commitment is reassuring indeed in these days of materialism and cynicism. He deserves our commendation and support. I wish him well as he faces his new challenge.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, yet another of our distinguished colleagues, Mr. HUGHES of Iowa, will be leaving the Senate at the end of this session of the 93d Congress and we will miss his contributions in the years ahead.

As an active participant in the weekly Senate prayer breakfast group, I have been struck by the depth of Senator HUGHES' commitment to brotherhood and understanding and his decision to leave the Senate for full time nondenominational religious work is an important one which will have a decided impact, I am sure, on this country's progress in human relations and interpersonal relationships.

Mr. HUGHES is a dynamic individual and the force of his personality and deep conviction will stand him in good stead in his new work. We wish him the very best and are confident that his vigor and dedication will meet his new challenge in an effective manner and much good will certainly be accomplished.

Because I did not serve with Senator HUGHES on any committees of the U.S. Senate, from early associations as governors of our respective States and my impressions of him are those gained on the floor of the Senate during debate and at the weekly prayer breakfast gatherings.

He has been most outstanding and persuasive in those meetings and I have enjoyed and personally profited, in a spiritual manner, from his strong guidance and obvious conviction. Because he will be involved in the fellowship work here in Washington, D.C., it is my very real hope that the Senate prayer group, under the leadership of the distinguished gentlemen from Mississippi, (Mr. STENNIS) will continue to see him at our Wednesday meetings and to be uplifted by his witness to the Lord.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, HAROLD HUGHES and I entered the U.S. Senate as Members of the same Senate class—the class of the 91st Congress. That fact alone has not endeared him to me, though I suppose Members of the same Senate class always do feel a certain closeness to each other. We have not often been together on the issues confronting the Senate and the Nation, and I suppose our voting records have been as far apart as any two Senators' records can be.

Yet I feel, and I believe other Members of the Senate feel, attracted and drawn to him, and I have the highest affectionate regard for him and enormous respect for him as a man, as a Senator, and as a Christian.

Those of us who have not availed ourselves of the opportunity of attending the Senators' prayer breakfast each Wednesday morning have missed the privilege of enjoying fellowship with him and drawing strength from the inspiration of his faith and devotion to God and his determination to follow His will.

Here is a man of great ability, personal magnetism, strength, dedication, and compassion who inspires others to follow his leadership in the Senate; but that means far less to him than getting people to follow his leadership to Christ.

Here is a man who is giving up a sure seat in the U.S. Senate to follow Christ, wherever that road may lead; for he does not yet know the exact role he will play in serving Christ.

HAROLD reminds me of Abraham of old who was called by God out of Ur of the Chaldees under a land and seed covenant with God—

By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receiving an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went.

For he looked for a city which hath foundation, whose builder and maker is God.

Our love and our prayers and thoughts will go with HAROLD and his devoted wife, Eva, and their fine family as they enter upon their new work.

Mr. MCINTYRE. Mr. President, for the past several days this Chamber has echoed deserved praises for our departing colleagues, most of whom have served the Senate as long as they have served it well.

The colleague I salute today has been with us a regrettably short time, but his impact has been none the less because of that abbreviated tenure.

I speak of the senior Senator from Iowa, who in a single term earned a degree of respect and influence rarely accorded a freshman Member.

Mr. President, I could speak at length today on Senator HUGHES' contributions in one area of responsibility he and I share, the Armed Services Committee, and, more particularly, the Subcommittee on Research and Development it is my privilege to chair.

I could do this because I am keenly aware of those contributions, and I will be forever appreciative of what his presence on those units meant in terms of shaping a thoughtful, civilized, and prudent committee approach to defense policy.

But I would rather speak of HAROLD HUGHES in broader terms than committee contributions. Mr. President, for the influence he exerted in this Chamber spanned the spectrum of human needs and concerns.

And I want to speak to the question of why he was so effective in so many ways in so short a time.

Mr. President, let me pose this conjecture:

If, as I sense, this great country of ours is, indeed, yearning for a gentler time, then why is its leadership—and I include this body—so reluctant to affirm that yearning?

Is it because we, too, are victims of a "macho" cult that inhibits men from speaking freely of love and compassion and gentleness?

I think it is, Mr. President, and I think this is precisely why HAROLD HUGHES has soared to deserved prominence and influence as quickly as he has.

Because, Mr. President, this man—this most masculine of men—relates to that yearning in the national soul by speaking without inhibition to gentleness and love and compassion, by doing so with powerful and moving eloquence, and by living the message he preaches.

For this alone he will be long remembered and often missed in the Senate of the United States.

I honor the decision of conscience that is bringing about Senator HUGHES' departure, but I confess to great personal regret that he will not be with us when the next session of the Congress convenes.

Mr. MCGEE. Mr. President, when the Senate convenes for the 94th Congress in January, we will be without the services of one of our most hard-working and sensitive colleagues, the distinguished senior Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES).

HAROLD HUGHES, although retiring from public office, is not retiring from public life. He has chosen to carry on his work as a lay religious leader and in so doing, made the decision some time ago to relinquish his Senate seat.

It has been largely through the persistent efforts of HAROLD HUGHES that legislation was enacted in the Congress launching a nationwide, all-out attack on drug abuse and alcoholism, two diseases which have had such a debilitating effect on our Nation.

HAROLD HUGHES leaves us, but his commitment remains and he will continue carrying out this commitment in a most effective way. I regret that he will not be with us. However, I know that whatever HAROLD HUGHES does, many Americans will benefit by his strong and dedicated commitment to the spiritual and physical welfare of all mankind.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a very special man, who is leaving us to embark upon a new mission in life.

HAROLD HUGHES is a unique man who brought a very special perspective to his work in the Senate.

I think that most men or women who serve in public office—especially in Congress—tend to look upon life in a generalized fashion. They view the impact of their efforts not so much in how it affects individuals, but in how it affects groups or whole segments of society.

December 19, 1974

HAROLD HUGHES, I venture, found this political perspective wanting, much too abstract. For it is clear he cares deeply about people, not collectively but individually, as persons to be reached, to be helped, to be loved. So it is hardly surprising that HAROLD HUGHES is leaving the Senate, impelled by a higher call, essentially spiritual in nature, to serve persons instead of people.

His departure will diminish the Senate in a singular way, for he brought to our midst qualities which are needed here.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, when HAROLD HUGHES leaves the Senate at the conclusion of this Congress, we will witness an unusual and remarkable transition, in which a man has chosen to leave the U.S. Senate and to accept another, more personally satisfying vocation, in the service of his fellow men.

HAROLD HUGHES is taking a characteristic, forthright step in accordance with his beliefs about his personal responsibilities and actions. He has been a truck-driver, a Governor of a fine State, and a Senator, and in each position he has been foremost an individual, a man, who has asserted his humanity and courage at every critical point.

HAROLD HUGHES has sought at every turn to maximize his effectiveness as a man, and to forward those principles in which he so strongly believes. His energy and determination have been an example for all of us here.

I believe that we should strongly commend Senator HUGHES' work as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Alcoholism and Narcotics. He spoke with conviction and full knowledge of the ravages of alcohol, and he had legislated effectively in this area.

Finally, I wish him the greatest success as he moves into still another position from which he will, I know, express himself and his convictions with great clarity, energy, and effectiveness.

ALL SALUTES SENATOR HAROLD HUGHES

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I join my colleagues in bidding Senator HAROLD HUGHES a fond farewell. The State of Iowa, which Senator HUGHES has ably served for the past 16 years—as public service commissioner, as Governor, and as U.S. Senator—is Illinois' neighbor. The affection which I have for Senator HUGHES is born of much more than our States' geographic proximity and our cooperative efforts in solving common problems. Rather, it is based on my admiration for his dedication to the public interest, his openness and candor, his moral fervor, and his capacity for hard work.

When I first came to the Senate 4 years ago, I served with Senator HUGHES on the Labor and Public Welfare Committee. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, Senator HUGHES has rightly focused attention on the national scourges which alcoholism and drug abuse represent. He has successfully sponsored legislation to combat alcoholism and drug addiction, particularly among young people. For this effort alone, Senator HUGHES deserves our gratitude and praise.

During his years in the Senate, HAROLD HUGHES has accomplished much more than this. As a member of the Armed Services Committee, he was the first Member of Congress to call attention to the secret bombing of Cambodia in 1969 and 1970. Senator HUGHES was instrumental in sponsoring successful legislation to end these illegal military operations in 1973. The Senator from Iowa has also fought hard to reduce military spending, particularly for unnecessary weapons systems. His efforts over the years have clearly helped us hold down military spending.

The Senator from Iowa has championed the veterans' cause as a member of the Veterans Affairs Committee. He and other members of the committee labored for many months securing congressional passage of the Vietnam-era Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act and in overriding the President's veto of this important legislation.

Senator HUGHES has been a leader in the fight for world peace; he has spearheaded efforts to reform our political process. He has always been a strong voice for decency and compassion in our political process.

Recently Senator HUGHES said:

A man has to change in order to solve social problems through God and Jesus Christ. My purpose is to call men and women to Christ.

Senator HUGHES is leaving the Senate to answer his call to serve Christ in a different forum, the lay ministry. I join my colleagues in wishing HAROLD HUGHES well. He will be missed as a conscience in politics and a good friend, too.

Mr. President, I ask that the article from Saturday's Star-News be printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

CONGRESSMEN AND GOD'S CALL
(By Julie Delany)

Just as a senator is leaving Congress to go into full-time religious work, the 94th Congress will welcome for the first time two Roman Catholic priests who believe they can fulfill God's vocation for them in the halls of Congress.

Even though the reasons for their actions are varied and is pulling them in opposite directions, each sees the call of God at work in his life.

Sen. Harold Hughes, D-Iowa, a man who easily could have had a second term in one of the most sought after positions in Washington, says his decision to leave Congress at the end of the month "has come from three years of prayer. It was not a flash of light or a revelation."

"Actually," Hughes said, "my decision has been coming over 20 years, when I was drinking. Then I decided to follow Jesus Christ."

The big, burly senator said his decision to leave the Senate has no relation to the nationwide dissatisfaction in the political area. He has no reason "other than a call."

On Sept. 7, 1973, Hughes announced he would not run again.

Commenting on the two Catholic priests going into Congress, Hughes said, "God called them into the government. He called me out. We can all be right."

Norbertine Father Robert Cornell, D-Wis., elected in the 8th Wisconsin District on his third try for office, will be the third Catholic priest ever to serve in Congress. Jesuit Robert Drinan, D-Mass., who won his third term, is the first priest to serve in modern times. The only other Catholic priest to sit in Congress was Father Gabriel Richard, a non-voting delegate to the House from the Territory of Michigan in 1823.

Cornell said he is convinced that a lot of things have to be achieved through government action. "We can solve social injustices through government action."

"Watergate had no effect on my decision. The theme of my campaign, the need to restore trust and confidence in the governmental system, predates Watergate. I hope I can help," he said.

"The resolution that I can stand in the pulpit and talk about social injustices is fine. But I believe more can be done through governmental action."

Drinan has basically the same reason for going into the government as Cornell.

"I wanted a voice, not merely a vote. I came here really to reorder the priority, to settle the irrational situation in the world. I came to Congress to help the Third World," Drinan said.

The lawyer-priest described himself as a "moral architect in the public order."

He said he had a vote "to stop all types of irrational things. I had some influence in stopping the war and having civil rights enforced."

Before entering politics, Drinan had been an activist in civil rights and anti-war causes, and a moderate Catholic spokesman on birth control, abortion and public aid to parochial schools.

In July 1973, Drinan, acting alone, introduced a resolution to impeach President Nixon. This was the first motion for impeachment after the Watergate scandal broke.

Drinan said he "lamented" the fact that Hughes was only here for one term. "But I think what he is doing is equally important."

Hughes entered the government because he was upset. "I was in the trucking industry. The laws were not applied properly. So somebody said, 'If you're so upset, why don't you run yourself?'"

As for social changes, Hughes said, "A man has to change in order to solve social problems through God and Jesus Christ. My purpose is to call men and women to Christ."

Hughes said he has absolutely no plans or desire to go into government in a third-party movement.

"The kingdom I'm serving isn't on earth. I can't work for the political structure. The government is distracting in personal religious discipline," he said.

"I want to witness for Christ. I'm not interested in self-importance anymore. I don't know what the future holds. It's vague. I'm waiting to see what the Lord wants me to do."

Hughes will stay in the Washington area as a religious layman and not an ordained minister in the Methodist faith which he was brought up in. He and his wife Eva and his three daughters attend the Christian Assembly, a charismatic fellowship in the Falls Church area.

Hughes has been a lay speaker in the Methodist Church for several years. In the early 1950s he came close to leaving the business world for the ministry.

He was briefly in the contention for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1973. His enthusiastic young supporters hailed him as the only man who could "talk peace to the hardhats and preach the Bible to the kids."

After 16 years in the government, Hughes

December 19, 1974

is taking a three-month sabbatical from everything. "I'll spend time in prayerful retreat and self-discipline," he said.

His new ministry, under auspices of the non-sectarian Fellowship Foundation and the International Christian Leadership, is not yet defined.

Hughes felt his religious vocation "dimly" in his youth but it wasn't encouraged except by his mother.

Alcohol became a problem for him when he entered the University of Iowa in 1940. He dropped out after a year and joined the Army, drinking and brawling whenever he had a chance, emerging only as private.

As his alcoholism grew worse, he worked as a truck driver, truckline manager and livestock grain dealer. But his work suffered until finally, in 1952, he had his last drink and joined Alcoholics Anonymous.

"I wanted to die. I drank from the time I was a teenager until I was 32. There was disruption in my life. 'I prayed to God to help me. It was my first honest prayer in years.'"

Drinan was sworn into the 92nd Congress in January 1971. He is described as a cheerful extrovert with a dry wit and a quick mind. He lives at the Jesuit Community at Georgetown University.

Cornell is a history professor at St. Norbert's College in DePue, Wis.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I think the 94th Congress which will convene in January has the potential of being one of the best in our history. But, while the Senate will be a bit richer by virtue of the new talent and energy, it will be a bit poorer for the loss of some of its most devoted and well-liked Members, including Senator HAROLD E. HUGHES of Iowa.

Last September Senator HUGHES announced his decision to retire from the Senate and to devote his life for the religious service. He will be active in the Christian Fellowship Foundation and other lay religious organizations.

It is indeed a tribute to him that at the pinnacle of his career he still believes firmly in the cause of the common man and the pursuit of his spiritual beliefs.

In his 6 short years in the Senate HAROLD HUGHES has accomplished more than freshman Senators are expected to accomplish. In 1970, the Senate passed the Comprehensive Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism Act, now better known as the Hughes Act. This landmark piece of legislation stands as our best hope of finding an answer to a problem which Government has largely ignored.

As a member of the Marihuana Commission, Senator HUGHES again helped shed light on one of the most controversial issues of the day. He has proved a persuasive and powerful spokesman for humanism in our defense policies through his membership on the Armed Services Committee. It was through his close scrutiny of the American military in Indochina that the shocking unauthorized bombings over both North Vietnam and Cambodia were revealed.

The Senate is unfortunate to lose one of its most distinguished Members. But we can be grateful that thousands of Americans will still benefit from the convictions and compassion of HAROLD HUGHES through his religious work. I wish him the best of luck in that endeavor.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I rise to speak in tribute to one who has been a friend as close as a brother and in a very real sense a true brother born of the spirit, Senator HAROLD HUGHES.

In a time when the ever-present temptation toward self-aggrandizement has been recognized by the public for what it is—plain self-centeredness—Senator HUGHES has presented his colleagues, his constituents, and the Nation with the challenge to servanthood. And his challenge has not been one of words. It has been one of example.

Our colleague from Iowa was one of the early prophetic voices regarding the moral impropriety of our involvement in Vietnam. Through his service on the Senate Armed Services Committee he joined in opposition to military conscription and called us to redirect our national priorities from those of destroying lives to those saving lives, building dignity in man rather than fear and hatred.

Senator HUGHES' accomplishments as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Alcoholism and Narcotics are well known. We can thank him for the turnaround in our national policy which now recognizes the worth of individuals who suffer from alcohol and narcotics abuse.

But perhaps Senator HUGHES' greatest challenge to each of us as Members of the U.S. Senate and as American citizens has yet to be acted out. In the midst of a rewarding term as senior Senator from Iowa, having built an enviable record in one term in the Senate, and having earned the respect of his colleagues for his vision, service, leadership, and accomplishment, Senator HUGHES has chosen to follow the call of One who will offer him the potential for greater stress and less recognition, but, with these things, the probability of greater joy.

Senator HUGHES' profession of a commitment to a personal God as revealed in Jesus Christ is well known, his having spoken with many of us personally as well as through the national media. He voluntarily leaves these Chambers for continued service, for direct involvement in the lives of men and women who are seeking for a liberation from the chains of an existence with no eternal significance or personal meaning.

In the light of recent events clearly exposing the wanton striving for power by too many political figures, we each would do well to take up the challenge of the life of Senator HAROLD HUGHES. Service to others rather than maintaining of one's ego and power is the only truly lasting investment one can make. The words of Jesus of Nazareth truly reflect the rearrangement of priorities in Senator HUGHES' life, and we each would do well to heed them. "If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all."

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, all of us feel a deep sense of regret at the departure of HAROLD HUGHES from the Senate. I am honored to join the many other Senators who are paying tribute to him for his outstanding service to the Senate, to the people of Iowa, and to the Nation.

We shall miss many things about HAROLD HUGHES. But for my part, I shall miss most of all the commanding presence, the principled debates he led, the powerful voice that was so often the voice of conscience and decency in the Senate.

It is rare for a freshman Senator, in a single term, to achieve the preeminent position in the Senate that HAROLD HUGHES so quickly attained. It is fair to say that the Vietnam war was the overriding issue for the Senate and the Nation during the period of his service with us. We know the way HAROLD HUGHES quickly established a position of major Senate leadership in opposition to the war. It was HAROLD HUGHES who led the way in uncovering the horror of My Lai. It was HAROLD HUGHES who led the way in uncovering the secret bombing of Cambodia. It was HAROLD HUGHES who, in so many other ways, helped the Nation finally end the war.

On domestic issues, he was best known for his outstanding leadership in developing programs for control of alcohol and drug abuse. But he was also a brilliant and effective Senator on many other social issues. It has been a great privilege for me to sit with him these past 6 years as a member of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. In many respects, that was a committee made for HAROLD HUGHES, and he helped to make it an extremely productive committee during his service with us.

But that is not all. We also honor Senator HUGHES for the universality of his interests and abilities. We remember the eloquent way he raised his voice against capital punishment on the Senate floor this year. We lost that fight. But one day, America will follow Iowa and HAROLD HUGHES, and we shall outlaw capital punishment from this land.

Now, to his record of public service in Iowa, especially his outstanding record as Governor of that State, he has added 6 brilliant years in the Senate. He has been a tremendous force for peace in the world, a tremendous force against poverty and injustice and racial discrimination at home.

His departure leaves a Senate void that will be extremely difficult to fill. Few, if any, in the history of the Senate have left so big a mark in so short a time. He has made lasting contributions to the Senate and the Nation, and all of us will miss him, even as we wish him well in the new endeavor on which he now embarks.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two excerpts on Senator HUGHES may be printed at this point in the Record: The first is from my own book on health care, "In Critical Condition." The second is from "The Great Plains States of America," by Neal Peirce.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From "In Critical Condition" by Edward M. Kennedy (1972)]

SEEKING OUT HEALTH CARE AFTER HOURS

Even if there is a physician near you, you may have trouble getting to him if you are sick at inconvenient times. At our hearing in Iowa, the state medical society indicated that no one in Iowa was more than twenty minutes from a doctor. In response, my distinguished colleague Senator Harold E. Hughes told the following story.

December 19, 1974

Senator HUGHES. Would it surprise you if I were to tell you that when I was governor of this state I tried to call a physician for my son-in-law in this city and could not get a physician to go to his home to see him when he was suffering some severe cramps and intestinal distress? We were afraid to move him, and I called the Polk County Medical Society for help. There was no physician that they would give me for help; I was told as governor of this state to go to the house and get him and bring him to the emergency entrance of this very hospital. No one would see him. . . . When that happens to the governor, you know, I wonder what happens to the rest of the people.

So much of the medical care in this state is excellent and magnificent in quality, and yet we have so many that are totally left out. That's what we are talking about.

I might add, just to make the record equal, that last year in the state of Virginia my second daughter was seized one night with severe pain in the abdomen. We called an ambulance. We rushed her to a hospital, where we could get no medical help because we couldn't find a doctor who knew us. The doctor whom we called on—and, as a United States Senator, I called the Senate physician—couldn't make a recommendation to me. The pain was almost impossible to bear, yet they would give her absolutely nothing to relieve the pain. Seven hours later I was calling physicians in Des Moines, Iowa, trying to find out the types of pain relievers and drugs given to her during earlier illnesses. I finally tracked down at Okoboji the physician who had treated her in Iowa, after at least fifteen long-distance calls. I called Dr. Bedell at the University Hospital for help. He had been my own physician for many years. When finally medical care was found and a diagnosis was made, she had suffered from an inversion of the small intestine, and gangrene set in three days later.

I threatened a doctor in the hallway of that hospital and told him I'd break his neck if he didn't come in and do something about my daughter. I'm pretty upset when I find conditions like this in America.

[From "The Great Plains States of America" by Neal R. Peirce (1973)]

Iowa has been staunchly Republican from the late 1850s to modern times, electing only two Democratic governors in the span of 98 years ending in 1956. Only in exceptional year (1912, 1932, 1936, 1948) had the Democrats won for President. Most congressional delegations had been Republican, although Guy Gillette, who looked like an actors' studio choice for Senator, was elected to the Senate on the Democratic ticket in 1936 and three times subsequently, finally losing out in 1954. Another Democratic winner was Hershel C. Loveless, who won the governorship in 1956 and 1958; in 1958, with the farmers up in arms over Ezra Taft Benson's farm policies, Democrats also took half the U.S. House seats.

But Republican normalcy seemed to reappear in 1960 as Loveless lost a race for the Senate. Nixon swept Iowa, and control of the House delegation went back to the GOP. With the Benson irritant removed, a Republican decade seemed in the offing.

All those prognostications failed to take account, however, of a tall, black-haired man with a ruffled suit and Indian-looking face, a blunt ex-truck driver absolutely determined he would become governor of Iowa in 1962. The man was Harold E. Hughes, native of little Ida Grove, Iowa, the product of a Fundamentalist home and a sometime Methodist lay preacher. Until the age of 32, less than a decade before, Hughes had been an apparently hopeless alcoholic, reeling off weekend after weekend on long drinking sprees. Then, in the mid-1950s, he had suddenly stopped. "If I hadn't quit," he said years later, "I'd either be dead or a bum by now."

Hughes had been a Democrat only five years and had occupied but single government post (state commerce commissioner) when he entered the 1962 governor race. (He had tried for his party's 1950 governor nomination but lost that year.) What Hughes did bring to statewide politics was a rare combination of deeply held convictions and exceptional natural intelligence that would make him within a few short years one of the most charismatic, effective reformers the Plains States have produced in this generation.

But why Harold Hughes, in rockribbed Republican Iowa, in 1962? Students of politics are hard put to fathom the strange interrelationships of men and events which will popularize an issue or a personality as some particular moment of time. One part of the equation for Hughes was the ongoing Iowa debate about whether liquor could be served legally by the drink, in bars and restaurants. Many Democratic candidates before Hughes had talked about liquor by the drink but had been generally ignored. But when Hughes seized on the issue in 1962, it sparked, perhaps by the very bluntness and forthrightness with which he attacked it.

Hughes' principal argument was that it was hypocritical to forbid liquor by the drink when key clubs, veterans, and fraternal clubs were selling liquor in almost every county of the state. "I told the people I'd close it up or I'd legalize it, that if the country club set wanted to drink every night of the week, then the laboring man was entitled to it too." Reporters on the campaign trail began to notice that even in dry areas there was a lot of sentiment to change the liquor law. Part of Hughes' strength was the unpopularity of the Republican governor at the time, Norman Erbe. But something deeper was taking place; as reporters Nick Kotz and James Risser of the Des Moines Register wrote some years later.

"On the surface, it seemed ironic that reformed drunk Hughes was speaking out boldly in favor of legalized liquor-by-the-drink in Biblebelt, dry, conservative Iowa. In reality, he was igniting a revolution in Iowa politics. The state was in the throes of a transition from a rural to an urban economy and urban mores, and was without any political leadership. . . . Hughes tapped a latent Iowa majority who desired a more progressive state image (they were tired of jokes about the little old lady from Dubuque and about key clubs) and who wanted more of their political leaders than cautious mediocrity. . . . The real surprise is that so few politicians, reporters, or business leaders really understood what was happening in the state."

But the election returns proved the point: Hughes was elected governor with 41,944 votes to spare (52.6 percent).

Once elected, Hughes could have pursued a safe "moderate-to-conservative" course in the style of his more cautious fellow Democrats, Morrison of Nebraska or Docking of Kansas. But if Hughes had ever harbored such thoughts, they were put to rest by his inaugural address before the Republican-controlled legislature. "It is sometimes said that the knack of skillful government is to hang back, to do as little as possible, and make no mistakes," Hughes noted. "I hope there is another way—for between you and me, this prospect does not invite my soul."

Hughes then proceeded to press for numerous reforms of a fundamental nature, appealing where he thought necessary over the legislators' heads and directly to the people. Liquor by the drink was indeed approved after a stormy legislative debate, a major victory for the governor. Another Hughes triumph came when the voters rejected by a three-to-one margin a proposal from the legislature to leave the rural areas in perpetual control of one house (the so-called "little federal" system). Hughes had campaigned for a straight population-based apportionment instead, and the vote seemed to indicate that Iowans were willing to make an even greater break with the old small-town order of things.

In retrospect, Hughes downgrades the importance of both the liquor and apportionment battles. "Liquor by the drink was probably the least important thing I did, even if it is the most remembered," he told me. As for reapportionment, he finds its results "disappointing" because the legislators still tend to be semi-retirees or lawyers who can afford to spend several months in Des Moines with minimal pay and facilities. The result, Hughes believes, is that "the legislature is not a clear response to the people of the state." (As Hughes was finishing his last year as governor in 1968, however, the legislature and people approved five amendments to the state constitution to modernize legislative operations, including annual, unlimited sessions. In 1971 the Citizens Council on State Legislatures reported that the amendments helped create a momentum for improvement so fundamental that the Iowa legislature ranked sixth in the entire Union, and first among small states, on a scale of its capacity to act in "a functional, accountable, informed, independent and representative manner." In particular, the Council praised Iowa's legislature for its limited number of committees in both houses with parallel jurisdictions, the open access which the press and public have to the work of the legislature, single-member districts that focus the relationship between legislators and their constituents, and effective conflict-of-interest statutes.)

Hughes believes that the more important achievements of his years as governor lie in the areas of penal reform, mental health, education, and industrial development. He fought successfully to eliminate capital punishment ("to erase the moral stigma of public hangings"), to establish a pre-release farm for prisoners before their reinfusion into society, to obtain Iowa's first public defender and its first alcoholic treatment facility, and to improve law enforcement training. Efforts in the mental health field included Iowa's first facilities specifically for the treatment of the criminally insane. Substantially more assistance for the state universities was authorized and the state's share of expenses for local schools went from 11 to 39 percent. State taxes rose sharply to finance the increase in the state budget from $200 million to $500 million annually during the Hughes regime (earning him a reputation as a big spender), but reform measures such as reduced taxes for the elderly and a withholding system to catch tax-dodgers and accelerate payments were instituted. An intensive industrial promotion effort included "Sell Iowa" trips to major U.S. cities and countries abroad and the establishment of 15 regional vocational-technical schools to train workers for the rural located light industries the state was trying to attract. The merit system for state employees was expanded and a state planning office established. The state's public utilities were brought under more effective control, and interest payments were required on previously idle state funds in Iowa banks. On the latter two issues, Kotz and Risser wrote later, Hughes and his chief aide, Park

*Foreign trade missions are more important for Iowa than one might think, since 10 percent of its farm goods are sold abroad, including a number of the animal glands scorned in America but popular in Europe for various delicacies. Foreign trade is one reason the state has rejected the isolationism of earlier decades.

December 19, 1974

Rinard, "put together a new populist coalition of city men and farmer legislators who had their own dislike of the small-town bankers, merchants, and private utilities who so often had squeezed them hard."

Iowa has but 1.5 percent black population, but there are pockets of dismal Negro slums in Des Moines, Cedar Rapids, and Waterloo, mini-ghettos which most Iowans—including Hughes—were largely oblivious of until disturbances began. A riot in Waterloo obliged Hughes to call in troops, and he walked the streets of the state's ghettos in an attempt to quiet tension. "I was shocked by what I saw," Hughes said after his first trips to the ghettos. "I couldn't believe the venom I found. I'd go home nights and couldn't sleep and felt like I couldn't face the world the next morning." Hughes has assailed some Iowa audiences as hypocrites for ignoring or scorning the blacks, Indians, or other poor. He expanded the state civil rights commission and supported a state open-housing law as governor.

Hughes' peak in Iowa politics came when he first sought reelection as governor in 1964. The voters accorded him a stupendous plurality of 429,479 votes (68.0 percent), substantially ahead of even the showing which President Johnson made against Barry Goldwater in Iowa. The same election swept the Democrats to control of all but one of Iowa's seven U.S. House seats and gave them both houses of the state legislature for the first time in 30 years. In 1966 Hughes won a third and final term as governor, albeit by a lesser plurality (99,741 votes). It was shortly after that election, in which Democratic candidates, virtually abandoned by President Johnson, lost badly across the country, that Hughes broke with his old friend, LBJ, and candidly told reporters how much confidence Johnson had lost among the nation's Democratic governors. He also began to disassociate himself from the Johnson administration's Vietnam policy, which he had previously supported. (By 1970 Hughes' transformation on the war issue was complete. War, he said, "is useless as a political instrument. I hate war, all war. Humanity is at stake.")

During the spring and summer of 1968, as the Democrats went through the agony of preparing and conducting their Chicago convention, Hughes first emerged as a national figure. He had been preparing to endorse Kennedy just before the Los Angeles assassination, took charge of an ad hoc party rules reform group which made a number of influential proposals, and ended up placing Senator Eugene McCarthy's name in nomination for the Presidency.

In Iowa, however, Hughes was running for a vacated U.S. Senate seat and discovered that the accumulated antagonism of several years in the governorship, the higher taxes and ballooned state budget, had cost him much support. To make things worse, Hughes insisted on running his whole campaign on his opposition to the Vietnam war and on the Negro problem—neither especially popular issues in Iowa. His budget was substantially less than that of his Republican opponent, state Senator David M. Stanley. Finally Hughes won, but by a slim margin of 6,415 votes (60.2 percent).

In the Senate, Hughes was soon drawing attention as chairman of a special subcommittee on alcoholism and narcotics. Some accused him of being practically a one-issue Senator with his constant attention to "the problem," but in a column on Hughes, a Washington Post writer noted it was also true that "Washington has trouble with politicians who have passion. They upset the pace." (One sidelight is that Hughes has become a quiet but very effective father confessor for high-ranking Democrats of many states who had alcohol problems to contend with. When I interviewed Hughes, he told me that one of these was former Governor Philip Hoff of Vermont; later Hoff publicly acknowledged the help Hughes had given him in conquering his problem with alcohol.)

Hughes' hearings also produced a broad range of interesting new testimony on drug problems, leading him to remark: "Why, instead of following safe and professional recommendations, do we continue a [drug control] system that busts up kids' lives, makes treatment of addiction impossible, and over-punishes the nameless, wretched addict or pusher, while channeling easy profits into the hands of the underworld?" On another occasion, Hughes said, "How the hell can Father sit in his chair at night sipping his third martini and yell at Johnny about the evils of pot?"

Although South Dakota's George McGovern was chosen over Hughes to head the Democratic party's official reform commission after the 1968 election, Hughes served as vice chairman, devoted long hours and days to the task, and left his imprint in the unprecedented requirements for party democracy that emerged. (According to the commission's counsel, Eli Segal, Hughes was "the most outspoken advocate of the prohibition of rigged caucuses, proxy voting, unit rules, closed slate-making, excessive fees for becoming a party delegate, and the automatic designation of certain public officials as delegates.") Many Democratic reformers were drawn to Hughes through his work, and became part of the ad hoc group that supported Hughes' tentative but never announced Presidential candidacy, which flowered through late 1970, and into the spring of 1971. (Hughes' financial support, however, came heavily from Iowa businessmen, many with a Republican background, who had become loyal to him when he was governor. One of these was Watson Powell, Jr., president of the Des Moines chamber of commerce and chairman of the American Republic Insurance Company.)

Reporters who watched Hughes during his Presidential explorations soon noted his unusual attributes. There was, for instance, Hughes' combination of a rough-hewn truck driver and idealistic reformer, thus potentially combining blue-collar and intellectual support—a natural answer, some thought, to the Republicans' Spiro Agnew. But there was more to Hughes than that. As David S. Broder wrote:

"His assets are a magnificent, deep bass voice, controlled in volume and flexible in tone, that may well be the best voice in American politics today; a commanding physical presence, and a face whose strength is the visible record of past travail. . . . He simply will not be confined to the polite generalities of politics but insists on raising questions of ethics in highly individual terms. . . . He has spoken so powerfully of life and reconciliation that audiences of hard-bitten politicians have been reduced to tears."

The reporters were also intrigued by Hughes' openly expressed religious faith, at once mystic and evangelistic. When Paul R. Wieck pressed Hughes on reports that he had consulted astrologists or physicists, Hughes denied it (though he has not denied an interest in the occult and extrasensory perception, or the possibility of speaking with his dead brother through a medium). Pressed by Wieck on the issue of his concept of God, Hughes replied:

"If I could adequately describe God, he'd be unworthy of consideration. God is a very personal thing. . . . I believe the prophets spoke truth to all. . . . I accept Jesus Christ as the incarnate word of God. . . . God is omnipresent, omniscient, the spiritual presence of all things. . . . I'm impressed with his concern for man."

On another occasion, Hughes spoke of "a longing in the hearts of men to love each other" and of the necessity "to measure men by the persistence of their spirit and their soul" rather than by the standards of power and money.

Perhaps those thoughts and forces in a man were inconsistent with the cold-blooded calculations expected of a Presidential candidate; perhaps the practicalities of a clash with a man who shared his views so completely, George McGovern, helped to deter Hughes from an open candidacy. In any event, in July 1971 Hughes announced he would not run for the nomination. His given reasons: his failure to attract sufficiently broad support, and his conviction that his undeclared candidacy was preventing him from dealing with the problems he believed were "eating the heart out of this country"—drug abuse, crime, and the decay of the cities.

Mr. THURMOND, Mr. President, Senator HAROLD E. HUGHES of the fine Midwestern State of Iowa will be leaving us when the 93d Congress adjourns to pursue a career in religious work. He has been an able Senator and I am sure the people of the State will miss his leadership in Government. At the same time, I think all of my colleagues will join me in saying that HAROLD will continue to provide great spiritual leadership to all with whom he may come in contact.

Senator HUGHES is a very fine Christian man in addition to being a distinguished Senator. I have very much enjoyed his company at the Wednesday prayer breakfasts in which a number of my colleagues participate. Also, I have had the pleasure of serving with HAROLD on the Armed Services and Veterans' Affairs Committees. In both of these committees he has made great contributions to the well-being of past and present military personnel.

During his outstanding career in public life, including three terms as Governor, HAROLD HUGHES has championed a number of worthy causes. He has been especially instrumental in developing and lending programs to curtail alcohol and drug abuse, having served as a member of the National Commission on Marihuana and Drug Abuse and as President of the International Council on Alcohol and Addictions.

HAROLD, like myself, is a member of the Masonic Lodge and has brought great credit to the Masons with his outstanding work over the years.

Mrs. Thurmond joins me in wishing HAROLD and his charming wife Eva every success in their undertakings in the future.

TRIBUTES TO SENATOR J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT

Mr. MCCLELLAN, Mr. President, it is with the deepest regret that I face the reality of the impending retirement of my longtime colleague and friend, Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT.

For three decades BILL FULBRIGHT has served the people of Arkansas and this Nation with great distinction and honor. Few men will leave behind them in this body a greater void in the Senate and one that will be more difficult to fill.

During his 30 years in the Senate, 15 as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Senator FULBRIGHT has gained the recognition of being regarded as a prophet in his own time. Often in defiance of conventional wisdom he has taken a sometimes lonely and unpopular stand on some of the great issues of our day. Often, it has turned out that his position was correct.

December 19, 1974

Senator FULBRIGHT was a comparatively young man when he came to the Senate in 1944, but he had already had a distinguished career.

In 1939 at the age of 34, he was named president of his alma mater, the University of Arkansas, thus becoming the youngest president of any major university.

Three years later, he began his political career by being elected to the Congress from the Third District of Arkansas.

As a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, he introduced the famous Fulbright resolution which was approved by the House in September 1943. This resolution, generally regarded as the forerunner of the establishment of the United Nations, called for the participation of the United States in a postwar international organization.

After serving a term in the House, he was elected to the Senate where he immediately made his mark.

In 1946, Senator FULBRIGHT initiated the international exchange program for students and scholars, a program which bears his name and has been an important instrument in furthering global understanding and reducing intellectual isolation.

As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations longer than any other Member, Senator FULBRIGHT has attained a reputation for independent judgment and articulate dissent.

He has advocated a foreign policy based upon his conception of what international relations and cooperation should be between nations.

His voice in world affairs has been one of intelligent vision and restraint.

While Senator FULBRIGHT has been primarily known for his achievements in the field of foreign affairs, he has made valuable contributions in the area of finance and banking.

From 1955 until February 1959, he served as chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and is a member of the Finance and Joint Economic Committees.

Senator FULBRIGHT has also been a vigorous advocate of the interests of Arkansas and we have worked together on many programs of benefit to our great State and to its citizens.

He has been active in promoting programs for education, agriculture, conservation, and environmental development.

While our philosophies may have differed on occasions, our respect for each other has steadily increased. I am proud to have had him for my colleague and as a personal friend.

Some years ago, Senator FULBRIGHT enunciated what has been considered the Fulbright test for public officials:

The most valuable public servant, like the true patriot, is one who gives a higher loyalty to his country's ideals than to its current policy and who, therefore, is willing to criticize as well as to comply.

In my opinion, BILL FULBRIGHT passes this test.

I want him to know and to always remember that I have enjoyed our associations and labors together. Our relations have always been most amiable and pleasant. It has been a privilege to work with him as we tried to serve our country and our Arkansas constituency.

Norma and I wish for BILL many more productive years of service in whatever work he may choose to engage, that he and Betty may find and enjoy every happiness in pleasant living in the years following his retirement from the U.S. Senate.

Mr. ABOUREZK, Mr. President, speaking about the departure of Senator FULBRIGHT, I think his accomplishments and his name will be remembered for a long time after the rest of us have departed from the Senate. He has already joined the most respected and most illustrious names in the country, for his leading role in determining American foreign policy. As one of its major architects of the past 10 or 15 years, he has consistently dared to defy conventional wisdom and speak what he believes to be the truth, no matter what the opposition to his position might have been. His credibility is firmly established, because he has been proved to be correct, accurate, and right on each occasion.

We saw this in the Vietnam war. I think the hearings we held and persisted in holding at length under the Johnson administration can be described as the principal cause of the final end to the Vietnam war, and the view the American public took of that war as the result of his hearings.

But in spite of living and working in the very pessimistic city of Washington, D.C., Senator FULBRIGHT has maintained his optimism throughout. He recently delivered a speech, a month or so ago, at Westminster College in Fulton, Mo.—the same college at which Winston Churchill delivered his famous "Iron Curtain" speech. I want to read two or three sentences from that speech:

In the course of 30 years in the United States Senate, I can recall few if any instances on which it has seemed to me that our national problems were beyond resolution. Far more often than not, a solution or an approach or an opportunity to advance in a creative way has seemed both available and feasible. The obstacles most often have been political, and perhaps psychological. How can people and politicians be gotten to do what they ought to do, and what they usually very well know they ought to do, rather than do nothing or do what is convenient or comfortable for the moment?

I think with those words, as well as the many other words he has spoken on Vietnam, on the Middle East conflict, and on other aspects of the foreign policy of this country which are so important to the people of this country, Senator FULBRIGHT has become the prophet, the man who has called this Nation to a higher standard rather than expediency, a higher standard of responsibility.

Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CHILES, Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from South Dakota. I want to add my voice in tribute to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, who I think has had a wonderful career in the U.S. Senate, and with that leadership at all times he has also been a very, very fine gentleman, whom it has certainly been a pleasure for us as Senators to deal with.

As a freshman Senator who came to this body in 1970, I can think of no Member of the Senate who was more helpful and treated me and my family with more kindness. I know he has the love and esteem of my wife, who thinks he is one of the alltime great Senators. I think it has been an inspiration for all of us to see this model of courage and model of determination, who many times has seen that all voices were raised in opposition, and who went against the tide many, many times, but always where he felt he saw his duty as a Senator and as a leader of this country. He always heeded that call of duty and never the popular cry of the moment.

For that reason, I am delighted to have an opportunity to join in paying tribute to him today.

Mr. ABOUREZK, Mr. President, I shall yield to the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE). But I just want to say, now that Senator FULBRIGHT is here on the floor, that I think it is tragic that after 30 years in the Senate he was never able to achieve the title of senior Senator from Arkansas. The reason is JOHN MCCLELLAN, who would like to make a few remarks as well.

I yield to the Senator from Maine. Mr. MUSKIE, Mr. President, I suppose we ought to give the distinguished junior Senator from Arkansas a chance to defend himself from time to time. But, before we do, I would like to say a few words to add to his burden of defense.

The Senate, in my judgment, Mr. President, is losing one of its most eminent statesmen—a word I am sure the Senator from Arkansas would not like to see applied to himself. But he is, I think he is, one of the most eminent statesmen that the Senate has known since I have been here.

I regard him as a good friend, as the chairman of the committee on which I am privileged to serve with him, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and a deeply respected colleague of us all, whether or not we agree with him all ways.

I think he will be viewed by historians as one of the most effective and far-sighted political leaders of our time. As chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee during the period of sometimes painful transition in U.S. foreign policy, he has been a voice of reason, good judgment, commonsense, qualities that are appreciated in my part of the country. He has mastered the art of speaking truth plainly, and his wisdom and his vision have been a valuable national asset to us all.

In his 32 years in Congress, including five terms in this body, BILL FULBRIGHT became the strongest voice in Congress on foreign policy and international affairs.

As a freshman Congressman in 1943—I cannot think back that far—the House approved his resolution calling for an international organization for peace. The sentiments that he expressed at that time led to the establishment of the United Nations. It was an auspicious start to a career which has spanned, perhaps, the most difficult and, with the advent of the atom bomb, the most dangerous years America has faced in the international community.

A more recent accomplishment which stands out in the record was his early doubts about Vietnam which predated mine, and his pursuit of the truth of our involvement there. In 1966, he called the first congressional hearings on Vietnam and became a persistent critic and effective opponent of American involvement.

I am sure our colleague, Senator JAVITS, joins me in offering special thanks for Senator FULBRIGHT's dedication and hard work in this Congress to secure passage of the war powers resolution. His knowledge and ability were invaluable in that effort.

His philosophy as an internationalist not only led him to become one of the leading supporters of the policy of détente. They also took more personal form.

As a Rhodes scholar, BILL FULBRIGHT had the opportunity to travel and study abroad. His idea that the United States should have such a program of its own has become the Fulbright scholarships, which are of incalculable benefit not only to many American students every year but to the cause of international understanding and cooperation as well.

Finally, we who live in Washington, and the American cultural community as a whole, owe him a special debt for his work in establishing the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. The Kennedy Center has become a living, working tribute to Senator FULBRIGHT's imagination and concern for our cultural opportunities.

We will miss BILL FULBRIGHT in the Senate.

I have personally benefited from his enlightened leadership of the Foreign Relations Committee in the 4 years it has been my privilege to be a member. And it has been a personal pleasure to know him as a friend.

I understand he is returning to the practice of law, and Jane and I wish him and Betty all our best in the years ahead.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I will yield to the Senator, Mr. President.

Mr. President, as the distinguished Senator from Maine has said, we are going to miss our friend, our colleague, our chairman. He has proven quite distinctively and clearly that there is a role for intellect in the Senate, and there is a role for the rational and the thinking man. There is a place, there is an opportunity here, which many other Senators have embraced to give a high priority to the necessity for being a reasonable and rational human being.

As one who has been singularly fortunate in his educational background, and who had not only benefited from it but benefited us as a result of his sagacity and his erudition, the fact that he was a Rhodes scholar and a Pembroke man, that he has been honored by an honorary degree by that perhaps greatest of all educational institutions, rivaled only by Cambridge, as his family said, the fact that as chairman of this important Committee on Foreign Relations we value him and his services; we value, too, his fairness, his patience, his willingness to tolerate and even to welcome dissent, to permit the fullest flow of debate, to give all the members of the committee an opportunity to be heard, to state fairly the results of the deliberations and actions of the committee to the whole Senate, never prejudicing them by word or action, we are indebted to men of the caliber of the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT) and, indeed, we are going to miss him.

He has often been most foresighted. Indeed, if he has erred, like the rest of us, that is a matter of opinion and of very short memory compared to the contributions he has made to American life, to the opportunity not only for education for others, but for an exchange among educated men of other countries to this country, his contribution in the establishment of the Kennedy Center here, and in the manifest and manifold ways in which he has contributed to the betterment of the conditions of the Republic.

So we wish him well. Reference has been made to the fact that he may plan to return to the practice of law. I hope he will give some time to the lecture service, and to the further opportunity to inform the young men and women of America of his experience and his observations.

We all join in wishing for him in his future career the greatest success and happiness, and we extend to him our warmest good wishes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has 5 minutes.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, it is a privilege to say a word about our friend, and my neighbor, too, who is retiring from the Senate.

I think all of us occasionally let our minds go back to the time when we first came here. I remember that the Senator from Arkansas was one of the very first ones to give me a warm, cordial, personal greeting.

I have never forgotten that. I remember he took me out to his home where I met for the first time his lovely, wonderful wife. There, we had dinner with some other friends.

He made an impression then, a most favorable one, and one that I have retained.

I have always known, with others, that he made many contributions here, including the contribution that comes from a scholarly background that he had, and one that he has kept cultivated and updated.

That has been a contribution to the Senate, and it was one of a different kind from many of us and it meant something to the credit of the Senate and to its deliberations here.

The Senator from Arkansas and I have had some differences of opinion on various matters, some debates which were always friendly. I have admired his capacity, his really great capacity for work, not only his capacity for mastering a subject, but his capacity for thoroughly presenting the matter in his committee, on the floor here, or in the public forums where he has been invited many, many times, and always spoke creditably.

I have in my unfinished business now the last speech, not the last one maybe, but a notable speech that he made recently at the site where Winston Churchill spoke when he gave the famed Iron Curtain speech.

The Senator from Arkansas was capable of the same caliber of speech, showing forethought and vision.

I certainly join in wishing him well, wishing his wife, Miss Betty, well, in every way in the years ahead when I hope that God will sustain and continue to bless them.

Certainly my tenure here has been enriched by their lives and I am most grateful to them.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I would like to join my colleagues in praise of our distinguished friend, BILL FULBRIGHT.

His accomplishments are many—as a scholar at the University of Arkansas, at Oxford University, as a lawyer and a professor of law, as president of the University of Arkansas, as a Congressman, as a Senator and chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Since he was first elected in 1944, BILL FULBRIGHT has given the Senate much of its independence, much of its courage and much of its wisdom. He has brought commonsense and stature to the Congress, especially in foreign affairs.

It seems that he has been in the Senate ever since I can remember. And ever since I can remember, he has represented the very best in the U.S. Senate. One particular incident comes to mind, one very old one, that many of us remember. It happened in 1954 when I was a student at the University of Iowa and it is a very vivid memory.

Early in February, Senator McCarthy, of Wisconsin, came before the Senate to ask for an additional $300,000 for his special investigating committee. It was near the height of his power. The Senate voted him that money 80 to 1. The only dissent came from BILL FULBRIGHT.

That gives you an idea of BILL FULBRIGHT's character, the way it was 20 years ago and the way it is today. There are countless other examples. Nothing has changed. The independence and the courage are the same.

As he stood alone on that vote, he stood alone on the issue of Vietnam, alone in advising President Kennedy against the Bay of Pigs invasion. Eight years ago he began warning us against what he called the "arrogance of power" in the executive branch. Through his televised hearings he made this country aware of what really was happening in Southeast Asia, and helped us end it.

I would like to close with something historian Arthur Schlesinger wrote about the future of Congress in the Wall Street Journal earlier this year.

December 19, 1974

He said that the abuse of Congress has been something of an American tradition. He argued that Congress has the power but only lacks the will to use it. Schlesinger did say there was one "conspicuous exception" to that conclusion. He said that BILL FULBRIGHT has the will and the courage and the independence:

His courage, his knowledge, his clarity of expression and his grace have been a strong congressional weapon against a foreign policy run imperiously out of the Oval Office. . . . He is one of the few Senators whom Presidents have to take into account—one of the few who make a difference.

Indeed he has.

Thank you, Mr. President. Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, when I entered the Senate 28 years ago, I was placed on the Banking and Currency Committee along with my friend, BILL FULBRIGHT, with whom I had served in the House but who came to the Senate 2 years ahead of me. Through the years, until he left the chairmanship of the Banking Committee to become chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I sat at his left. He has served as chairman for 15 years longer than anyone during the long history of that committee.

As it happened, not too long after I came to the Senate, I was given a place on the Foreign Relations Committee and, in time, I found myself sitting again on the left next to BILL FULBRIGHT. Thus, through the years, I have had the privilege of watching him work as a member and as chairman of two different committees. I always enjoyed working with him. He was a great chairman, a man whose opinions every member of the committee respected, even if sometimes differing with him.

BILL FULBRIGHT has been a great and distinguished Senator who has had much to do in shaping our foreign policy and who, in doing so, has gained an international reputation.

BILL is leaving the Senate. We shall miss him. I want to express, for myself and Mrs. Sparkman, our very best wishes for great happiness through the years for both him and his great and gracious helpmate, Betty.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT has been an institution in the Senate. While some of us have not always agreed with his views, his unfailing dedication, his consideration for his colleagues, and his intellectual leadership have been outstanding. We shall miss him in the Senate, but hope that he will continue to remain active and continue the contribution he has made to our Nation.

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to my good friend and one of the most respected members of this august body, J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT of Arkansas, who leaves the Senate at the completion of the 93d Congress.

A scholar from his early days, BILL FULBRIGHT has proved the worth of an outstanding academic background and intellectual excellence on Capitol Hill. It is indeed fitting that a world renown and highly effective international scholarship program, instituted in the 1940's, bears his name.

His forte, of course, has been foreign relations. He became chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in 1959, the same year I arrived in Washington as one of the first two Senators from the then new State of Hawaii. He was well prepared, having served on this committee for 10 years.

Under BILL FULBRIGHT's leadership, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee became a leading forum for discussions of America's role overseas, and it has played a strong role in helping to shape U.S. foreign policy.

In addition to his work on the Foreign Relations Committee, BILL FULBRIGHT has made outstanding contributions as a member of the Senate Finance Committee and the Joint Economic Committee. His articulate, forthright, and provocative views will be missed in the 94th Congress.

Before coming to the U.S. Senate, BILL FULBRIGHT served for one term in the U.S. House of Representatives, and before that, in 1939, he was president of the University of Arkansas at the then almost unheard of age of 34.

BILL FULBRIGHT also served as a member of the university's law school faculty, a lecturer at the George Washington University Law School and as a special attorney with the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Mr. President, it has been a privilege and a pleasure to serve in the U.S. Senate with BILL FULBRIGHT for these many years.

I have had the extra pleasure of traveling with him on two official trips abroad, the latest of which as a member of the congressional delegation to the People's Republic of China last September.

That reminds me of one of BILL's talents that is not widely known. He is a very good ping pong player. After the ping pong team from the People's Republic of China toured America a couple of years ago, I fully expected BILL FULBRIGHT to head a ping pong team to tour the People's Republic. I guess he has just been too modest about his prowess with a ping pong paddle.

Seriously, though, I am confident that BILL FULBRIGHT will continue to contribute to our national discourse on foreign policy and America's role in international affairs.

I wish for him and for his gracious wife Elizabeth the best of all worlds in the future. Ellyn joins me in extending our warmest aloha to both of them.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the stature of this Senate will soon be diminished. From our legislative landscape, a towering tree will have been removed. A beacon to flash the presence of dangerous shoals will go out.

We all know the reason why. The expiration of the 93d Congress ends 30 years of outstanding Senate service rendered by our distinguished colleague and senior Senator from Arkansas.

But we can take heart. In other forums, in other halls, by pen and by voice, he will continue to shape events and mold opinion on behalf of his country and of his State that he has already served so well.

I personally feel his departure from the Senate most keenly, as a friend, an admirer, and a colleague. From gathering years spent on the Foreign Relations Committee, the Senator to me will always be "Mr. Chairman."

Whenever I think of a scholar, I think of FULBRIGHT. I know we all do. What a tribute to the broad measure of the man—to his appreciation of the value of education and knowledge in bringing the world together in links no arms can forge.

Almost single-handedly in the beginning, who turned this country about from a murderous path of war?

Who first sowed the seeds of a realistic China policy?

"If, drunk with sight of power, we loose wild tongues," who among us has cried out loud and clear: "Lest we forget, lest we forget!"

In his valedictorian talk at the National Press Club, the Senator warned that Americans are now in the habit of concentrating more on the singer than on the song, more on shadow than on substance. With us, he should have no worry; long after his departure from the Congress, his theme songs will be sounding in these halls.

To the junior Senator from Arkansas and his gracious wife: Godspeed.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, the departure of Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT from the Senate is a blow to all of us who know him. Hopefully we shall continue personally to enjoy his friendship and counsel.

But my real hope is that the tremendous wisdom and insight of the Senator from Arkansas be retained in some capacity for the Nation which so desperately needs it. Senator FULBRIGHT has given us a valuable head start on the most pressing issues of our time though, as a nation, we have sometimes been slow to heed him.

He was the first to see the grave dangers of our involvement in South Vietnam. He defied public opinion to tell us that conflict was contrary to our interests, that we were intervening in a civil conflict—and on the wrong side at that. We will pay the price for that mistake far into the next century. We can thank Senator FULBRIGHT that its cost was not higher in every regard.

Senator FULBRIGHT was the first American leader to oppose our foreign aid program. He recognized it for what it is: A massive military aid program we cannot afford. We know now that he was correct.

And it is my understanding that Senator FULBRIGHT was first to oppose the excesses of Senator Joseph McCarthy and the dark chapter he wrote in the Nation's history.

Senator FULBRIGHT has always been a bit ahead of his time and the Nation has profited from it. I wish him the best, but I hope his "retirement" is only a short hiatus from public service. We can ill afford to lose him.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I wish to join with my colleagues and with his numerous friends around the country in extending best personal wishes to the junior Senator from Arkansas, BILL FULBRIGHT, who is marking the end of one of the most distinguished Senate careers in this century.

December 19, 1974

Since long before the junior Senator from Kansas came to this body, Senator FULBRIGHT has been recognized as a powerful voice in the foreign policy deliberations of this country. When he came to the Senate, the United States was immersed in global war.

Sadly, since, we have become involved in two other wars, more limited in their scope but no less horrible in their tolls of human suffering and destruction.

It is the aim and purpose of this country to develop policies which can prevent in the future the sad experience of the past, the experience of war, conflict and tension.

Should we prove successful in this effort and should the happy day come when peace becomes a reality and was a memory, the role of the Senator from Arkansas, as counselor to Presidents, leader in the Senate, and as often, as "gadfly" and thoughtful critic in the development of policy, will be written large in that history.

He has been a man who has attracted controversy. Outspokenness often does. He has been a man who has attracted both criticism and praise. Strongly held views almost always do. He has been a man who has earned respect. Intelligence always deserves it.

And I will carry personal memories and fond recollections of the lively debates we have entered into, on this floor and elsewhere. They have been lively, at least, and often more than lively. We have on occasion disagreed, but never differed with respect to ultimates. His aim, like mine, has always been the protection of freedom, the fostering of peace, and service to the best interests of the United States of America.

His presence, as advocate, as "gadfly", as eloquent adversary in debate, will be missed though I am confident that his voice will continue to speak out when he feels it necessary to do so. As he has served his State and his Nation in this body for the last 30 years as Senator from Arkansas, I trust he will continue to serve for many years into the future. I wish him the best of health and happiness in all that the future may bring his way.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, Senators like to think that the title "U.S. Senator" enhances a man's name—and perhaps it is true. But in the case of Senator WILLIAM FULBRIGHT, it is the other way around: His name adds luster and distinction to the title, U.S. Senator.

It has been this way for 30 years and more. Senator FULBRIGHT is one of those rare Americans who has always moved from one success to another; from distinction in youth to eminence in maturity. Having been Rhodes Scholar, attorney, university president, Congressman, Senator, advocate, gadfly and prophet, he now joins the ranks of elder statesmen. But though he is leaving the U.S. Senate, none of us will forget his achievements: It was Senator FULBRIGHT who, as a freshman Congressman in 1943 secured passage of the resolution endorsing the United Nations. And it is Senator FULBRIGHT whose name is enshrined in one of our country's most hopeful gestures of international cooperation, the Fulbright scholarships.

Because citizens of his gifts are so rare, in this body and in our country, they are all the more valuable. It is a mark of Senator FULBRIGHT's distinction that almost every old, easy, fulsome word of tribute or farewell seems somehow insufficient when applied to him. So perhaps we should say very little—and hope that our affection and respect will speak for themselves.

In the Senate, as with any other institution, members come, stay for a time, and then move on. But this is not a body that easily forgets its greatest and most durable Members. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT will be remembered here.

Stephen Spender wrote that those who are truly great "leave the vivid air signed with their honor."

WILLIAM FULBRIGHT has been a truly great Senator.

Certainly he has made the air of the U.S. Senate, and of our country, more vivid.

Now, surely, he leaves this place signed with his honor.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, in the history of the U.S. Senate only a handful of men have earned worldwide respect and acclaim for their grasp of and influence upon American foreign policy. The distinguished junior Senator from Arkansas, J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT, is such a rare man.

As chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, Senator FULBRIGHT has been counsel and confidant of Presidents and monarchs on the affairs of state. He has at times stood alone as a voice of reason and restraint amongst precipitancy. And above all he has been a man of peace, an articulate advocate of the sanctity of man.

Although he will depart these Halls at the end of the 93d Congress, Senator FULBRIGHT I am certain will continue to have great influence over Congress and the Nation. He is an outstanding Senator who has served his country well, and I know he will continue to utilize his considerable talents for the betterment of mankind.

Mr. President, I am pleased to join with those who pay tribute of Senator FULBRIGHT today.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, with some Members of this body, there exists a temptation to forego tributes marking the end of Senate service because of a feeling that the person's record would stand for itself. This is the case of our respected and esteemed colleague, Senator J. W. FULBRIGHT. While we are too close to the time today, I would guess that future scholars studying American foreign policy of the years of the 1960's and 1970's will mark them as the "Fulbright Years." Seldom has one man ever left such a legacy for the American people as is the case with Senator FULBRIGHT.

In the warm glow of hindsight, many Americans now praise those opponents of the Vietnam war who raised their voices against this folly. I say that this occurs now in hindsight. This was not always the case. I say that as the only Governor at the Governors' Conferences in 1965 and 1966 to vote against resolutions of support for the Vietnam policies of President Johnson.

I can speak from experience, therefore, when I pay tribute to the role played by Senator FULBRIGHT in helping create American public opinion opposing continued American involvement in Vietnam. He and I could share many stories about the public and private vilification we were subjected to during this time, when our patriotism was brought into question, and when the mention of our names in some quarters of this town brought sneers at best.

In his capacity as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator FULBRIGHT helped educate people in this country about the folly of throwing good money after bad in Vietnam, and more tragically, throwing more American lives in pursuit of a no-win policy. The country owes Senator FULBRIGHT our warmest thanks for this education which he helped provide people about Vietnam.

It would be remiss not to mention another concern of Senator FULBRIGHT where he has raised his voice to question American policies. I refer to the Middle East, where he has voiced the need for a more balanced American policy. From what I can see, Senator FULBRIGHT now is receiving the same harsh judgment about the Middle East from some people that he received about Vietnam.

Just as a public airing of policies in Vietnam has educated a generation of Americans to an understanding of foreign policy, so should American Middle East policy not be immune from reexamination. No area of our foreign policy should be free from discussion, and yet some people unfortunately have dismissed Senator FULBRIGHT's comments or warnings in toto. I hope all aspects of our foreign policy will receive a thorough review.

In conclusion, I know I speak for all my colleagues when I say we will miss the wise counsel of Senator FULBRIGHT here in the Senate in the years ahead.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, the Senate and the Nation will be losing a major figure of the history of our generation when Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT retires at the end of this year.

BILL FULBRIGHT has been a towering figure whose influence has been felt not only on the American scene of today, but will be told as the course of history unfolds. For Senator FULBRIGHT is a man of rare vision, a man whose scope of knowledge and interests, whose perception and understanding reached far beyond the here and now.

A Rhodes Scholar at Oxford, a former teacher and practicing attorney, BILL FULBRIGHT has spent most of his career in public service. As a Member of the Senate since 1944, he rose to prominence in the late 1950's as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He brought this committee, and through it the Senate, back into a foremost place in the consideration and implementation of our Nation's foreign policy. In performing this role, BILL FULBRIGHT held fast to his vision of our Nation's role in the world, a vision which proved to become ever more prescient in the 1960's.

The Senate and the Nation will always owe BILL FULBRIGHT a great debt for his central role in mobilizing public understanding and eventually opposition to the Vietnam war. The hearings he chaired, over live television, were a milestone in turning around a policy which was conceived without congressional or public consultation.

BILL FULBRIGHT has played a major role in restoring to the Congress its rightful place in the making of foreign policy, a place which had been eroding constantly since World War II. He contributed heavily to all of our Nation's international endeavors over the past decade, both through the clarity and logic of his opinions, and the wisdom of his legislative hand. More than many Senators, BILL FULBRIGHT had and deserved a reputation as a scholar, a thoughtful student of his area of endeavor. This added immeasurably to his effectiveness and his breadth of knowledge.

As this man achieved worldwide fame and recognition, as he achieved status as both a scholar and a man of power and influence, he would not, he could not, compromise in the fundamental quality of his character. He remained through it all the very human citizen of Arkansas, a man with unshakable principles and beliefs, a man never too big to answer the greeting of a farmer or the voice of a merchant, a man who considered nothing too small or unimportant for his attention.

Senator FULBRIGHT steadfastly refused to succumb to the feelings of self-satisfaction. Here was a man who throughout the course of his long career and series of successes refused to sit back, to reflect and enjoy what he had already accomplished. He is a man who is constantly looking forward, scanning the horizon for future problems to be tackled, future questions to be grappled with and resolved.

We shall all miss BILL FULBRIGHT, and the Nation can take pride in his tremendous contributions to the public policy of the last 30 years.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, we must not let the closing gavel ring down on the 93d Congress without pausing to pay just tribute to one of our senior colleagues who will not be back in the 94th Congress. I speak of Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations and a man whose reputation not only extends from this Chamber throughout our country, but truly reaches around the globe.

After a single term in the House of Representatives, BILL FULBRIGHT came to the Senate in 1945 and he has served since then with distinction. Time and again he has demonstrated his own personal dedication to the public good in a fashion which can only evoke the great respect of those of us who have been privileged to serve with him.

Understandably, Senator FULBRIGHT's greatest achievements are in the area of foreign affairs to which he has devoted his energies and talents with special emphasis. As chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee he has brought renewed attention to the proper role of the Senate in the development and execution of foreign policy. Time after time, Secretaries of State have turned to BILL FULBRIGHT for counsel on how best to approach foreign policy questions during the three tumultuous decades since the end of World War II.

Of course, this Nation has already reaped substantial benefits from the scholarship program conceived and brought to fruition by BILL FULBRIGHT. And I am confident that Fulbright scholars for generations to come will make substantial contributions to our country and to international understanding.

Hopefully, this Nation will benefit in the years ahead from Senator FULBRIGHT's sage understanding of international relations. I am confident that our leaders, as well as academics and foreign leaders, will continue to turn to BILL FULBRIGHT—in his retirement—for advice and guidance. And so it should be, for few men are better equipped to provide that advice and guidance than BILL FULBRIGHT.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, as we approach the end of the 93d Congress, it is appropriate that we take time to honor a man who has left a significant mark on American history. Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT has chaired the Senate Foreign Relations Committee since 1959 and under his leadership, the committee was the leading forum for the opposition to the Vietnam war. The distinguished Senator from Arkansas was instrumental in reducing American commitments—and foreign aid—abroad. He has always maintained that our country has the opportunity to set an example of democracy to other nations by the manner in which we conduct ourselves in our own society. We in the Senate will miss Senator FULBRIGHT when he leaves at the end of this session, but he will always be remembered for his influence upon the conduct of American foreign policy. For his 32 years of dedication to serving the people of Arkansas and the Nation, I join my colleagues in honoring Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT.

TRIBUTE TO THE DISTINGUISHED SENATOR FROM ARKANSAS ON HIS RETIREMENT FROM THE U.S. SENATE

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, among the many remarkable and wise provisions written into the Constitution by the Founding Fathers is that which establishes the division into thirds of the terms of Members of the U.S. Senate. Through this unique and sound provision the Senate remains a continuing body. This system has worked exceedingly well, helping make the Senate one of the great legislative bodies of all times.

As a Member leaves this body he leaves behind a legacy of his contributions to his country, to his fellow Americans, and, in many cases, to mankind throughout the world.

Few men or women have come to serve their country in Congress better equipped than the junior Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), holding degrees from the University of Arkansas and George Washington University in Washington, and having been a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford University in England. Having tested his knowledge of law through practical application as a member of the antitrust division of the Department of Justice, Senator FULBRIGHT moved into the academic life, teaching law at George Washington University and then at the University of Arkansas where he was later to become president. His academic activities were balanced by parallel activities in banking, lumbering, farming, and newspapering.

And so he was well-equipped to serve his country when he was elected to the House of Representatives in 1942. After one term in that body, he made a successful race for the U.S. Senate, and on January 3, 1945, took the oath of an office that he was to hold through five terms. Now, 30 years after entering the Senate, Senator FULBRIGHT is leaving the U.S. Congress, having risen to the chairmanship of the prestigious and most important Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. Senator FULBRIGHT leaves a legacy of legislative expertise in a field which has for so much of our history been considered the realm of the executive branch. He has brought to the Senate a sense of responsibility for the Nation's foreign relations which had lain dormant for too long. As a voice crying in the wilderness, he pointed out the folly of the Vietnam war, long before that view became the dominant view of the people of America.

As a champion of the cause of world peace and international cooperation, he worked diligently for legislation creating scholarships enabling college graduate students to study in foreign institutions of learning. Countless numbers of American men and women have studied abroad and our country and the world have benefited from their experiences and their knowledge gained as FULBRIGHT scholars.

Senator FULBRIGHT is a man of erudition, of honor, courage, ability, and dedication, and he will be missed in the Senate and in the conduct of world affairs.

Mr. President, many honors have come his way, but I question that any speak so forcefully for Senator FULBRIGHT as do these Fulbright scholarships.

After devoting almost half a lifetime to its workings, I doubt seriously if he will be content to leave the Senate to sit back and rest on his laurels. We will be hearing from him in the future, I am sure. Already he has declined an appointment to an office so distinguished that it is beyond the wildest dreams of all but a few. For Senator FULBRIGHT and his lovely wife, Betty, Maryon and I wish the very best of everything, for that is what they deserve.

Mr. McGEE. Mr. President, as the 93d Congress draws to a close, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to one of our colleagues who retires with the adjournment of this Congress.

It is with a sincere touch of sadness that I reflect upon the fact that the distinguished junior Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT) will not be with us when we convene the 94th Congress in January. My association with BILL FULBRIGHT has been primarily in the area of foreign policy and the role of the Senate in this process of decisionmaking and formulation. While I have had several areas of disagreement with the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations over the years, I feel, nevertheless, that this body will suffer a significant loss with his retirement.

BILL FULBRIGHT's unique intellect and searching questioning of U.S. foreign policy will be sorely missed in the committee and in the Senate. Over the course of the years, he opened an intensive dialog within the committee and the Senate on foreign policy questions—a significant contribution which forced many of us continually to assess our own perceptions and beliefs. As a result, I have a deep respect for BILL FULBRIGHT and the contributions he made to the work of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the entire foreign policy decision-making process.

Although, as I said before, I have disagreed with the distinguished chairman on numerous occasions, I believe somewhat of a vacuum may develop with his absence. There are searching questions which continue to haunt us as we attempt to find some means of bringing rationality to a world embroiled in chaos and disarray. In this regard, it will be difficult to find another individual who can perform the role BILL FULBRIGHT has performed so effectively over the years.

But most of all, at a time when the very wisdom of a continued U.S. commitment to multilateral institutions such as the United Nations is being questioned in this country, we lose one of that organization's staunchest supporters.

If there was one thing BILL FULBRIGHT and I saw eye to eye on, it was the need for a more effective U.S. participation in the United Nations and the need for a greater reliance upon the institution. Thus, it is even more critical that his voice play a prominent role in overcoming this erosion in support for the United Nations.

I believe it is particularly appropriate to reflect on and study a speech BILL FULBRIGHT made at the Pacem in Terris Conference held in Washington, D.C. in October 1974. He has many meaningful observations by which all of us can derive significant benefit.

In concluding my remarks, I want to wish BILL FULBRIGHT the best and I urge him to continue involving himself in these questions he has so diligently pursued over the years. BILL FULBRIGHT, you will always command my deepest respect.

I ask unanimous consent that the speech be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR J. W. FULBRIGHT
PREFACE: THE MIDDLE EAST

One of my principal themes tonight is the need of a world rule of law, in the words of the United Nations Charter, "to have succeeding generations from the scourge of war."

Regardless of the outcome of the current fighting in Sinai and the Golan Heights,

Arabs and Israelis alike are catching a glimpse of their destiny in a world without law. It is a destiny of recurrent war, unending tensions, fear and hate, and a crushing burden of arms. For the fourth time in a generation these otherwise gifted and talented peoples have failed of the promise of their own ancient civilizations and plunged into futile hostilities. The failure, however, like the danger, is not theirs alone but that of the entire civilized world, which solemnly committed itself at San Francisco in 1945 "to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind."

It is possible, though hardly likely, that the Arabs and Israelis are content to continue the struggle each in vain hope of some ultimate victory. I cannot believe that really is their wish because of the enormous costs to themselves and the bleakness of the future which continuing struggle will bring. The Arab states, including those which are now conservative, are likely to be radicalized as their grievances fester. Israel, already a garrison state, faces the prospect of mounting terrorism and recurrent war, of a national existence with no semblance of security. However confident they may be of their own military prowess, the Israelis can hardly relish this prospect.

But even if the combatants can accept the prospect of unending struggle, the outside world cannot. As long as there is danger of other nations being drawn in—and that danger is constant—the world cannot stand aside. Like the Balkans in 1914, the Middle East has become the potential flash point of world conflict. In addition, there is the energy problem. Call it what you like—blackmail or ordinary business—the Arab Middle East possesses at least 30 billion of the 500 billion barrels of proven world oil reserves. With no spare productive capacity of its own, the United States—like other industrial nations—is increasingly dependent on Middle Eastern oil, and consequently in need of good relations with the producing countries. These countries, it is well to remember, have no direct quarrel with the United States and have never done anything to harm the United States. Our dependence on their oil is a matter of national interest, no more so perhaps than our emotional bond to Israel, but surely no less so either. These are matters which affect all nations, and because they go beyond the Arab-Israeli conflict itself, the outside world has the right and responsibility to participate in the making of a settlement.

The first requirement is an immediate cease-fire—not a delayed cease-fire which might allow one side or the other to impose "new facts," but an immediate cease-fire ordered by the United Nations Security Council in accordance with its authority, under Chapter VII of the Charter, to "decide what measures shall be taken" to restore peace. Beyond a cease-fire the Security Council ought now, without delay and with full support from the United States, to implement its resolution of November 22, 1967, by persuasion if possible, by enforcement if necessary in accordance with the terms of the United Nations Charter. That resolution officially supported by the United States through the Rogers plan of 1969, calls for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the occupied territories, but also provides for Israel's survival and security by requiring the "termination of all claims or states of belligerency and respect for and acknowledgment of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every state in the area."

Given a will to settle, reasonable variations on the Security Council resolution of November 1967 might be worked out to ensure Israel's security. The Rogers Plan allows of "insubstantial alterations" of territory for the sake of mutual security, and these could include the retention by Israel of some part of the Golan Heights from which the Syrians before 1967 fired down upon civilian communities. In addition, arrangements might be made for the phased restoration of Sinai by Egypt along with a general acknowledgement of Egypt's sovereignty over the region. Israel's right of free access through the Gulf of Aqaba might be secured by the stationing at Sharm el Sheikh of an international force, removable only by the consent of all parties, or alternatively by an Israeli leasehold comparable to the special French presence in the German Saar after the First World War.

Jerusalem, because of its profound importance to three great religions, can and should be made an international city and given special status with free access to all. Its sacredness to Christians and Jews is well-known, but its equal importance to Muslims has not been fully appreciated in the West. It may be recalled that in 1967, by a vote of 99 to 0 in which the United States abstained, the United Nations General Assembly condemned Israel's unilateral annexation of the old city. Its status now cannot be accepted as "non-negotiable."

All these arrangements could be guaranteed by a binding agreement, duly ratified, between Israel, the Arab states and the United Nations. In addition—as I have suggested on several previous occasions—a United Nations guarantee could be supplemented by an identical bilateral treaty between Israel and the United States—not an executive agreement but a treaty consented to by the Senate—under which the United States would guarantee the territory and independence of Israel within its adjusted borders. This supplementary, bilateral arrangement with Israel would obligate the United States to use force if necessary, in accordance with its constitutional processes, to assist Israel against any violation of its borders, which it could not repel itself, but the agreement would also obligate Israel, firmly and unequivocally, never to violate those borders herself.

The conflict in the Middle East is testimony to the bankruptcy of traditional power politics. Had the nations met their responsibilities under the United Nations Charter in 1948 or 1956 or 1967, any or all of these three wars could have been avoided. Now, once again, tragedy brings opportunity. As will be shown in the remarks which follow, I am less than confident of the rational and humane conduct of human affairs. But neither have I given up on that possibility. I perceive in the Middle East a unique opportunity to make the United Nations work as it was intended to work, and by doing so, not only to resolve the conflict between Arabs and Israelis, but also to create a most valuable precedent for the future.

ASPECTS OF THE NATIONAL INTEREST

Perhaps in the abstract sense there is an objective category which can be called the "national interest". Human affairs, however, are not conducted in the abstract, and as one moves from the theoretical to the operational, objectivity diminishes and sentiment rises; ideas give way to ideology, principle to personality, reason to rationalization. As formulated by men of power, the national interest is a subjective and even capricious potpourri, with ingredients of strategic advantage, economic aspiration, national pride, group emotion, and the personal vanity of the leaders themselves. This is not to suggest that the concept of "national interest" is false but that it is elusive and far from self-evident, and when statesmen invoke it, they raise more questions than they answer.

There have been in recent American usage at least three separate conceptions of national interest; the ideological, exemplified by the anti-Communist crusade of the cold war; the geopolitical, which treats international relations as an endless struggle for power as an end in itself; and the legal-institutional, an approach which holds that international affairs, like domestic affairs, must be brought under the regulation of law, an approach which gave rise under American leadership to the League of Nations Covenant and the United Nations Charter. Depending upon which approach you embrace, or deplore, your conception of the national interest will differ from, or conflict with, that of others. My own preference—bias if you like—is toward the legal-institutional. The preference of the Nixon Administration, as I perceive it, has been—at least in the past—strongly geopolitical. Though divergent in concept, these approaches often overlap in practice; I find myself, for instance, in agreement with the Administration on the wisdom of détente with the Soviet Union, but in disagreement on certain underlying concepts of what the national interest is and what it is not.

It is not my intention here to offer a definitive catalogue of the national interests of the United States but rather to comment on certain aspects of the national interest which I believe to be illustrative of its basic character.

I shall comment briefly later on the emergence of China as an influential and innovative nation, in the process of creating an extraordinary experiment in social cooperation within China which may well prove exemplary for much of the third world, and also to express hope that China will play a leading and responsible role in strengthening the United Nations. Nor do I comment here on the seemingly intractable problems of poverty and population growth in the Third World. In all of these the United States has major national interests, but I confine myself here to a discussion of basic concepts of national interest, of the fragile and threatened détente with the Soviet Union, of the need to restore economic health at home, and the continuing significance of the all-but-forgotten promise of the United Nations. Though by no means definitive, these areas seem to me to be both topical and illustrative of the kinds of national policy which are consistent with our national tradition, congenial to our national character, and best conceived, overall, to advance the security and welfare of the American people.

I. CONCEPTS OF POLICY

It has ceased to be useful, if ever it was, to deal with foreign policy as a category distinct from domestic policy. Neither can be rationally conceived or successfully executed except as aspects of national policy. I am thinking not of the policy maker's natural preference for strong domestic support of his foreign policy, but of the more fundamental need of a foreign policy which advances the well-being of our people, does not drain resources unduly, and is compatible with the national character. In the course of history nations have been defeated by foreign enemies at least as often because of internal weaknesses of their societies as because of insufficient armaments. But I would go even beyond the fact of demonstrable interaction between foreign and domestic problems to suggest that a well-conceived foreign policy is not only related to, but necessarily subordinate to, domestic needs and aspirations. In a report of a few years ago the Senate Foreign Relations Committee noted that "Foreign policy is not an end in itself. We do not have a foreign policy because it is interesting or fun, or because it satisfies some basic human need; we conduct foreign policy for a purpose external to itself, the purpose of securing democratic values in our own country." To put the matter simply: our national interest has to do with the kind of society we live in, and only incidentally with the kinds of society other people live in.

It is mistaken to conceive of foreign policy as an adventure even an idealistic adventure. Echoing General de Gaulle's mystical conception of France's role, Secretary Kissinger has suggested twice that "America was not true to itself unless it has a meaning beyond itself"—a "spiritual" meaning, he went on to explain. Dr. Kissinger also endorsed Theodore Roosevelt's entreaty that we "dare mighty things" and "win glorious triumphs". That invocation, the Secretary said, "epitomizes the essence and strength of this nation". I do not know exactly what "mighty things" he meant, but I must say that I find the notion disturbing. It is my impression that Theodore Roosevelt was an impetuous and enthusiastic chauvinist, with imperialistic tendencies.

There may have been a kind of romantic idealism in his outlook, but it is the wrong kind of idealism, dangerous and obsolete in this nuclear age.

Foreign policy is not an adventure, and our statesmen are not cavaliers but public servants. It is not daring but competence and prudence that are required of them. When they forget that, and take flight with their own soaring rhetoric, they get into trouble, and drag the rest of us with them. I do not agree with Dr. Kissinger that our American experience necessarily has "universal meaning," or that America requires a meaning beyond itself. There is meaning enough in being ourselves, a meaning by no means yet fulfilled, and in letting others find their own meanings.

The primacy of domestic policy has nothing to do with "isolationism"—a concept which has become functionally irrelevant as well as rhetorically polemical. The charge of "neo-isolationism" is an invention of people who confuse internationalism with an intrusive American interventionism, with a quasi-imperialism. Those of us who are called "neo-isolationists" are, I believe, the opposite: internationalists in the classical sense of that term, in the sense in which it was brought into American usage by Woodrow Wilson and Franklin Roosevelt. We believe in international cooperation through international institutions. We would like to try to keep the peace through the United Nations, and we would like to try to assist the poor countries through such institutions as the World Bank. We do not think the United Nations is a failure; we think it has never been tried.

The merit of the administration's foreign policy is that it is rooted in a coherent view of the world; the principal failing of this policy is the particular worldview in which it is rooted. The power politics approach is an improvement on the ideological crusade of the cold war, and the Administration deserves credit for the opening to China and Russia which have alleviated the cold war. But the balance-of-power approach, on which our new relationships with China and Russia are based, is justly criticized as cold and amoral, oriented to process rather than purpose, as if the "game" of nations were nothing but a game, conducted for the sake of the game, not for winning something but just for the sake of winning, for being "Number One." But the ultimate failing of supposedly hard-headed, realistic power politics is that, always in the long-run and often in the short-run as well, the approach turns out to be neither hard-headed nor realistic as a means of keeping the peace. However successful the balance-of-power has been in keeping the peace over certain periods of time, it has always broken down in the end, culminating as in 1914, in general war.

There are many reasons for the inherent instability of power politics. One is the failure to take account of the internal life of nations. In the eighteenth century the kings of Europe were able to alter and adjust the balance-of-power through shifting alliances; even in 1939 the Hitler-Stalin pact shattered the last remaining fragment of European stability. For the most part, however, modern nations gain and lose strength, and with it the ability to upset the international equilibrium, as the result of internal developments. Germany upset the European balance in the late nineteenth century primarily because her economy and industry grew much faster than those of her neighbors, enabling Germany to become militarily preponderant. More recently, France has reclaimed a leading role in Europe despite the loss of empire, more accurately, perhaps because of it; the stability of the Fifth Republic and the rapid growth of the French economy since the Algerian war have given France a new weight in international affairs. Conversely, and more pertinently, we have seen the influence and reputation of the United States in world affairs diminished by political scandal and economic dislocations the latter largely the result of extravagant military spending. Confrontations, summits, alliances and spheres-of-influence are surely factors in a nation's position in the world, but they are no longer the major factors; the major factors are internal.

A skillful diplomacy can of course take account of domestic developments, but here we are thrown back upon the cleverness of statesmen—a commodity hardly to be relied upon. And that indeed is the root weakness of the game of nations: it is a despotism without laws, as stable or shaky, just or unjust, as the men momentarily at the top of the heap. In international relations as within our own country order and stability requires institutions; it requires a system that ordinary men can run and incompetent men cannot ruin. Guarantee if you can that the game will be played by a Bismarck or Taleyrand, by a Kissinger or Le Duc Tho, and perhaps I will withdraw my objections. But as long as luminaries give way to lesser lights—and they always do—the objection stands. As Henry Kissinger wrote of Prince Bismarck, "In the hands of others lacking his subtle touch, his methods led to the collapse of the nineteenth century state system. The nemesis of power is that, except in the hands of a master, reliance on it is more likely to produce a contest of arms than of self-restraints."

That brings me to the nub of both my concurrence with, and dissent from, the Nixon-Kissinger foreign policy and the Johnson-Rusk policy. I concur, strongly, in the efforts toward a "structure of peace," but I am concerned with flimsiness of the structure. It is makeshift and fragile, too dependent on agility and cleverness, too delicate to work for dull leaders or withstand incompetent ones. I remain, therefore, a Wilsonian, a seeker still of a world system of laws rather than of men, a believer still in the one great new idea of this century in the field of international relations, the idea of an international organization with permanent processes for the peaceful settlement of international disputes.

II. THE STRUCTURE OF DÉTENTE

Reluctant though we may be to relate foreign policy to our own domestic affairs, we seem all too willing at times to apply our foreign policy to other people's domestic affairs. The Jackson amendment to the trade bill pending in Congress would deny most-favored-nation trade treatment to the Soviet Union—which is to say discriminate against its trade with us—unless the Soviet Union eliminates restrictions on emigration by its citizens. On September 17 the Senate, on the initiative of Senator Mondale, adopted a resolution, without referral to a committee and with minimum discussion, asking the President to press the Soviet Government to stop oppressing dissidents and permit its citizens freedom of expression and emigration. Under the Mondale resolution the President is called upon to negotiate nothing less than a revamping of the Soviet system, and the dismantling of a police state apparatus going back half a century under the Communists and a thousand years before that under the tsars. It is a worthy sentiment but a tall order.

Nonintervention in the internal affairs of other countries is one of the cardinal rules of international law and relations, and it is codified in the United Nations Charter. The essential purpose of the rule of nonintervention is to prevent larger countries from bullying smaller ones, and to prevent quarrels arising from gratuitous meddling. There are times when nonintervention seems harsh and immoral, as when an oppressive government is left free to mistreat its own people. At times an exception may be warranted, as when a society disintegrates into barbarism, or when an internal issue becomes a threat to international peace, as that is defined in the United Nations Charter. Much more often than not, however, nonintervention is more likely to advance justice than to detract from it. As we Americans discovered in Vietnam, outsiders are seldom wise enough, just enough, or disinterested enough to advance the morality or welfare of a society not their own. The Russian people have lived under dictatorship throughout their history; it is not for us, at this late date, to try to change that by external pressure especially at a time when there is a better chance than ever to build a cooperative relationship between the Soviet Union and the United States.

Why indeed should we cooperate with the Soviet Union, a country whose social system is inimical to our own? The answer is simplicity itself: we have to get along with the Russians because, in matters of world peace, we cannot get along without them. The threat of nuclear destruction has become a commonplace, so much so that we tend to dismiss it or forget it. But the fact remains that the leaders of the two nations have the means at their disposal at any time to destroy each other's cities and much or most of each other's populations, and there is nothing—nothing—either side could do to prevent it. American pioneer families helped each other to build cabins and clear the land because the job was too big to do alone—cooperation was a matter of survival. Similarly, the Bedouin Arabs have an ancient etiquette of hospitality—a traveler across the desert cannot be refused food and water, because the host knows that he too may someday journey across the desert. Here too it is a matter of survival—not of affection or friendship or religion or ideology. That is the sum and substance of it: in matters of war and peace Russians and Americans are wanderers in the same desert, and in that desert it is not ideology that counts but food and water—the “food and water” of trade arms control, political cooperation and cultural exchange.

While I sympathize with the plight of the dissidents and minorities in the Soviet Union, I cannot concur in the approach of Mr. Sakharov, the Soviet physicist, who says that there can be no détente without democracy, or the novelist Solzhenitsyn, who says that “mankind's sole salvation lies in everyone making everything his business.” This asks too much of human nature, assuming that involvement will always be benign rather than aggressive, moral rather than predatory. Were everyone to make everything his business, the result would be war not peace, imperialism not democracy. Men have capricious notions of what is and is not their business; that is why it is usually better for them to mind their own. I do believe that the world can be made better, and that man is capable of aiding its betterment, but I am equally a believer in selectivity of means. Important as it is to know what we hope to achieve, it is equally important to know what we are incapable of achieving; which is to say that humane aspiration must be tempered by realism.

Choosing from among alternatives is, of course, inevitable in politics, even on the part of those who would base détente upon sweeping standards of morality and justice. Why indeed are they so distressed by the denial of civil rights in the Soviet Union, when we have close and amicable relations with—and give material assistance to—a large number of non-Communist dictatorships who mistreat their citizens? Why do we suddenly require measures of democracy in the Soviet Union as the price of our trade? In Chile a freely elected but Marxist government has been overthrown by a book-burning military dictatorship. Do you suppose we will require a return to democracy before resuming trade and investment with the military junta there? If we wish to apply pressure for democracy and human rights, would it not make sense to start with Chile, Brazil or Greece, all of whom are vulnerable and should be responsive to American pressures, and none of whom are as essential partners for the maintenance of world peace as is the Soviet Union? Why start with the Soviet Union, a superpower which can, if it must, live without our trade and investment, and the one country whose cooperation is absolutely essential for building a structure of peace, which I know we all desire?

The adoption of the Jackson amendment requiring continued discrimination against the Soviet trade may not in itself destroy the détente between the Soviet Union and the United States, but it may well derail it. We may recall that in 1960 the U-2 affair shattered the Eisenhower-Khrushchev “spirit of Camp David,” and that the Cuban missile crisis precipitated a renewal of the arms race. Khrushchev went on to conclude the partial nuclear test ban treaty with President Kennedy, but his position at home had been irreparably weakened by his failures in attempting to get along with the Americans, and he was displaced in 1964.

General Secretary Brezhnev has now reiterated Khrushchev's request for business-like dealings with the United States. In Moscow last year significant agreements were reached in the field of arms control—especially the ABM treaty—and for cooperation in such fields as space, science and health. Now the Russians are interested primarily in trade and investment, and without being glib or naive, surely we owe it to ourselves to give openminded consideration to Mr. Brezhnev's assurance to members of Congress: “We came here to consolidate good things, not to quarrel.” If Mr. Brezhnev, like Khrushchev, falls in his détente policy because of American pressures on emigration and the treatment of Soviet intellectuals, it is possible that Brezhnev, like Khrushchev, will be discredited at home and displaced by hard-nosed successors who will have little interest in trade, arms control or détente with the United States, or in freedom of thought or emigration for Soviet citizens.

The Soviet Government, it is true, has already yielded a great deal under our pressure: emigration to Israel, which was kept to only 1,000 three years ago, is now being permitted at a rate of over 30,000 a year. But we should not conclude that the Russians will continue indefinitely to yield to American pressure. The adoption of the Jackson amendment might induce the Russians to move remaining restraints, or it might anger them into clamping the controls back on. If ever there is to be an authentic liberalization in the Soviet Union, it will come about as the result of internal pressures from increasingly assertive professional, managerial and intellectual classes within the Soviet Union.

Like the tsars before them, the Soviet leaders greatly fear Western political ideas, which they consider a threat to their rule. It is understandable, though not admirable, that they should tighten internal controls at the same time that they are seeking closer political and economic ties with the West. They fear our subversion, just as we once feared theirs; specifically they fear that we will try to bring our political ideas into their country along with the trade and investment which they desire. The Jackson amendment reinforces these fears and, in so doing, threatens the political and economic cooperation which both sides need and desire.

I would judge that the most we can do to advance the cause of liberties within the Soviet Union is to help create an international atmosphere of security and cordiality, an atmosphere calculated to diminish rather than aggravate neurotic fears of Western ideas on the part of the Soviet leaders. In practice this would mean a continuation of measures of détente already begun, in trade, investment, cultural exchange, and above all arm control.

While recognizing the futility of war, the superpowers refuse to recognize the resulting futility of the arms race. Instead of pursuing the logic of the ABM treaty and proceeding energetically with the SALT talks, they prepare for future agreements by feverishly accumulating “bargaining chips,” which is to say, by arming to the teeth. To cite one recent example: on September 27 the Senate by a narrow margin voted $1.6 billion to allow the Administration to accelerate the development of the Trident ballistic missile submarine. Each single Trident will cost an estimated $1.3 billion, and that does not allow for the Pentagon's inevitable cost-overruns. The decision to accelerate the Trident program was made in the wake of last year's interim agreement so as to give the United States additional “bargaining chips” in the negotiations for a permanent treaty, and despite the fact that our Polaris and Poseidon submarines are virtually invulnerable to attack and likely to remain so for the foreseeable future. As Charles Yost has written, “When Congress votes funds for a submarine, it votes not for one but for two, an American and a Soviet.” Progress toward arms control—the most important single area of Soviet-American détente—is thus negated by the self-defeating theory of “bargaining chips.” If we are to have the “structure of peace” of which President Nixon and Secretary Kissinger speak, it is essential that we terminate this irrational, ruinously costly practice of accelerating the arms race while trying to restrict it.

Until and unless China joins the other great powers in their ill-considered arms race, her significance will consist primarily in the challenge of her society. Visitors to China—experts and amateurs alike—report on the orderliness, purposefulness, cleanliness, and cooperativeness of Chinese society. Perhaps, to some degree, the visitors have been misled by guided tours; perhaps their reports reflect something of the old condescending sentimentalism of Americans toward China. The evidence suggests however, that there is more to the modern Chinese experiment. The evidence suggests that this largest of human communities and oldest of civilizations has moved far to bring health, education, social cohesion and a sense of purpose into the lives of a long-divided, poverty stricken and demoralized population.

The world significance of the Chinese experiment is its potential impact on the third world. China alone of the great powers has a claim to membership in the third world. As an economically less developed nation itself, China has the potentiality of serving as a model for Asian, African, and Latin American nations to whom the experience of economically developed nations like the Soviet Union and the United States may seem out of reach and irrelevant. It seems possible, therefore, that neither of the missile-wielding superpowers will prevail in the competition for influence in the third world, but that the role of an exemplar will fall to China as one of their own. It is in this respect—not as a “power” but as a society—that China commands a position of primacy in our foreign policy and in our national interest, warranting our attention, our friendly interest and our best efforts toward understanding. Dr. Kissinger commented after his visit to China in early 1972, “These people have a sense of purpose. If there is communication, it will be a great challenge to our whole society.” That, I believe, was a perceptive observation.

III. THE DOMESTIC SIDE

If détente with the Soviet Union and with China represents the first foreign requirement in the national interest, the first requirement on the domestic side is the restoration of a healthy national economy. The two, as we have seen, are inseparable: extravagant military expenditures strain our economy, and the weakened economy in turn detracts from our foreign policy. The essential corrective is a more restrained American role in world affairs, a reduction in status, so to speak, from “Number One” to something like “first among equals.”

On August 15, 1971, the day President Nixon imposed emergency controls on the economy, the United States passed through a symbolic watershed in its foreign policy. Prior to that date we had felt ourselves able to shape our foreign policy solely in terms of what we needed and wished to accomplish in the world. Since that time we have been compelled—or should have been compelled—to recognize that our resources are limited and that we must base our policy decisions not only on what we wish to do but also on what we can afford.

Some cogent statistics illustrate the change. In 1950 the United States produced half of the world's total output of goods and services; by 1970 our share had dropped to 30 percent. In 1950 we produced almost half of the world's steel; today we produce about one-fifth. In 1950 the United States held half of the world's monetary reserves; today we hold less than one-tenth.

The significance of these developments, by no means yet fully appreciated, is that the United States can no longer afford, and no longer can fairly be expected, to sustain the military and political supervision of world affairs which it has exercised for three decades. The role of global colossus came to us by default after World War II when every other major industrial nation in the world was economically devastated. We thereupon undertook extraordinary global—and even extra-global—enterprises, including the Marshall Plan, the rearmament of ourselves and our allies, worldwide military and economic aid programs, two long and costly wars, the extravagantly and incredibly expensive arms race with the Soviet Union, and a superheated race to the moon.

Only recently, with our national economy beginning to crack under the strain, have we been constrained to recognize the necessity of bringing our military and political activities back into harmony with their economic base. For this purpose economic controls are only temporary expedients. They are no substitute for the fiscal and monetary reforms which are essential to curb inflation, stem the dollar outflow, and restore confidence at home and abroad in the American economy and its managers. However many “phases” of control and de-control are superimposed on our national economy, a stable equilibrium can be restored only through some combination of increased revenues and reduced expenditures.

The most promising field by far for reducing expenditures without risk to our national security is in the development of unessential new weapons systems. The Brookings Institution economist Edward R. Fried suggests that savings of $10 billion could be made without appreciably altering current military capabilities by major economies in the use of manpower and by slowing down the developments of such weapons systems as the Trident ballistic missile submarine and the B-1 supersonic bomber, the one designed to supplant the still-functional Polaris, the other to supplant the still quite adequate B-52 bomber. There are, in addition, numerous aid projects, troop deployments, and other foreign operations which, though individually modest in cost, are quite costly in the aggregate and of dubious relevance, in any case, to the national interest.

In practice if not in their declarations, Congress and the Nixon Administration reject the concept of interacting foreign and domestic policies. Congress pays eloquent tribute to the need of economy but votes just about everything the Administration requests for arms procurement.

The Nixon Administration, for its part, pursues détente with the Soviet Union, but at the same time pursues an arms policy which undermines détente and which strains our national economy. The military budget for fiscal year 1974 is still based on outdated cold war assumptions and on the equally outdated assumption of unlimited American resources to prosecute it. Concealed as it seems in isolated compartments, the overall Administration policy is one of pressing the cold war while also trying to end it, of straining the national economy while also trying to revive it.

Karl Marx predicted that the capitalist countries would ultimately collapse under the weight of their own internal contradictions. Our current ambivalence as between détente and cold war, extravagant weapons systems and the needs of the domestic economy, lend more than an iota of credibility to the Marxian prophecy. On the one side Senators and Congressmen sincerely advocate détente; on the other they vote for expensive and unnecessary weapons systems. On the one side the President and Congress take statesmen's advice on the possibilities of international accommodation; on the other side they accept the generals' and admirals' drastic estimates of a possible adversary's capacity and intentions. The effects of these contradictions are self-defeating abroad and debilitating at home.

Lord Salisbury, a British Prime Minister of the late nineteenth century, said to a colleague, “You listen too much to the soldiers . . . you should never trust the experts. If you believe the doctors, nothing is wholesome; if you believe the theologians, nothing is innocent; if you believe the soldiers, nothing is safe.” We are in need of an overview, one which will put risks and costs, projects and opportunities, in clarifying perspective.

IV. A CONCEPT OF ORDER

Shortly before he entered government, Dr. Kissinger wrote that “The greatest need of the contemporary international system is an agreed concept of order.” I surely do agree that a concept of order is essential to the world and essential to our own national interest. I agree too that the Nixon Administration's foreign policy has had a more well-defined central concept than that of any Administration since Woodrow Wilson's. But as noted before, I believe the Nixon concept to be adequate, reactionary in the historical sense, and profoundly pessimistic; recognized as it is to struggle for power as something permanent and inevitable, the administration's approach is essentially devoid of hope for progress or betterment in human affairs. Believing as I do that there is hope, however slight, for fundamental change and fundamental improvement in the way nations deal with one another, I retain my faith in the Wilsonian concept of a powerful world peace-keeping organization, not really because I am confident of its coming about or of its success, but because I think it is within the range of human possibility to make a world organization work, and that seems to me worth striving for.

It follows from this conception of the national interest that the United Nations ought to be at the very center of our foreign policy, and not at its far periphery. In this connection I was disappointed by the lack of conviction and detail in Secretary Kissinger's recent speech to the United Nations, and by his “unnecessarily modest proposals”—as the New York Times put it—for strengthening the world organization.

The United Nations—despised, neglected and misused—remains nonetheless the greatest potential instrument for dealing with the global problems of our time. When all is said and done—when all the ideologies have been exposted and found wanting, when all the theories of “realpolitik” have been tested and revealed as dangerous romanticisms—one ancient, still untested idea persists: the idea that politics can be put to the service of ordinary human needs; the idea that through world law we can free ourselves from the costly and dangerous burden of international conflict; the idea that through cooperation and man's genius we can alleviate poverty and put our technology to humane and rational purposes. It is the age-old dream of beating swords into plowshares, of changing the rules of the old, discredited game by supplanting the anarchy of nations with an effective international organization.

To begin to achieve these great aims, we must recognize that the principle of absolute sovereignty is obsolete. We must begin to think of the world as a community in which, for certain limited purposes at least, the good of the whole must take precedence over the advantages of the parts. Neither the large countries, including our own, nor the small countries have ever accepted that principle with respect to the United Nations. The large nations, including the United States, have used the United Nations as a minor instrument of their own foreign policies, to be used or—more commonly—ignored according to their convenience.

The United States is only just turning away from a long period of unilateralism, in the course of which we allowed ourselves to believe that we ourselves were the effective successors to an enfeebled United Nations, forced by fate and circumstances to bear the responsibilities of power. In so doing we not only went beyond our own legitimate interests and responsibilities; we discouraged others from accepting their fair share of international responsibility. Unilateralism fed upon itself; having gotten in the habit of acting on our own because others seemed unwilling to act, we then found them more unwilling than ever to accept collective responsibilities. For this reason, and for the even more important reason that long-neglected domestic needs now claim our attention, the United States can make a great contribution to international cooperation by making it clear that the Pax Americana—such as it has been—is now at an end, and that hereafter the United States will act promptly and loyally in concert with other nations in the United Nations but will not act alone.

Even without the immediate cooperation of others there is much the United States could do to breathe life into the United Nations. We could make it national policy to appoint men or women of eminence and power—with the prestige of the late Adlai Stevenson or the late Senator Robert Taft—as our representatives in the United Nations. We could make it national policy to refrain from using our veto in the Security Council. We could make it known to other great powers that the United Nations is our preferred forum for negotiations on arms control and other crucial issues. And we could take the lead in negotiating those long-neglected agreements called for by Article 43 of the Charter, under which members would "make available to the Security Council . . . armed forces, assistance and facilities" to deal with threats to and breaches of the peace.

We have survived in the nuclear age so far not through any "agreed concept of order" but through crisis diplomacy and that frail substitute for a "concept of order" known as the balance of power. At its best the old system was only fairly successful in preventing and limiting war, but in the age of nuclear weapons only one breakdown would result in catastrophe, quite possibly in the destruction of civilized human life in much of the world. Sooner or later the law of averages is going to run out on us.

There is very little in international affairs about which I feel certain but there is one thing of which I am quite certain: the necessity of fundamental change in the way nations conduct their relations with each other. There is nothing in the human environment, as Adlai Stevenson once reminded us, to prevent us from bringing about such fundamental change. The obstacles are within us, in the workings of the human mind. But just as it is the source of many of our troubles, the inventive mind of man is sometimes capable of breaking through barriers of prejudice and ancient attitude. In the field of international affairs, I believe, such a breakthrough was achieved with the formation, first of Covenant of the League of Nations, then of the United Nations Charter. The next breakthrough, urgently awaited, is to make the conception work.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, after more than three decades of service in the U.S. Congress—29 of those years in the Senate—Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT is leaving this Chamber. He has made a tremendous mark here and will be missed.

Senator FULBRIGHT is credited with yesterday praising our current Secretary of State as "the ablest and best equipped" Secretary of State he has known. Those same words of tribute apply to BILL FULBRIGHT himself—he has been one of the ablest and best equipped Americans to serve in the U.S. Senate. In 15 years as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, he has been a spirited contributor to the formulation of this great Nation's foreign policy. He has served as advisor, confidante and devil's advocate to Presidents, Secretaries of State, foreign leaders and fellow Congressmen.

Last month, Daniel Yergin wrote of Senator FULBRIGHT in the New York Times Magazine:

His long, rich and troubled career not only illuminates and tells us much about, but is intimately bound up with, the entire course that United States foreign policy has followed since World War II, with all the pains and trials that two generations of Americans have experienced as our nation came into hegemony on the world scene—and then began to see it slowly slip away.

Today I pay personal tribute to JAMES WILLIAM FULBRIGHT. I wish him well and hope he will continue to afford this legislative body the benefit of his good and valued counsel.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, when a speaker is introduced to an audience, the length of the introduction is supposed to bear an inverse relationship to the prominence of the featured guest. The more important the speaker, the shorter the introduction. So it should be with tributes.

No one can doubt the importance of BILL FULBRIGHT's career in the Congress. He came to national prominence while still a Member of the House of Representatives, as author of the legislation which has enabled many thousands of young people to secure some part of their advanced education in a foreign land. The "Fulbright scholarships" not only inaugurated a new era of exchange in education on a global scale, but it made the Senator's name famous in the early years of his remarkable career.

I have heard BILL FULBRIGHT say that he regards the scholarships as his foremost accomplishment. If that be so, it takes nothing from his great works in the Senate. For it was in the Senate that FULBRIGHT took his stand against our war in Vietnam; it was here that he earned his reputation as a dissenter, a role in which he displayed not only his keen intelligence, but admirable independence, as well. I shall always believe that BILL FULBRIGHT's best moment in the Senate came when he decided to unleash the Foreign Relations Committee from its captivity behind closed doors by conducting public hearings on that misbegotten war.

Afterwards, he devoted himself to the effort of reversing the waning role of the Senate in the formulation of American foreign policy. It was a task he could not complete, but it will be carried forward by the momentum of his leadership and example.

Upon his defeat last May in Arkansas, I issued a statement which summed up my feelings about the contribution BILL FULBRIGHT made during his summit years in the Senate. I said:

Bill Fulbright has been a stand-up Senator during a period when most have preferred to sit. As Chairman, he brought the Senate Foreign Relations Committee back to life, and he tried his best to achieve a renaissance in the Senate, itself. So he will leave an historic mark that will be remembered long after his time. This can be said of few men.

Inasmuch as Bethline and I have treasured our friendship with the Fulbrights—both that of BILL and Betty—we hope there may be many occasions in the future for the enjoyment of their company. And we wish them well.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, I wish to add my voice to those paying tribute to the Senator from Arkansas, Mr. FULBRIGHT, for 30 years of service in the Senate.

Senator FULBRIGHT has had a monumental impact on education, not only through the promotion of scholarship but through his own scholarly approach to solving the problems facing America and the world.

Senator FULBRIGHT throughout his Senate service has shown great courage by fighting for what he believed to be right even if public opinion seemed to be to the contrary.

Although I have often differed with the Senator as to the proper course for our Nation, I have always respected him. His goal has always been to promote world peace and cooperation.

Mrs. FANNIN and I wish the Senator and his wife, Betty, all the best for the future.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, as the Congress approaches sine die adjournment, it is fitting that we pause to pay tribute to the several distinguished Senators who will be leaving us at the close of the 93d Congress. Some of the most illustrious men of this Chamber will be going into retirement in just a few days.

One of the most brilliant careers of this or any other session belongs to our good friend and colleague, the distinguished Senator from the great State of Arkansas, the Honorable J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT.

When the history of the post-World War II years is written, the name of J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT will shine forth in prominence and brilliance. It will stand for the disinterested pursuit of truth and for adherence to principle in bad times as well as good.

Through the judicious use of the chair of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Senator FULBRIGHT not only helped lead the Senate—he instructed the Nation as well. Leadership depends upon informed public opinion, and no one is more tireless and dedicated to the goal of an informed body politic than the eminent gentleman from Arkansas. Presidents and Secretaries of State all included, I can think of no one individual who has done so much in enlightening the people to the realities of the world as Senator FULBRIGHT. "Old Myths and New Realities" was the title of one of his many books, and how powerful he is in exploding the old mythology and in depicting the new realities of the 1970's.

Education is the cement which holds a democracy together, and I have only to mention the two words, "Fulbright scholarships" to remind you of the contribution Senator FULBRIGHT made to education through these invaluable exchange programs. Then, too, there was his distinguished presidency of the University of Arkansas prior to his election to the Congress.

December 19, 1974

As educator, author, Congressman, Senator, and statesman in the true sense of the term, J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT has performed brilliantly on behalf of his country. I will miss his daily presence among us, and the wise and patient counsel which he always gave of so generously. Yet I know that we can continue to count upon him to observe and discuss the whole spectrum of public events, and that his role as educator-statesman will not be ending as his Senate career closes.

To my good friend, may I wish many happy and productive years ahead. The Republic is much in your debt. And your countrymen will long honor the splendid service you have performed as a Representative of the people of this great land.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. President, Senator FULBRIGHT's years as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will stand in history as an era of unexcelled statesmanship and patriotism.

He has challenged most forcefully the dangerous thesis that the role of Congress is only to ratify without question what the Executive does in foreign affairs. And we see the fruits of that courageous effort today, in such far-reaching institutional changes as the War Powers Bill and reformed procedures on executive agreements. In many cases these reforms bear the names of others. But every one bears the imprint and fulfills the inspiration of BILL FULBRIGHT. For above all other considerations, including party, he has been faithful to the Constitution and to the true interests of the American people.

We should recall in particular today Senator FULBRIGHT's decisive role in reversing the worst foreign policy blunder in our history—the war in Vietnam.

In the middle 1960's, the incisive hearings of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations were, without any question, the greatest single restraint upon disaster in Indochina. More than anything else, it was Senator FULBRIGHT's persistent interrogations that exposed the fallacy of our war policy, and that began the long process which ultimately turned that policy around. And I shall always believe that there are thousands of young Americans who are alive today, or who escaped shattering injury, because of the courage and determination of the gentleman from Arkansas.

I have had the privilege of serving under Chairman FULBRIGHT on the Foreign Relations Committee for but 2 years.

But for all the time I have been in the Congress I have increasingly admired this remarkable, unique man from Arkansas.

As he leaves the Senate now, he has my lasting appreciation for his insight and inspiration and my best wishes for a happy, satisfying future for him and for his lovely wife Betty.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I want to join my colleagues in the Senate in paying tribute to Senator JOHN WILLIAM FULBRIGHT of Arkansas. It would be impossible to do justice to our friend and colleague in a few words. For three decades, he has been a giant on the national and international scene. Only a small handful of Senators in our history have even begun to rival his stature in foreign affairs and his impact on the conduct of U.S. foreign relations.

Under Senator FULBRIGHT's leadership, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has gone on to new strengths, while his personal contribution both within and without the committee has been immeasurable.

From the Fulbright scholarship program to his unflagging courage and insight during the national trial of Vietnam, to divining a new course for America in the post-Vietnam era, Senator FULBRIGHT has set the highest standards for wisdom, statesmanship, and leadership.

BILL FULBRIGHT is a son of the Senate, but he has walked a world stage, as well. He is as well known and respected in the far corners of the Earth as he is here in this Chamber. One cannot travel anywhere without hearing him spoken of as the personification of what is best in America and best in our foreign policy. Our loss in the Senate is a loss, therefore, for the world.

Yet, even as Senator FULBRIGHT leaves the Senate, his work is not done. Whatever he does, he will continue to leave his mark on U.S. foreign policy, and continue to provide invaluable service to this Nation and the world.

Mr. President, on a more personal note, I want to thank BILL FULBRIGHT for all that he has done for me and the other younger Members of the Senate. For the past 12 years, I have always known that I could turn to him for wise counsel, friendship, and support. He has never failed to respond with generosity of his time, talents, and compassion.

I feel deep warmth and affection for BILL FULBRIGHT, treasure my associations with him, and look forward to many more years of continuing friendship. We will all miss him, and the Chamber will seem empty when he has left it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I could not possibly express adequately my appreciation to my colleagues for what they have said, Mr. President.

One of the rewards of retiring from this body is to feel that you have the respect of so many of these very able gentlemen from all parts of this great country.

Earlier today, not anticipating quite this development, I made this statement with regard to my experience here in the Senate. I will not repeat that, other than to say it has been a tremendous experience, and I have enjoyed it. It has been a unique one from my point of view, and wholly unexpected since I had started out in the academic field.

In any case, today has been a very satisfying and fitting last day—I presume it will be our last day—of 30 years in this body.

It is a great body, and I leave with every confidence that in the great problems that are confronting it, both domestic and foreign, a way will be found.

I appreciate all that has been said by the Senators from South Dakota, Florida, Maine, Pennsylvania, Mississippi, Iowa and, of course, my senior colleague with whom I have worked during these 30 years.

Senator MCCLELLAN, of course, as we know, is a great tower of strength and a leader of this Senate. It has been a tremendous privilege and pleasure to work with him in the many areas which are of great interest primarily to Arkansas, but also to every State in the Union. He has made a great contribution and, of course, is making a great contribution as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

I only end by saying I deeply appreciate the thoughtfulness of all my colleagues who have so eloquently expressed themselves here today.

COPYRIGHT IN SOUND RECORDINGS

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 3976.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL). Laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3976) to amend title 17 of the United States Code to remove the expiration date for a limited copyright in sound recordings, to increase the criminal penalties for piracy and counterfeiting of sound recordings, to extend the duration of copyright protection in certain cases, to establish a National Commission on New Technological Uses of Copyrighted Works, and for other purposes as follows:

Page 2, line 14, strike out "seven," and insert: "two".

Page 2, line 21, strike out "seven," and insert: "two".

Page 4, line 18, strike out "generally," and insert: "generally, with at least one member selected from among experts in consumer protection affairs;"

Page 6, line 8, after "title", insert: "until June 30, 1976".

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, on September 9 the Senate passed the long delayed bill for the general revision of the copyright law. It was then anticipated that adequate time did not remain in this Congress for the House of Representatives to act on that legislation. Consequently, on the same day the Senate also passed S. 3976, which contains certain copyright provisions which require action this year.

The House of Representatives today passed S. 3976 with minor amendments. Two amendments relate to the criminal penalties for the pirating of records and tapes. The Senate language, which was supported by the Department of Justice, provides for imprisonment of up to 3 years for a first offense and up to 7 years for a subsequent offense. The House amendments reduce these terms to 1 year and 2 years respectively.

S. 3976 establishes a National Commission on New Technological Uses of Copyrighted Works to study certain copyright issues which are not resolved in the general revision legislation. Two House amendments pertain to the Commission. One would limit to June 30, 1976, the authorization to appropriate funds for the operation of the Commission.

The other House amendment concerns the selection of the four public members of the Commission. The only requirement in the Senate bill is that they be "non-governmental." I had included that qualification in my bill solely to preclude the appointment of official representatives of Government agencies. The House amendment specifies that at least one of the public members shall be selected "from among experts in consumer protection affairs." All members of the public are consumers of copyrighted materials. None of the major consumer organizations have been active in the technical areas to be studied by the Commission. Consequently, I do not interpret the House amendment as requiring the President to necessarily select an individual who is associated with any organized association of consumers.

Mr. President, with the approval of the minority, I move that the Senate agree to the House amendments to S. 3976.

The motion was agreed to.

WAR CLAIMS ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on S. 1728, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL). The report will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows: The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1728) to increase benefits provided to American civilian internees in Southeast Asia, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by all the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 17, 1974, at p. 40540.)

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two of my staff members William P. Westphal and Brian Southwell have the privilege of the floor during the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, the conference report on this bill reflects the fact that the conferees reached agreement on a compromise proposal for distribution of the funds remaining for distribution or to be liquidated for future distribution under the War Claims Act of 1948.

I might say at this time that the House has adopted the conference report.

When S. 1728 first passed the Senate on October 8, 1973, it provided simply for an increase from $60 to $150 per month in the benefits paid to civilians who were interned during our recent experiences in Southeast Asia.

The bill was amended by the House to provide for certain new priorities in payment of the remaining unpaid claims by individuals and corporations for property lost in World War II.

The War Claims Act was intended to provide some measure of relief to U.S. citizens and U.S. corporations who suffered injury, death, or property loss as a result of the hostilities with Japan and Germany. They were to be paid as a matter of grace from the moneys received from the sale of enemy assets.

Because the claimants had no vested rights in the fund and because full payment of all claims was unlikely, Congress authorized payment through a system of priorities based on equity.

Personal injury and death claims were given first priority, with claims of small businesses, and those of $10,000 or less also paid in full. This was authorized in 1962. In 1970 further amendments gave full satisfaction of claims by religious, charitable, and similar nonprofit organizations, and authorized additional payments not to exceed $35,000 of which $11,000 has been paid to date. All claims not yet fully satisfied were to be taken from the balance on a pro rata basis; 6,692 claims have been fully satisfied of approximately 7,000 total claims. The total expenditure to date is approximately $350 million. The remaining 161 corporate and 187 individual claims represent the largest of the nonpriority awards.

The payments which have been made to date can best be summarized as follows:

Thirty-four death and personal injury awards paid in full totaling $510,035; 251 small business awards paid in full totaling $12,026,093; 5,635 awards of $10,000 or less paid in full totaling $13,059,352; 33 religious, charitable, and nonprofit awards paid in full totaling $24,189,313; 886 individuals have received payment of $35,276,571 leaving 187 individuals with a remaining unpaid claim balance of $6,578,916; 199 corporations have received payment of $249,441,491 leaving 161 corporations with a remaining unpaid claim balance of $94,700,830.

There are now $5 million in the fund available for distribution and there may be additional funds up to $15 million available for later distribution.

The amendment made by the House proposed a payment priority which would satisfy all individual claims up to $500,000 and pay up to $50,000 on each corporate claim with the balance of any funds remaining after these priority awards to be divided prorata by the corporations.

The Senate Judiciary Committee held a day of hearings on December 3, 1974, at which all interested parties were heard. After consideration by the Judiciary Committee the Senate disagreed to the House amendments and the bill went into conference committee.

The comparative difference between the present law, the House amendment and the Senate compromise—which was accepted by the House—is explained in the papers which have been placed on the desk of each Member.

The central argument, I presume, will be whether or not some preference in favor of individuals should be given instead of a general pro rata. The differences are found in the schedule placed on the desk of each Senator.

In the left-hand column will be found what is known as present law, where the $5 million which is on hand today is divided equally among corporations and individuals. The House bill, which the Senate Committee on the Judiciary turned down, would not have included the corporations in that distribution. The compromise reached by the conference committee retained that section of the present law. The difference comes in thereafter.

The individuals would receive up to $250,000 of their claim; and from that point on, all moneys would be paid on a pro rata basis, whether they are individuals or corporations.

When we consider the amount to be paid out, let us say, for final distribution, we find that under the present law, 15½ percent, or 15½ cents of every dollar, will be paid to the various claimants after the payment of the $5 million.

Under the House bill, the rate of distribution would be 9½ cents out of every dollar. Under the compromise position, which takes a position more or less midway between the two, we find that, under the compromise position, adopted by the House in the conference report, the remaining balance of pro rata distribution would be on the basis of 12¼ cents of every dollar.

It can be seen that the conference committee struck a ground more or less between the present law and the House amendments.

Why do we have a tilt toward the individuals in this distribution? These are the reasons:

First. Individual awards are based on the loss of homes, personal belongings and family businesses. In most cases, the individuals lost all they had. The corporate awardholders are almost exclusively large multinational corporations that lost only a small fraction of their total assets. The corporations suffered losses, but the individuals suffered disasters.

Second. About 77 of the corporate awardholders have taken more than $35 million in tax deductions as a result of their losses and have had the use of the money they saved for over 30 years. We were advised at the hearing that no individual awardholders took tax deductions.

Third. While it is true that under the law, if a corporation took a tax loss it had deducted from its award an amount equal to the tax benefit it received, it should also be noted that under section 2017(e) (b) of title 50 appendix, any payments received under the War Claims Act were declared exempt from Federal income taxation. No individual was granted an exemption from taxation and the staff of the Senate Committee on Finance prepared a memorandum for our hearings advising that under the Internal Revenue Code individuals who are fortunate enough to receive from the War Claims Fund an amount equal to 100 percent of the adjusted cost basis for such property may be subject to income tax either on a capital gain basis or as ordinary income.

Thus, some of the corporations who took a tax loss and who have or will receive 100 percent of their claim will be exempt from taxation.

Records of the War Claims Commission show that some corporations took tax losses as small as $300 or $400.

Fourth. Many of the individual awardholders are elderly persons. Many of them live on small, fixed incomes and receive little in the way of social security payments since their productive years were spent abroad. Their war claims awards represent a final financial stake to support them in their declining years. A few individuals earned some wealth by their efforts after World War II but in this regard it must be noted that under the compromise language, the six largest individual claims will not be paid in full but will be affected by the $250,000 limitation.

Fifth. In order to receive an award, claimants had to provide documentary proof of their ownership of the property that had been lost. Many individuals lost their documents in the war. U.S. corporations, which maintained extensive records in this country, were able to document a much greater percentage of their losses and hence received awards to cover a larger portion of their losses.

Sixth. All individual awardholders are U.S. citizens. Many of the stockholders of the corporate awards are foreign nationals. The basic theory of the War Claims Act is to compensate U.S. citizens. The priority for individuals furthers that purpose.

Mr. President, I believe that this compromise should be accepted. There is, as I say, a small tilt toward the individuals, and I think it is adequately justified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I compliment the distinguished Senator from North Dakota for the work he has done, with the distinguished Senator from Hawaii and the distinguished Senator from Indiana, as an ad hoc subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, in working out a compromise proposal to the House bill on the War Claims Act which I think is most acceptable, or should be most acceptable, to the Senate.

It is clear that Congress has consistently interposed its judgment on priorities for payment of war claims. There is ample precedent that other than pro rata payments be made. Congress has already created priorities for death and personal injury claims, for charitable and nonprofit institutions, for small businesses, and awards up to $10,000.

The past practice has been for Congress to adjust the payment scheme based upon equitable considerations. This is what is being proposed by the Senator from North Dakota in the legislation that was passed by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary a few days ago.

I personally feel that individuals are entitled to some priority consideration as related to the claims that they have and that corporations have for losses that occurred in the last war. This bill established such a priority through a four-level payment scheme. The first priority gives each individual claimant the amount of his claim, up to $24,000.

On the other hand, it does seem clear that, where we have a claim up to $24,000, corporations—and some of them are relatively small—are entitled to some consideration, too. The second priority gives corporations a priority distribution after individuals, up to $24,000. Then the bill gives individuals a third priority claim, up to the amount of his award or $250,000. Thereafter, all claims are distributed pro rata. We are trying to measure fairly what is justified in the way of a claimant's receiving adequate compensation for the losses that were incurred, and I think this procedure gives a fair adjustment of the equities.

I know that there are some who feel that individuals should not be entitled to any priority considerations. There are others who feel that corporations should not receive a nickel until the individuals have their claims paid off in toto.

I cannot help feeling that the problem resembles a Gordian knot, and that there is, in an absolute sense, no right or wrong. I think that the committee has worked out a scheme which, from my point of view, is eminently fair.

I compliment, again, the Senator from North Dakota on the presentation that he has made, and the Senator from Hawaii for coming forward with a proposal to our committee and to the Senate that attempts to sift through the various claims and counterclaims, and manages to bring out what I consider to be the most equitable response to a difficult problem. In the end, I feel the individuals are entitled to this limited priority because the nature of their losses was more severe than the losses of corporations. Individuals—all of them U.S. citizens of course—lost their homes, their personal belongings, their family businesses. Such losses are of a special nature, not like the loss of a large plant to some shareholders.

Second, corporations were able to tax a tax deduction for those losses many years ago, and are not liable for tax on any war claims awards they receive. Individuals do not receive such tax benefits.

One thing that it does seem to me is clear is that we need to pass this bill this afternoon. It is my hope that we will be able to do it without very much further argument. Therefore, I shall and listen to my own advice, and end my remarks.

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, this bill, when originally passed by the Senate, was a very simple bill. It took care of the American civilian internees in Southeast Asia. It raised the amount which is to be paid to them from $60 to $150 a month while they were interned. If we do not pass this bill, these internees will be getting only $60 a month, instead of the comparable $150 which is now being paid to military internees.

When this bill went to the House, the House added to the Senate-passed bill an amendment which would have repealed a present provision of the War Claims Act to pay corporate and individual awardees the next installment on their claims.

Up to now, Mr. President, under the War Claims Act, death and personal injury claims have been paid in full. Small business awards have been paid in full. Awards under $10,000 have been paid in full. Awards to religious and charitable organizations have been paid in full. Each awardee, whether corporate or individual, has been paid $10,000, plus 61.3 percent of the award.

In 1970, we provided for an additional $35,000 payment to each awardee. Of this $35,000, $11,000 has been paid. The House would have nullified the provision for the payment of the balance of $24,000. This the ad hoc committee, with the endorsement of the Committee on the Judiciary in executive session, rejected.

The House accepted that decision. The corporations will receive the money they were to receive under present law. That is, they will receive the $24,000 which the House, in their amendment, refused to give to corporations and which we have restored in this conference.

Then the House originally proposed paying all individuals in full. The ad hoc committee cut the $500,000 limit provided in the House amendment, which actually would have paid all the individual applicants in full, by half. Instead of giving full priority to individuals who suffered a loss, we limited this payment up to $250,000.

There will still be, I believe, six individuals who will not receive payment in full, but, rather, will share with corporations, pro rata, in the distribution of these war claim funds, as they become available.

We had good reason, in the circumstances presented to the ad hoc committee, to make this recommendation for a preference in treatment of the individuals involved here. Some of the reasons which compelled the ad hoc committee to act this way are as follows, Mr. President.

One, it was harder for individuals to prove their claims, as their records were largely destroyed in World War II. Thus, not all their claims were necessarily awarded them.

Second, for many individuals, the lost asset was frequently his only personal or business asset. They had family holdings for generations totally wiped out. The lost asset was only one asset of the corporate awardees—they did not lose all their capital.

Three, many corporate claimants, especially those whose claims are now under $50,000, are insurance companies on a subrogated basis under war risk insurance. It is for the assumption of this very risk they were paid their premium. That was their business, to insure these assets.

Four, corporations were given and took tax losses in the 1940's. No individual took a tax loss for the lost asset. Corporations, when they took that tax loss, had the use of that money for the past 30-odd years. Not one individual has taken a tax loss and, therefore, had no use of that money for the past 30-odd years.

Five, by statute, corporations which took a tax loss were given an exemption for the amount of the awards, as received. No such exemption was given individuals. Hence, corporations had no capital gains tax, while individuals paid tax as the money was paid them.

Here, we gave preferential treatment to corporations as against individuals.

Six, some of the corporations which took no tax loss did so because—the asset lost had previously been fully depreciated; other tax deductions made this deduction unnecessary. For example, some of the companies' taxes were only 1 percent to 5 percent, so a tax loss was unnecessary for them.

Seven, furthermore, the present stockholders of corporations would benefit from these payments, not the stockholders of record at the time of loss. In the intervening years, from the dates of the losses in the 1940s, the corporate stockholders have changed. Many of the stockholders have sold out, and other, new stockholders have purchased the stock. So, the stockholders who bore the loss will not benefit by what has been paid to the corporations. Unless the stockholder of record at time of the loss still holds the stock, he sold it at a lower price because of the lost assets. The person now holding the stock paid less for it for this asset has long been written off the corporate books. A payment to these corporations now would be in the nature of a "windfall" to present stockholders.

This law, Mr. President, has been changed several times. This is not the only time it has been changed. In the several changes, privileges have been given to benefit particular groups as their needs were proved to Congress. In the conference report, the conferees made it clear that the amendments adopted were designed solely to provide an equitable solution under the particular facts now existing in connection with these claims arising out of World War II losses.

There is no precedent being set by this law. I repeat, we say that no precedent is being set by this action.

It is very late in the session. The House is adamant about its amendment. We were able to cut their amendment down to the point where we feel that it is a fair compromise.

If this conference report falls, we penalize the civilian internees, who will only get $60 a month instead of the $150 a month provided for herein.

So I urge the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina asked to be notified. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that for a moment?

Mr. BAYH. I am glad to withhold.

ORDER TO PRINT TRIBUTES TO DR. RIDDICK AS A SENATE DOCUMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the tributes which will be made with respect to Dr.

Riddick be collected and printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all Senators have 10 days to file individual tributes to retiring Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BAYH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

H.R. 16215—AMENDMENT TO THE COASTAL ZONE MANAGEMENT ACT OF 1972

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House on H.R. 16215.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate H.R. 16215, a bill to amend the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, to provide more flexibility in the allocation of administrative grants to coastal States, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Robert Seto be allowed the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTES TO SENATOR PETER DOMINICK

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am at a loss for words when I express my disappointment that Senator PETER DOMINICK of Colorado will not be with us when the new Congress convenes next January. Senator DOMINICK is a most valuable Senator. I often referred to him as an ideal Senator.

Legislative tasks are like any other tasks. Success requires hard work. Senator DOMINICK worked hard and has the respect of all Senators. He possesses a keen mind and he knows what is going on in the field of legislation.

If Senator DOMINICK served on a committee, he mastered well the legislation that that committee would forward to the floor. Other Senators sought his opinion and advice. He was not a follower—he was a leader. Time and time again the Senate would be called upon to vote on a Dominick amendment. A Dominick amendment was always an amendment of substance and he backed it up with hard facts, clear logic, and a convincing argument.

PETER DOMINICK combines all of the qualities that a good legislator should have, such as honesty, respect, dedication, skill, background, knowledge, and a willingness to apply himself to the task at hand.

In these troubled times, the Senate of the United States has had to deal with many issues of grave concern to our country. These have involved issues of national defense, fiscal soundness, adherence to Constitutional principles and to our system of private enterprise. PETER DOMINICK could always be counted upon to be on the side of his country on these important and crucial issues.

Pressure groups, selfish interests, and self-aggrandizement never caused Senator PETER DOMINICK to deviate from his high principles. Senator DOMINICK was always attentive to debates. When he spoke, he spoke with authority, because he was well prepared. His work has made a great contribution to all legislation, but particularly legislation dealing with education, labor and management matters and legislation relating to our national defense.

I sincerely hope that this distinguished Senator from my neighboring State of Colorado will continue in the public service. We need men of his caliber. I hope that the future will hold many fine things for him and that many challenges will come his way.

Mr. FONG. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I am happy to yield to the acting leader and then I shall yield to the Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I wish to join in the tribute to our distinguished colleague from Colorado, Senator PETER DOMINICK. I deeply regret that he will not be with us in the 94th Congress.

Having served 12 years in the Senate and 2 years in the House, PETER DOMINICK leaves a lasting impression on his colleagues of great ability, of great understanding of the legislative process, and of great devotion to the principles of sound government.

PETER DOMINICK has rendered notable service as a member of the Armed Services Committee, the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and the Select Committee on Small Business.

I have been particularly impressed with his knowledge and understanding of matters involving national security. A veteran, he was a much-decorated Army Air Corps pilot in World War II. Throughout his congressional service he has recognized the importance of a strong national defense in a world agitated by continuing conflict and unrest.

Equally impressive has been his work on the Labor and Public Welfare Committee to improve the quality of education in this country—and to do so in ways that were practical and attainable.

PETER DOMINICK has demonstrated, time after time, here on the Senate floor that he has the courage of his convictions. He has fought vigorously for what he believes in, and he never hesitated to stand up—even as part of a small minority—for what he thinks is in the national interest.

We hope—and we have reason to believe—that his enormous talents will not be lost to the Government and the people of the country. In whatever he undertakes, we wish him great success.

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to my distinguished friend, the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. FONG).

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, I also rise to pay tribute to my friend and distinguished colleague from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK) who leaves the Senate at the end of the 93d Congress in January.

PETER HOYT DOMINICK, the senior Senator from the Centennial State has been both diligent and effective in his service to the people of Colorado and of our entire Nation over the past 12 years. He came to the Senate after scoring an upset victory as a freshman Congressman in the 87th Congress. Before that, he had served for 4 distinguished years as a representative in the Colorado State legislature.

As a U.S. Senator, PETER DOMINICK was perhaps best known for his work in the fields of health and education, serving on both the Education and the Health Subcommittees of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

In addition, he won widespread respect with his keen questioning and lucid reasoning during Senate debates and during hearings and meetings of the committees and subcommittees on which he served. In addition to the Senate Labor and Welfare Committee, these included the Armed Services Committee, the Select Committee on Small Business, and the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

He also played key roles as a member of the Office of Technology Assessment and the Republican Policy Committee.

As my colleagues are aware, PETER DOMINICK served as an Army Air Corps pilot during World War II and, for his gallant efforts while flying over the hump between India and China, won the Distinguished Flying Cross and the Air Medal and Cluster. His interest in flying has been maintained as a colonel in the U.S. Air Force Reserve.

Until recently, PETER and Nancy Dominick owned a home in my State of Hawaii, so we had a special friendship by virtue of our love for the Aloha State. One of his sons worked in Hawaii during the summer of 1973.

Mr. President, I am sad that PETER H. DOMINICK is leaving the Senate, but I am happy that his talents and knowledge and experience will still be available to us through a new public office. I am sure he will make an excellent representative of our great Nation as Ambassador to Switzerland, his next slated post.

To PETER and gracious wife Nancy, I extend my very best wishes and warmest aloha.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. SPARKMAN).

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I want to join with my colleagues in the words they have said about PETER DOMINICK.

I knew PETER DOMINICK from the time he entered the Senate. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Nebraska will recall that the Senator with whom we served for a good many years, Senator Alec Smith of New Jersey—

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Senator Smith told me that his nephew was coming to the Senate and a recommendation from Senator Smith went a long way with me. I found that it was justified in the person of PETER DOMINICK.

I have not voted with PETER DOMINICK every time. I am sure I voted with him more times than I voted against him, but I knew always that he believed in the stand that he was taking.

I want to say he has been a good Senator. I regret, along with my colleagues, seeing him leave us. I know that with his training and his expertise he will continue to render real service to the Nation that he has served so well.

I join in the expression of regret that he will not be with us longer. I wish for him and his loved ones great happiness in the retirement that he has so well earned.

Mr. CURTIS. I thank my distinguished friend.

Now I yield to my distinguished colleague from Idaho.

Mr. McCURE. I thank the Senator from Nebraska for yielding this time. I thank him for having brought to the floor of the Senate this opportunity to same some remarks about Senator PETER DOMINICK.

I think each one of us here, regardless of our own particular philosophy, and regardless of which party we may represent, or from what section of the country we may come, have grown to admire and respect not only the ability of this man from Colorado, but also his dedication and his courage and his conviction.

Few men have ever graced the halls of Congress who can speak with more assurance. Everyone who heard his voice would know that he had done his homework on the subject matter that he was discussing, and that he spoke with conviction that his viewpoint was correct.

I believe each of us would like to have the same kind of a feeling toward us that each of us has toward PETER DOMINICK.

We will sorely miss him and his services here in the halls of the Senate.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I now yield to the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Committee (Mr. TALMADGE).

Mr. TALMADGE. I thank the Senator from Nebraska for yielding to me.

I desire to associate myself with the remarks of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, regarding our colleague, PETER DOMINICK, of Colorado.

I have known him since he came to the Senate. I know him as a hard working, dedicated, courageous, forthright Senator, with the courage of his convictions. I believe when he leaves the Senate, the Senate will miss him. I hope he will continue in some capacity in public service to his country.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am sure that there are many other Senators who will want to speak concerning the service of this distinguished and scholarly, yet practical and effective Senator, PETER DOMINICK.

I ask unanimous consent for all Senators to extend their remarks concerning Mr. DOMINICK's service, and that, regardless of the day they are inserted into the Record, in the permanent Record they might be assembled in one appropriate place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, Senator PETER DOMINICK's public contributions range over the entire spectrum of national concerns—from military policy to education, from atomic energy to health, to the state of the economy. All of us who have served with him have benefited time after time from his wisdom and his personal gentleness.

I want to call attention, however, to the singular contribution he has made as the first ranking minority member of the Senate's new Budget Committee. His help with the committee during its first months—indeed, his help with the legislation which established it—have given this major congressional reform a greater chance of success.

As chairman of the Budget Committee,

I have had only help and support from Senator DOMINICK. We have worked closely together on a totally nonpartisan basis, and this has been true of the committee as a whole.

I can report that in no small measure because of PETER DOMINICK the Senate is going to have this new and better budget process envisioned in the budget reform legislation passed last summer.

We wish Senator DOMINICK well, of course. We know he will make many more public contributions and we will have the pleasure of his company many times in the future. Meanwhile, I pledge to do everything in my power to make the Budget Committee worthy of the support he has given it.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the citizens of the Rocky Mountain State of Colorado have been ably and conscientiously served in the U.S. Senate by the Honorable PETER H. DOMINICK. The entire Nation has benefited from his dedicated service to his country, both in peace and war.

Senator DOMINICK has made significant contributions to the Nation through his unswerving adherence to the founding concepts of free enterprise and individual initiative inherent in our Union. This dedication to principle has brought him acclaim both on and off the floor of the Senate. The Senator is recognized as expert in many fields of legislative endeavor; he has been acclaimed as diligent in his duty and responsibilities as a Member of this body and for his dedicated work on the Armed Services, Labor, and Public Welfare, Atomic Energy, Equal Educational Opportunity, and Small Business Committees of the U.S. Senate.

Senator DOMINICK, born, reared and educated in the eastern part of the United States, combined in his public career, the urbanity one associates with the East, with the traditional, solid heartiness one associates with the natural sons of Colorado's rugged geography. This combination served him well in the increasingly complex world of the 1960's wherein the legislation affecting the Nation needed unique perspective. Senator DOMINICK possessed the necessary perspective and day after day, brought it to bear on the matters before this body.

Mr. President, I am naturally proud to have served in the U.S. Senate with my distinguished friend from Colorado. We saw eye-to-eye on many of the great legislative problems facing the country and, regardless of the unimportant fact that we sat on opposite sides of the political aisle, were able to work closely for the national interest. Our view did not always prevail, nor did Senator DOMINICK and I agree on every matter affecting our country and our respective States, but I shall feel a keen sense of loss at his leaving this body for I knew I could count on his integrity and openness with regard to all legislation.

I am honored to add my accolades to those afforded Senator DOMINICK by his friends and colleagues in the Senate and wish him well in whatever endeavor his natural enthusiasm leads him after leaving the Senate.

I regard him as one of the ablest Members of this body, a man of character, courage, ability, dedication, and patriotism. He has been one of the hardest working Senators, always working for the best interest of the people of Colorado and the Nation. Truly, he has been a great Senator, one of whom his State and its people can be tremendously proud.

My wife, Maryon, and I wish for Senator DOMINICK and his lovely wife, Nancy, the best of everything. They leave with our love, our high regard, and sincerest best wishes.

Mr. MCINTYRE. Mr. President, Senator DOMINICK and I came to this body in the same year, 1963. In the years since, I have come to know him and respect him as a diligent, knowledgeable member of the Armed Services Committee and of the Subcommittee on Research and Development it is my privilege to chair.

In the autumn of 1973, Senator DOMINICK and I worked in particularly close harness, developing and presenting the McIntyre-Dominick amendment to the Defense Authorization Act, holding a joint news conference on the amendment, and carrying out the floor effort for its adoption.

Our amendment called for an orderly more careful development of the Trident submarine, a vessel the administration and the Pentagon wanted to rush into production. Senator DOMINICK and I were convinced our defense posture needed the Trident, but we were also convinced that our plan for its development would save on initial costs, save even more in the long run by reducing costly errors, and even, perhaps, put a reliable Trident submarine into operation earlier than the speedup plan because it would avoid error-correcting delays.

The good Senator from Colorado and I lost that fight by only two votes. But we shared the satisfaction, just weeks later, of having the Pentagon in effect concede the validity of our position by turning to a plan that, indeed, did call for more orderly and careful development of the Trident.

I hope that long after he leaves this Chamber Senator DOMINICK will remember this mutual effort on our part and take lasting satisfaction in its ultimate vindication.

I thank the Senator from Colorado for his sterling service on my subcommittee and I wish him much happiness and fulfilling pursuits in the years ahead.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I believe we will all miss the presence of PETER DOMINICK in our body. I know I shall miss his presence here and particularly shall miss his presence as ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Education, where, no matter what were the areas of disagreement, he was always very fair and considerate.

I came to know PETER DOMINICK, too, as a true friend of education, one whose valuable role in writing new and important legislation was not understood by many people. I personally will miss his wit and realistic view of legislative possibilities.

I understand from press reports that he may be our next Ambassador to Switzerland. The Swiss will be fortunate to have him and, having the regard I do for Switzerland, I believe our colleague is lucky to be going there too.

I wish Senator DOMINICK and his wife the best of luck on their new assignment and am glad that our Nation will continue to utilize their services.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, since 1962 among the many Members in this distinguished body there has been one who has stood out as a straight-talking, plain-spoken, forthright advocate of reason and reasonableness.

The senior Senator from Colorado, my neighboring State to the west, brought to this body a fierce dedication to the values and traditions that helped build this country and that helped those who have gone before us make of our two States—like this Nation itself, former untamed wilderness—into a home for millions, a home of unprecedented prosperity.

As Americans, we owe him a great debt. If my colleagues will allow it, I wish also to take a moment to speak as a partisan, and to thank him in behalf of the members of my party, for his selfless service and, indeed, for his true leadership, among Republicans across the Nation.

PETER DOMINICK has the qualities that make men and women proud to be associated with him. As Senator, as friend, as fellow member of the Select Committee on Small Business, and as fellow Republican, I know that my association with PETER DOMINICK has been both a proud and a happy one.

I wish him all the best in his future endeavors. I expect to keep up a close personal relationship with him and I thank him, on my own behalf and for the people of this country and of my party for his years of strenuous efforts in service of their interests—public service. I hope and expect he will continue in the future.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, it is with a mixture of regret and pride that I take this opportunity to pay tribute to my colleague and friend PETER DOMINICK. Regret because the occasion is a sad one, as he will be leaving the Senate; pride because it has been my good fortune to have known and worked with this distinguished American for the past 4 years.

There are many things that could be said in praise of PETER DOMINICK but perhaps the most important is that he made a difference. He not only cared deeply but he cared about the right things. He worked hard and long for the people of Colorado; he worked just as hard for the people of all of the United States. Too often, Mr. President, we in this body tend to forget that what a Senator says and how he acts and what a difference he makes simply because of his presence here is just as important as his seniority and his committee assignments. PETER DOMINICK was a Senator who made a difference. He cared—and does today—about our national defense; he cared about the quality of health and education in this country; he cared about the rights of veterans, he cared about small businessmen and the role they have in our Nation.

When I first came to the Senate, I was pleasantly surprised at the kind and abundant counsel and advice that were offered by older and wiser veterans of the Senate wars. PETER DOMINICK was one of those who helped to show me by his example as well as by his advice, that the principles he and I share, the conservative values we believe in can be implemented even in the face of overwhelming odds. I think that matters, Mr. President. I think that PETER DOMINICK showed me—and many other new Senators that one man with convictions can make a difference.

Perhaps that is what matters in the long run, Mr. President. Not victory or defeat or momentary gains or losses but whether over the long run it makes any difference if any of us are here. PETER DOMINICK made a difference. That is why the admiration and esteem we all feel for him will remain when he has left this body. The kind of greatness he has does not depend on the office he holds—it is inherent in the character and the spirit of the man.

Mr. President, in saying goodbye to PETER DOMINICK, we say farewell not only to the man but to the special quality he brought to our considerations here. We will miss that quality; we will miss the man as well.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, when I came to the Senate 12 years ago one of my freshman colleagues was from Colorado. While he sat on the other side of the aisle, it did not take me long to recognize that Senator PETER DOMINICK was a colleague whose thoughtfulness and hard work deserved the respect of the entire Senate.

It is one of the hallmarks of serving in this great Chamber that respect and appreciation for one colleague's abilities and concerns are not inhibited by political considerations. While it is probably true that PETER DOMINICK and I have more often been on opposite sides of controversial issues than we have been together, it is equally true that all times I have respected the positions taken by Senator DOMINICK. I have known him to be a man of considered action and a man of conscience—the kind of Senator who enhances the quality of debate in the Senate.

As second senior Republican on the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, PETER DOMINICK has made many valuable contributions. Foremost in my mind is the constructive attitude he has taken in the consideration of education legislation. As the ranking minority member on the Education Subcommittee he deserves a great deal of credit for major education programs, including—most recently—the 1974 Education Act extending and amending the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and other education laws.

PETER DOMINICK's departure from this body is an appropriate time to recognize his long and dedicated service. With him go our lasting respect and admiration.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, at the end of the 93d Congress, the Senate will no longer have the services of one of its most able and distinguished Members, Senator PETER DOMINICK of Colorado. The people of Colorado will lose an outstanding spokesman, and the people of the United States will lose a true statesman.

Senator DOMINICK was elected to the Colorado House of Representatives in 1957 and served until 1961. He was a member of the National Commission for the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization during 1960 and 1961. Senator DOMINICK was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1960 and to the U.S. Senate in 1962.

During his 12 years in the Senate, PETER DOMINICK has been a patriotic and dedicated servant of his country. Senator DOMINICK has been a forthright spokesman for those causes which he advocated, and a constructive critic of those he felt should be opposed. His devotion to his work, his practicality, and his persistence are examples for all Members of the Senate to follow. He has combined his western independence with a deep sense of patriotism that should characterize all parts of the country. PETER DOMINICK is one individual to whom the phrase "a great American" is completely appropriate.

Mr. President, Senator DOMINICK has truly been an inspiration to all Members of the Senate. As the second-ranking Republican on the Labor and Public Welfare Committee and the Select Committee on Small Business, Senator DOMINICK has served with great distinction and ably guided worthwhile legislation through the Congress. He has been a dedicated and effective member of the Armed Services Committee, where I have had the pleasure of serving with him. All of his efforts in the Senate will long be appreciated by those who believe in sound government and a strong national defense.

I am particularly pleased that President Ford has recognized the outstanding qualities in PETER DOMINICK and plans to name him as an Ambassador. I am sure he will fulfill the responsibilities of such an office in a singularly outstanding manner.

Mr. President, I take pride in having served with Senator DOMINICK and will especially miss him because of the consideration and kindness which he has shown to me during our careers in the Senate together.

Mrs. Thurmond and I wish him and his charming wife Nancy much success in all their undertakings in the future.

THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING AND URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I am happy to report to the Senate that after the acceptance of the conference report on H.R. 15977, which amends the Export Import Bank Act of 1945, the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee has cleared the Senate Calendar of all the legislation the committee reported to the Senate for consideration this year. For the information of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that a résumé of all the bills handled by the committee be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. SPARKMAN. During this past session of the Congress, the committee reported to the Senate some 22 measures, that is, bills and resolutions. In addition, the committee considered 20 nominations all of which were reported and acted upon favorably by the Senate.

Mr. President, I am very proud of the record achieved by the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee during the past session, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank and commend all members of the committee for the cooperation, attention, and work they gave and paid to committee business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator RANDOLPH be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes, to call up two House bills.

GRANGER DAM AND LAKE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Works, I report the bill H.R. 11802, designating the Laneport Dam and Lake on the San Gabriel River as the Granger Dam and Lake, without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill.

The legislative clerk read as follows: A bill (H.R. 11802) designating the Laneport Dam and Lake on the San Gabriel River as the Granger Dam and Lake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

O. C. FISHER DAM AND LAKE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Works, I report the bill H.R. 15322, designating the San Angelo Dam and Reservoir on the North Concho River as the O. C. Fisher Dam and Lake, without amendment, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill.

The legislative clerk read as follows: A bill (H.R. 15322) designating San Angelo Dam and Reservoir on the North Concho River as the O. C. Fisher Dam and Lake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Reserving the right to object, and my colleague knows I am not going to object, but I am doing this to protect the minority at the moment, is there any objection to either of these bills, may I ask my colleague?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, as Representative O. C. FISHER comes to the end of a lengthy and productive career in the Congress, it is fitting that his accomplishments be recognized in the manner proposed in this bill. He has long recognized the value of water resource projects and has been a strong supporter of them. The lake in his district is a major contributor to the welfare of that area of Texas. The work in Congress of Representative O. C. FISHER will long be remembered by the people he so ably served for 16 terms. The naming of the dam and lake in his honor is a lasting tribute to his service.

Mr. President, in response to the question of the able majority whip, I cleared these matters with the minority whip, Mr. GRIFFIN. Both of these bills come from the Public Works Committee. All members of the Public Works Committee, both Republicans and Democrats, have been polled. There was unanimous support for the two measures.

The two bills refer strictly to changes of names of projects.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I have no objection.

Mr. McCLURE. Reserving the right to object, will the clerk again state the two measures which have been thus identified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first measure was passed.

The clerk will report the second measure.

The legislative clerk read as follows: A bill (H.R. 15322) designating San Angelo Dam and Reservoir on the North Concho River as the O. C. Fisher Dam and Lake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would the Senator like the first one reported again?

Mr. McCLURE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first measure by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 11802) designating the Laneport Dam and Lake on the San Gabriel River as the Granger Dam and Lake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLURE. I thank the Chair. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement prepared by the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) in connection with this bill be printed in the Record at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BENTSEN

I support the bill which would change the name of the San Angelo Dam and Reservoir, to the "O. C. Fisher Dam and Lake" in honor of the retiring Member of Congress from the 21st District of Texas.

In this time of governmental abuses of power and the apparent belief of some public officials that they are above the law and above the people, O. C. Fisher has never lost sight of the fact that he is a servant of the people. Through 16 Congressional terms, O. C. Fisher has served the people of his District with honesty, dedication, and a steadfast belief in the American Constitutional system of government. In his 22 years on the House Armed Services Committee, Congressman Fisher has supplied a firm and thoughtful approach to the country's defense needs during many periods of international tension. He is loved and respected in his District.

The area which Congressman Fisher has so ably served is a part of Texas often subject to extreme weather, hot summers and cold winters, long droughts and torrential rainfall. It was the uncertainty of the weather in this part of Texas that made the San Angelo Dam and Reservoir a necessity. A devastating flood which had ravaged the City of San Angelo in 1936 prompted the building of this vast flood control project which still serves a vital protective function to the community.

Congressman Fisher has a strong and wise record on water conservation and flood control; he recognizes the important, long-range benefits that flood control affords our future generations. I feel it only fitting that this project permanently bear his name to remind the citizens of the 21st District, the State of Texas and the United States of Congressman Fisher's steady, uncompromising devotion to the public interest. I have been fortunate to call him Congressman; I am proud to call him friend. I urge adoption of this measure, as a fitting tribute to this distinguished lawmaker as he completes his long and dedicated service in the Congress.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, what is the present business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report on S. 1728.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, may I raise a point of order? There is no intervening business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has not been a live quorum since the last vote. There has been intervening business and the Senate just passed two bills.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. TALMADGE may proceed for not to exceed 2 minutes, to call up two measures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IMPROVEMENT IN QUALITY OF UNSHELLED AND SHELLED FILBERTS

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 2933, which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry this morning, and which has been cleared with the acting majority leader and the acting minority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILES). The bill will be stated by title. The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2933) to improve the quality of unshelled filberts and shelled filberts for marketing in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, this bill amends the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 to include filberts as one of the commodities which are subject to section 8(e) of that act. Section 8(e) provides that whatever grade, size, quality, or maturity regulations are in effect under a Federal marketing order for certain domestically produced commodities, the same or comparable requirements must be applied to imports of that commodity.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I strongly urge the Senate to approve H.R. 2933, which is intended to improve the quality of unshelled filberts and shelled filberts for marketing in the United States.

On May 18 of this year I introduced S. 3539, which is identical to H.R. 2933. It passed the House on December 16 and was unanimously approved by the Senate Agriculture Committee yesterday.

CXX—2592—Part 31

Mr. President, the filbert industry in this country is concentrated in the Northwest, with roughly 90 percent of the national filbert production coming from Oregon and the remainder from the State of Washington. Senators HATFIELD, MAGNUSON, and JACKSON join me in strongly supporting this legislation.

What H.R. 2933 does is quite simple. It would include filberts as one of the commodities protected under section 8e of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended. Under the provisions of this section, grade and quality standards currently applied to domestic producers would be applied to imported filberts.

Mr. President, this legislation represents a sincere effort on the part of the filbert industry to upgrade the quality of its product. I commend the members of this industry for acting to assure that the quality of their product meets the highest standards. Without an amendment to section 8e of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, grading standards are only applied to filberts in the shell. It is the shelled filbert market that is subject to intense competition of ungraded, poor quality imports. The purpose of this legislation is to require the same standards of imported shelled nut meats as domestic producers have imposed upon themselves.

Mr. President, even though the State Department has indicated its disapproval of this legislation, they cannot deny the depressing effect which poorer quality imports have on the domestic market.

There is no need for further delay of this act of equity. It is time we recognize the plight of this small but important segment of our agriculture industry and give them an opportunity to compete in the market place on a fair and equitable basis.

I urge the adoption of H.R. 2933.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIFFERENT MINIMUM GRADE STANDARDS FOR GRAPES AND PLUMS

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 13022, which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 13022) to amend the Act of September 2, 1960, as amended, so as to authorize different minimum grade standards for packages of grapes and plums exported to different destinations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, this bill would amend the act of September 2, 1960, which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and enforce uniform grade standards for packages of grapes and plums exported from the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR CLAIMS ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1728) to increase benefits provided to American civilian internees in Southeast Asia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on S. 1728.

Mr. BAYH addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. BURDICK. I object, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The assistant legislative clerk continued with the call of the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

WAR CLAIMS ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1728) to increase benefits provided to American civilian internees in Southeast Asia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the conference report on S. 1728.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, this conference report should be rejected. We have these war claims. There is a limit to the amount of assets. The conference report, in effect, would have Congress bless with its approval a most discriminatory division of the assets that are available to the creditors. The conference report, in effect, says that all the corporate creditors will be excluded, or at least that all of the individual creditors will be given priority.

Corporations are owned in equity by individuals, and those individuals who are entitled to share in the corporate assets are just as much entitled to have their corporate claims paid as the individuals who have individual claims. Some of the individual claims are among the largest claims, which would swallow up a large part of the assets.

I have always heard that equality is equity. The assets that are available for the payment of all creditors ought not to be diverted to the payment of only a few of the creditors.

So, at the proper time, I intend to move that the conference report be laid on the table. I do not wish to cut off debate.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ERVIN. I yield.

Mr. BURDICK. Is the Senator aware that this is a War Claims Act of 1948, and that both in 1962 and in 1970 we have adjusted, and again today we are adjusting, the priorities between the various people? Does the Senator realize that all the nonproperty claims have been paid, that is, all the personal injury claims have been paid for individuals, and that on the property damage claims everyone has been paid $10,000, that everyone has been paid 61.3 percent, and that the 1970 law provides for the payment of $35,000, of which $11,000 has already been paid?

Mr. ERVIN. Yes, but this would pay certain creditors to the exclusion of others.

Mr. BURDICK. Is the Senator aware that certain tax benefits that inure to the corporations do not inure to individuals?

Mr. ERVIN. I am not aware that any corporation has tax benefits that are not available to individuals standing in the same position.

Mr. BURDICK. I will read the identification of the section. It is section 2017 (e) (b) of title 50 appendix.

Mr. ERVIN. Well, Mr. President, the fact that people have sinned in times past, and the fact that a legislative body may have sinned in times past, does not justify a continuation of the sinning. If we have sinned in times past, it is all the more reason why we ought to get righteous today.

Unless somebody else wants to speak, I move that this conference report be laid on the table, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay the conference report on the table.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will come to order. Can we have quiet in the Senate. The Senate will please come to order. The clerk will withhold calling the roll until the Senate comes to order.

May we have order in the Senate so that we can resume the call of the roll. May we have order in the back of the Senate so we can resume the calling of the roll.

The clerk will resume.

The assistant legislative clerk resumed and concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART), the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON) would vote "yea."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) and the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON), the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. BROOKE), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) are necessarily absent.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Nelson may be recognized to call up a conference report on H.R. 14449 and that there be a time limitation on the discussion of that conference report of 10 minutes equally divided between Mr. NELSON and Mr. JAVITS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMUNITY SERVICES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 14449, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILES). The report will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 14449) to provide for the mobilization of community development and assistance services and to establish a Community Action Administration in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to administer such programs, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of today.)

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Larry Gage, Richard Johnson, Don Elisberg, Nik Edis, and Jon Steinberg, of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee staff, have the privilege of the floor during the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the Joint House conference has agreed upon a compromise bill to extend the programs under the Economic Opportunity Act through fiscal 1977. Most Senators have heard the essential principles of that compromise. We worked out a very careful compromise between the conferees of the House and Senate. It was signed by 15 of the 16 conferees, including the minority on the House side.

This vital extension of the antipoverty programs under the Economic Opportunity Act is the result of long months of work in both Houses of Congress. The House of Representatives passed legislation to transfer the OEO programs to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, last May, by a vote of 331 to 53. The Senate then spent much time and effort analyzing that legislation and attempting to wrestle with the difficult problem of continuing the programs, while assuring their continued independence and effectiveness. The Senate solution, which was accepted in this body by a vote of 75 to 13 last month, was to set forth a reorganization plan procedure whereby the programs could be transferred to HEW by the President only after submission to Congress of a reorganization plan which could be disapproved by either branch by a simple majority vote.

The major decision of the conferees in coming to the agreement before us today was to adopt the Senate reorganization plan approach, with modifications. Under the conference agreement, the President is authorized to submit a reorganization plan on March 15 of next year to transfer the programs under the direct administration of the Office of Economic Opportunity to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. These programs include Community Action, Senior Opportunities and Services, and Emergency Food and Medical Services. Programs so transferred would be administered within a separate Community Services Administration within HEW. The final bill does, however, require the reorganization plan to transfer the community economic development program to a separate entity within the Department of Commerce.

If Congress does not find the reorganization plan acceptable, the reorganization plan could be disapproved by a joint resolution, which requires a majority vote in the House and Senate. The President could veto such a joint resolution disapproving the reorganization plan, which could then be overridden by a two-thirds vote of both Houses of Congress.

The question of the future location of OEO has been the major hurdle in the extensive consideration of the Economic Opportunity Act this year. The procedure set forth in the conference report before us today was agreed to and the report signed by 15 of the 16 conferees, including Congressman ALBERT QUIN, Republican of Minnesota, the ranking Republican member of the House Education and Labor Committee. I hope and trust that the bill will, therefore, be signed by the President.

The other major issue in the conference was the House bill's provision for reducing the Federal share of Community Action Agencies' program costs from 80 percent for this year—fiscal 1975—to 70 percent for fiscal year 1976 and 60 percent for fiscal year 1977. The House conferees insisted upon this provision, but the Senate conferees persuaded the conferees to accept greater support for small community action programs, the majority of which are located in rural areas. Community action programs receiving less than $300,000 in Federal funds would continue to receive the 80-percent Federal share this year, and would receive a 75-percent Federal share in fiscal year 1976 and 70 percent Federal share in fiscal year 1977.

This greater Federal support for small community action programs is essential, especially in present economic circumstances. Many communities with large numbers of poor persons, particularly in rural areas, simply do not have the resources to contribute to community action efforts, and they should receive the assistance needed to continue their community action programs.

The final conference agreement also contains provisions of both the House and Senate-passed versions of the bill consolidating the statutory authority for the Head Start, Follow Through, and Native American programs in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. HEW has administered those programs under delegation arrangements from OEO for the past several years.

The following is a brief description of the programs continued under the legislation reported by the conference:

COMMUNITY ACTION

Although Community Action was once highly controversial, we have found that it enjoys wide acceptance and support from State and city officials and civic leaders from all sections of the country, reflecting the full spectrum of political persuasion.

Community Action Agencies clearly perform a unique and essential function not only in providing services to the poor, but reflecting the specific concerns of the communities they serve. Local participation and flexibility are the cornerstones of the Community Action program.

The Community Action program has been successful, because it has been tailored to the unique needs of the local community. There are over 900 Community Action programs at the present time. In some cases functioning as part of the local government has been determined as the best method of serving the community, and some 95 Community Action programs are public agencies operating through the local government structure. In other instances, vigorous private nonprofit agencies have been found most appropriate. The conference committee agreed that it is essential to preserve this flexibility to meet the specific needs of the local community.

Some of the most important functions of Community Action Agencies have been to initiate innovative programs, and to mobilize other Federal and local resources. In the past, CAP's have responded to specific local problems with programs which may have applicability on a national level. The Maine Community Action Agency's energy conservation project initiated last winter in response to the severe impact of the energy crisis on the poor is one outstanding example, and that program has been written into the new law.

The opportunity for employment and the development of leadership capabilities among low-income individuals in communities served by Community Action Agencies has also been an important part of this program; 185,000 persons are presently employed by CAP's and delegate agencies. Of these individuals, roughly half were poor or on welfare rolls before their employment with CAP's. Moreover, many former CAP employees have moved on to successful careers elsewhere in public and private life.

HEAD START

The conference agreement transfers legislative authority for the Head Start program to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and extends that authority through fiscal 1977, based upon the administration's requested legislation.

In transferring the Head Start authority by legislation, the bill simply recognizes in the law the delegation of operating authority from the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare which took place in 1969. It is in no way intended to alter the nature of Head Start as a local community-based child development program with maximum parental involvement.

Congress does not intend that HEW reorganize Head Start grantees or shift funds and control away from the community and other agencies which have had as much as 8 years of experience operating Head Start.

The agreement also provides that financial assistance to Head Start programs shall not exceed 80 percent if he determines, in accordance with regulations establishing objective criteria, that such action is required in furtherance of the purposes of the act.

The formula in the conference agreement for distribution of Head Start funds is as follows: 50 percent of the funds will be allocated to States based on the number of public assistance recipients and 50 percent to States based on the number of children in families with incomes below the poverty line. However, all Head Start programs would be held baseless at the fiscal year 1975 funding level.

I might also note that the conferees fully expect this fiscal year's appropriation to be distributed in such a manner as to take into account cost of living increases.

December 19, 1974

FOLLOW THROUGH

The bill also consolidates the legislative authority for Follow Through programs in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and extends its authorization through fiscal year 1977. Follow Through has been an effective program which has shown tremendous promise in creating new and exciting methods that aid in the continued development of children in the first three grades of elementary school. The conference committee specifically rejects the suggestion that Follow Through has outlived its usefulness and should be phased out.

COMMUNITY ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

The conference agreement includes a strong commitment to the continuation of community economic development, and to its independence and vitality, either within an independent agency or, under the reorganization procedure outlined above, as an independent administration within the Department of Commerce.

Programs conducted by the Community Economic Development Corporation and other self-help entities combine business development efforts with job training and employment, social services programs, and a wide variety of other efforts reflective of community needs. These programs are designed to be comprehensive responses to the needs of all persons living in communities or areas with concentrations or substantial numbers of low-income persons. They include, but are not to be limited to, business enterprises; and the persons served include, but are not to be limited to, minorities.

Because of this comprehensive approach, the conference agreement maintains the autonomy and independence of this program as a complement to self-help programs such as those sponsored by the Office of Minority Business Enterprise, the Small Business Administration, and other such administrative entities. It is the intent of Congress that the programs funded under this title be administered separately, in order to insure their administrative autonomy and to maintain a clear distinction between minority entrepreneur programs and community economic development efforts—the former helping minority individuals to become independent entrepreneurs, whereas the latter is designed to make an appreciable impact through a comprehensive approach on the social and economic conditions of an entire community.

SENIOR OPPORTUNITIES AND SERVICES

The senior opportunities and services program—SOS—continued by this legislation was first established in 1967 to identify and meet the needs of the elderly poor—persons above the age of 60—in several key areas. One of the priority goals of the program is to provide older Americans with effective referral to existing health, welfare, employment, housing, legal, consumer, transportation, education, and other services.

The value and worth of SOS has been demonstrated time and time again. For many aged poor, the wide array of services has enabled them to live independently in their own homes and in dignity. Additionally, the program has succeeded in improving the conditions of the elderly poor in many other ways, including economical, psychological, nutritional, medical, and others.

NATIVE AMERICAN PROGRAM

The Native American program—NAP—was transferred from the Office of Economic Opportunity to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare under a delegation arrangement in fiscal year 1974. It applies innovative approaches to deal with the special needs of Indians and Alaska Natives, and provides for a better focusing of available resources to enable them to attain economic self-sufficiency.

The program assists Native Americans, acting through their instruments of self-government, to establish their own programmatic and funding priorities and to provide direction to institutions and programs affecting their daily lives. A major element of Native American projects is overcoming the problems of poverty. Eighty percent of reservation residents are poor. Approximately 75 percent of Native Americans not living on reservations are poor. Assistance under the Native American program is provided through grants or contracts to tribal councils or other public or private non-profit agencies off reservations. The amount of the basic grants to reservations is based on the number of poor residents. Discretionary money is also available for short-term fundings to tribal councils or other grantees. The primary purposes of these grants and contracts include:

First, strengthening of tribal government aimed at increasing the capability of reservation Indians to perform services now provided by non-Indian organization;

Second, support of a range of services to meet individual and family needs;

Third, support for operation of urban centers serving Indian people living off reservations; and Fourth, funding to encourage self-help and community economic development efforts.

The basic purpose of the Native American program is to increase the economic and social service self-sufficiency of the Indian people. This is in line with the whole concept of self-determination which has as its main function to build the capacity of tribal governments and off-reservation Indians to make decisions and to manage programs.

ASSISTANCE FOR MIGRANT AND SEASONAL FARMWORKERS

In view of the demonstrated effectiveness of programs operated under title III-B of the Economic Opportunity Act—EOA—of 1964 the conference agreement continues the authorization of funding for migrant and seasonal farmworker programs with respect to nonmanpower activities.

These programs include educational and developmental programs needed by farmworkers to ready them for employment or for vocational training. These developmental and education programs are priority activities of the 64 farmworker programs now functioning across the country.

In addition to basic education, such activities as consumer training, nutrition and health courses, child care and other supportive services, referrals, and related services, are all specifically authorized under these provisions. "Developmental programs" are those programs which are structured to permit economic, social, and cultural progress on the part of the farmworkers as a necessary prerequisite to their entrance into full-time employment or training. Developmental programs aim at the total needs of farmworkers and their families once education has been received. These programs are designed to augment the self-respect and confidence awakened through education by permitting farmworkers to participate in socioeconomic development programs.

COMMUNITY PARTNERSHIP AGREEMENTS

The conference agreement includes new legislative authority for community partnership agreements.

This new authority is designed to provide the resources and mechanism to encourage State and local governments to participate more fully in antipoverty efforts in conjunction with community action and similar agencies, thus forging creative partnerships to meet additional needs.

Under the new authority, the Director may provide financial assistance for programs and activities—of the type authorized under title II of the Economic Opportunity Act generally. Funds available to areas under the new authority will be in addition to local initiative funds. State and local funds will be matched dollar for dollar with Federal funds.

The bill also establishes an Intergovernmental Advisory Council on Community Services, including representatives of State and local governments and community action agencies to act as a catalyst in the formulation of such agreements.

State and local governmental agencies and community action agencies may use this new authority for cooperative efforts to deal with the effect of the economic crisis on the poor—such as authorized under the emergency energy conservation services program—as well as other purposes upon which they agree.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Other provisions of the conference agreement include Emergency Energy Conservation Services, designed to enable low-income individuals and families and others, to participate in energy conservation programs designed to lessen the impact of the energy crisis on such persons. This includes such activities as winterization of old or substandard dwellings, special transportation activities, and similar functions. In addition, the summer youth recreation program is designed to provide recreation opportunities for low-income children during the summer months. This authority is designed to provide for continuation of a program similar to the Neighborhood Youth Corps summer recreation program conducted previously under the general authority of the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962, repealed by the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1973, as well as the Economic Opportunity Act.

December 19, 1974

Mr. President, the poor are the big losers in our struggle against worsening economic conditions. On the one hand, their meager incomes are demolished by the skyrocketing cost of living. On the other hand, they are virtually always the first to be demoted or tossed out of work when recession comes. The "substitution effect" that eases the economic crunch for most families simply does not function for the 25 million people living below the poverty line. If the demand for unskilled labor slows, there are no less desirable jobs around; if the cost of lower-priced meat rises, then all meat simply disappears from the table.

The war on poverty has, in recent years, become a continual struggle with those who would put an end to Federal antipoverty efforts. Passage of this conference agreement today and the affixing of the President's signature will not necessarily end that struggle. This bill is necessarily a compromise, and as such it embodies many of the better and weaker points of a compromise. But I believe it provides us a base on which we can for now put to rest the instability that has recently attended the question of the continuation of these programs—and a basis for the development once again of a solid antipoverty program in the course of the months and years ahead. While certain administrative arrangements remain to be settled next year, at least local people can be assured of continued Federal assistance for their programs.

Mr. President, I wish to thank the members of the majority and minority staff, as well as the minority members of the conference, and of course the majority conferees, for their cooperation in working out what I think was a very good and important compromise on the issues between the two Houses, as well as to thank all of them for the monumental amount of work that was put into developing the bill, and the nearly all night work that was put in by the staff in getting the conference report ready on such short notice. I call attention to the work into the early hours of this morning by Blair Crownover of the Senate Legislative Council's office who worked with Richard Johnson and Jon Shirk of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee staff to get this report ready for consideration today, in cooperation with the staff of the House Education and Labor Committee. On this conference agreement, Bill Cable and Susan Grayson of the House Education and Labor Committee staff worked with Senate staff to produce the conference report quickly.

On the public service jobs conference report we passed yesterday, Austin Sullivan of the House Education and Labor Committee provided to all of the conferees valuable assistance as he also did on the pending poverty conference report. In addition, Larry Gage of the Senate Poverty Subcommittee staff was helpful in working together with the House committee staff on the joint exploratory report of the conferees. Sid Johnson of Senator MONDALE's staff as well as Lisa Walker, Nik Edes, and Don Elisberg of Senator WILLIAMS' staff and Mark Schneider of Senator KENNEDY's staff, also deserve our special appreciation for their contributions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May we have order in the Senate? Too much conversation is going on in the Chamber. Members cannot hear the report on the conference. Will the Senate come to order?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I join Senator NELSON in urging the Senate to adopt this report, and I join him in commending the members of the staff on both sides, led by Dick Johnson on the Democratic side with substantial assistance from Jon Steinberg, and John Scales on the Republican side, who worked far beyond the call of duty in getting the conference report ready and giving us the various options on the issues.

In essence, Mr. President, the purpose of the agreement is to hold matters pretty much in status quo, and after March 15 to give the President the opportunity, if he wishes to, to reorganize the program by putting the various community action elements of it into HEW and the community development aspects into the Department of Commerce, each under separate organizations so there would be somebody in charge and autonomy may be provided.

In order to reject the President's reorganization, it would take a joint resolution of both Houses, subject to Presidential signature, and which would then be subject to override by the Congress. That is obviously very unusual and very tough to do.

But between the House and Senate, and in order to have the best elements of the program, the Senate conferees were forced to compromise.

We did, however, set certain conditions upon what that reorganization would accomplish, so as to save, as I said, the hard plan elements of the program.

It is a good report, considering the very adamant position of the House; it is a bad report considering the position of many community action and similar groups who felt very, very strongly—and I shared their feelings—that at worst either House should be able to reject, as is done in normal reorganization plans, any reorganization proposal submitted by the President by vote of either House.

This is absolutely essential legislation to those in the poverty syndrome—totaling 24 million Americans—and those who are on the edge of poverty, are to face this winter's energy and economic hardships with some sustenance and, over the longer term, find their way out or keep out of the poverty category.

It is axiomatic that the poor are hit most both by inflation and recession.

Just yesterday, after House action, the Senate approved and sent to the President the conference report on H.R. 16596, the Emergency Job and Unemployment Assistance Act of 1974, to deal with the recession aspect of the problem—through the creation of 330,000 transitional public service jobs, special unemployment assistance to an estimated 3 million persons not previously covered under Federal-State unemployment insurance systems, and a special job generating public works adjunct program; we are hopeful that that bill soon will be signed into law.

This conference report relates to the inflation aspect, as well as the recession elements by providing for the continuation of the mechanisms, as we now know them, at the Federal and "grass-roots" levels designed to meet the needs of the poor, while making possible change in terms of administration in the future.

To that end of maintaining stability and providing for change, the major elements of the conference agreement are as follows:

First, the conference agreement would extend the basic authorizations, for anti-poverty programs for 3 years, authorizing generally "such sums as may be necessary" for each of the fiscal years 1975, 1976, and 1977. The authorization of appropriations expired last June, but the programs have been continued to date under continuing resolutions.

Importantly, under a provision I offered, the authority would be extended for an additional fiscal year, through fiscal year 1978, if the Congress did not act on extension; this would provide additional stability that we have never had since the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 was enacted, since we have been plugging along on 2, and only sometimes 3-year extensions.

Second, as I indicated generally upon enactment, the Office of Economic Opportunity—the key advocate for the poor in the Federal establishment—would be renamed the Community Services Administration and made independent, reflecting the broadened programmatic emphasis which I shall describe in more detail.

The Community Services Administration would continue as an independent agency of the Federal Government for the 3-years—or as the case may be 4 years, continuing to administer community action, community economic development and other key programs now conducted by OEO.

However, to permit change in terms of administration, and not bind the hands of the Executive, the conference agreement provides that at any time after March 15, 1975, the President may submit a reorganization plan providing: First, for the establishment of the Community Services Administration as a separate office in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, headed by a Director appointed by the President, subject to advice and consent of the Senate, responsible for community action and related programs; second, and for the establishment in the Department of Commerce of a separate Community Economic Development Administration, to conduct community economic development programs, similarly headed by a Director appointed by the President, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate. In both cases, the units are to be autonomous; in particular I note that in the case of community economic development, the Community Economic Development Administration is to be separate from the Office of Minority Business Enterprise.

If the President chooses to submit such a plan—and he may decide not to—then the plan would become law unless a joint resolution disapproving the plan becomes law.

The Congress would have 60 days from the date of submission of the reorganization plan in which to pass a joint resolution. As Members know, a joint resolution, like a bill, would have to be passed by a majority in both Houses.

If the President chose to veto such a joint resolution, then the Congress could proceed as in the usual case to attempt to override the veto by a two-thirds vote of each House.

This formula represents a basic compromise—very much argued on both sides—between the House bill which provided for the immediate establishment of community action programs in a "Community Services Administration" in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and community economic development programs in the Department of Commerce; and the Senate-passed bill, which permitted the President to submit a reorganization plan, which, following the ordinary reorganization procedures, could have been disapproved by a majority vote in either House.

This was the key issue in conference and very hard fought on both sides. I and a number of other Senate conferees had urged a compromise under which a concurrent resolution could have defeated a reorganization plan by a two-thirds vote.

But in the interests of a bill having a chance of becoming law in this Congress, we agreed to the joint resolution procedure.

Third, the conference agreement provides for continuation of the present 80 percent Federal matching share for community action agencies and programs through fiscal year 1975; for fiscal year 1976, the Federal share would decline to 75 percent in the case of community action agencies receiving Federal assistance from the administration in an amount less than $300,000 and 70 percent for the remainder of the agencies; in fiscal year 1977, the Federal matching share for all agencies and programs would be 60 percent.

The Senate bill had maintained 80 percent matching through the 3 years of the act, while the House bill provided for across-the-board declines to 70 percent in fiscal year 1976 and 60 percent in fiscal year 1977.

The compromise is designed to give smaller community action agencies and programs—predominately in rural areas—more time to obtain greater financial support from State and local government.

Most crucially, the Director of the Community Services Administration—irrespective of whether it continues as a separate agency or is lodged in HEW—has the authority to provide Federal assistance in excess of the stated percentages to further the purposes of the community action title.

We anticipate, exceeding oversight by the two principal committees—the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and the House Committee on Education and Labor—to watch very closely the effect of the decline in the Federal matching percentage and the exercise of the director's authority to waive these requirements so as to insure that worthwhile agencies and programs do not "spin out" of existence under this formulation.

Fourth, the conference agreement provides for the immediate establishment in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare of the Head Start and Follow Through programs and certain other activities, which are conducted by that agency now pursuant to delegation and other agreements with OEO.

Fifth, the conference agreement makes important additions to the antipoverty law immediately upon enactment, including:

A new "special emphasis" program for emergency energy conservation services designed to enable low-income individuals and families and others to participate in energy conservation programs designed to lessen the impact of the energy crisis on such persons. This incorporates essentially the provisions of S. 3051, the Emergency Energy Conservation Economic Opportunity Amendments of 1974, which I introduced on February 25, with 16 other Senators.

A "special emphasis" authority for "summer youth recreation programs," designed to provide recreation opportunities for low-income children during the summer months. I had included this provision in S. 3798, to provide for continuation of the summer youth recreation program as an adjunct to the summer youth jobs program, which is now authorized under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1973.

A new authority for community partnership programs, representing a compromise between the authority which I had included in S. 3798, and a special "incentive grants" program contained in the House bill. Under this new authority, 50 percent Federal matching would be available for programs of Community Action agencies conducted in conjunction with State and local government, with an authorization of $50 million for this fiscal year and "such sums" thereafter.

An expanded provision for title VII, community economic development, to insure greater resources for community economic development corporations and similar entities, with a basic authorization of $39 million for this fiscal year, and "such sums" thereafter. Under title VII as amended, we hope to build with increased resources upon the experience under the "special impact" program, title I-D of the act, which I coauthored with the late Senator Robert Kennedy, and title VII of the present law which I coauthored with Senator Edward Kennedy.

Mr. President, in closing, I wish to note that while we have no assurances from the President that this bill will become law, I and other members of the minority on both sides of the conference table, have recommended that the President sign the conference agreement.

I urge the Senate to approve the conference agreement so that after the House acts, it may go to the President and become law, so that the commitment entered into by the executive and the legislative branches under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964—to be implemented as I have outlined under the conference agreement—may be maintained in the interests of the poor.

Mr. President, the only signature that is not on the report is that of Senator DOMINICK, of Colorado. That is rather a credit to him because of his characteristic integrity. As he was not able to participate in the discussions and debates, he refrained from taking any position on the conference report.

It also gives me an opportunity, Mr. President, to again express how much I will personally miss him and his wise guidance and counsel as my friend and colleague sitting next to me as the next ranking on this particular committee.

Mr. President, finally, I wish to note the names of Members of the Senate who joined with me, Senator KENNEDY, Senator DOLE, and Senator JOHNSTON, in introducing on July 23, 1974, S. 3798, the Economic Opportunity and Community Partnership Act of 1974, thus expressing strong support for continuation of a separate antipoverty agency, and continued support for Federal funding for community action programs. They are Senators ABOUREZK, BAYH, BROOKE, CASE, CLARK, CRANSTON, GRAVEL, HART, HASKELL, HATFIELD, HATHAWAY, HOLLINGS, HUMPHREY, LONG, MATIAS, MCGEE, MCGOVERN, MCINTYRE, METZENBAUM, MONDALE, MOSS, MUSKIE, PASTORE, PELL, PERCY, RANDOLPH, RIBICOFF, HUGH SCOTT, TUNNEY, and WILLIAMS.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise to reluctantly speak in favor of the conference report on H.R. 14449, the legislation extending the Economic Opportunity Act for 3 years.

As one who has endorsed and fought for a separate independent antipoverty agency, I opposed the compromise with in the conference report which will permit the President to submit a reorganization plan and give the Congress very little chance to override that plan. Given the administration disposition—inherited from the previous administration and reiterated during the conference—it appears almost certain that the President will opt for an effort to abolish the independent successor to OEO which we have established, the Community Services Administration.

I had favored retaining the Senate language which would have followed the Reorganization Act structure permitting a single House to override the plan. Now, a joint resolution will be necessary, with the possibility of having to override a veto as well.

The conference agreement does provide that this one-time only reorganization plan is the only way for transfer of programs to take place. It thus assures that sections 221 and 235 and titles I, II, III-B, VI, VII and IX cannot be delegated either before or after a reorganization plan decision. Thus, if the Congress successfully disapproves of the reorganization plan, the independent agency will remain in effect for the remainder of the act.

I am pleased that the conferees retained most of the Senate provisions concerning the community economic development program operation. That program I believe should be expanded and developed.

Also, I am pleased that the limitations on the kind of transfer possible, even through a reorganization plan, will insure independent entities for a community action administration within the Department of HEW and an independent entity within the Department of Commerce. In these agencies, if we are unsuccessful in overriding a Presidential veto, they will retain the independent operation that is essential to their success. The Director of these Administrations will report directly to the relevant Secretary, without any officer interposing himself. This will insure that the program director will be in full control of all aspects of the program and with respect to regulations or any other program function by activity he will not be under the control of an assistant secretary or any other official other than the Secretary.

In addition, I am disturbed that the House provisions, with some exceptions for small community action agencies, were substantially adopted reducing the available Federal share of support from its current 80 to 60 percent in the final year of the bill. A waiver is authorized which I hope will be liberally used, particularly for such urban programs as Boston which clearly have funding difficulties.

However, I do want to emphasize that the bill does at least prevent the immediate abolition of an independent antipoverty agency. It also does insure the integrity of the existing OEO programs. It does provide for the transfer of the nonmanpower migrant programs away from the Labor Department where they were atrophying to the antipoverty agency. It does provide for an expansion of the Head Start program. It does provide for a new community partnership incentive program for community action agencies and local and State government.

And it does provide for the continuation and authorization of several new innovative programs.

For that reason, I signed the conference report and will vote for the measure today. I urge its adoption and Presidential signature.

Finally, I want to commend the chairman, Senator NELSON, and Senator JAVITS, the ranking minority member, Senator CRANSTON and the other members of the subcommittee for their long and diligent work on this legislation. Once more, they have displayed commitment and concern for the interests of the poor of this land. Also, I want to commend the staff who worked long into night to complete this legislation.

The conference report was agreed to. Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise in support of the pending measure, the conference report on Head Start, Economic Opportunity, and Community Partnership Act of 1974.

I congratulate the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON) for his vigorous efforts in developing, and moving so quickly through conference this important legislation. As chairman of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee's Subcommittee on Employment, Poverty, and Migratory Labor, on which I serve, Senator NELSON has brought the members of the committee together behind this comprehensive measure, and helped craft creative compromises among a number of points of view. The leadership and skill of Senator NELSON as well as that of the chairman of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee Mr. WILLIAMS, the Committee ranking minority member, the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), and the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) were instrumental in bringing about a speedy resolution of the differences between the House and the Senate proposals for extending programs under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

INTRODUCTION

Mr. President, the revelation that this Nation is experiencing its highest unemployment rate in 13 years was only the most recent indication of the severity of the economic situation confronting us right now. More than 6 million people are out of work; the prices of necessities, such as food, housing, and medical care, continue to soar, and most distressing—there is no relief in sight.

Our worsening economy is creating grave difficulties for all Americans, but there is no question that among those being most severely and most devastatingly affected are, according to some estimates, as many as 34 million poor people, who represent as much as 16 percent of this Nation's population. Of further serious consequence, is the fact that our depressed economic situation threatens to push many more Americans below the poverty level.

Mr. President, it was in this context that the Senate approved S. 4178 last Friday, December 13, 1974, and I believe, will act promptly and responsibly in approving the measure ordered reported from conference yesterday.

The bleak situation I have described demanded our attention and immediate action, and clearly revealed the necessity for the continuation of the many valuable programs operated under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

Although I believe we all recognize the wisdom of redesigning or even ending programs that fail to live up to their promises, I believe the conference agreement clearly demonstrates our belief that successful antipoverty programs, such as Community Action and Head Start, must be maintained with the strength and vitality necessary to meet effectively the essential needs of the poor.

Community action agencies, in particular, have been at the very heart of the war on poverty in providing poor people with the opportunity to begin to help themselves. Head Start and Follow Through also have been most effective in providing comprehensive health, education, nutrition, social, and other services to economically disadvantaged children and their families.

Mr. President, providing for the needs of poor people is a responsibility we must meet. At the August inaugural hearings of the Senate Committee on the Budget, on which I am privileged to serve, we heard testimony from two impressive authorities, who often have conflicting views: the Honorable Arthur F. Burns, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System; and Prof. Walter W. Heller, of the University of Minnesota, former Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers. Although much of their testimony focused on whether or not there was a need for significant cuts in the fiscal year 1975 budget for Federal Government spending, they, in essence, both agreed that there was a special need to compensate those persons most severely affected by our Nation's economic situation. Chairman Burns said there was a great need for compensatory increases in Federal spending for certain programs, and he went on to say we must ameliorate the impact which inflation has already had on certain groups in our society.

Professor Heller, who probably would define this group of inflation victims more broadly than Chairman Burns, made the same point and termed such "amelioration" as "reparations" for the sacrifices and hardships which these groups of individuals have experienced at the hands of our devastating inflation rate.

Mr. President, poor people are among those who have suffered the most, and now, more than ever, poverty programs must be expanded and strengthened to meet their needs.

MAJOR PROVISIONS OF THE CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. President, although I favored an outright continuation of the existing Office of Economic Opportunity structure, I am pleased that the bill we have reported from conference contains substantially the Senate provision placing responsibility for proposing a transfer to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare on the President—subject to disapproval by joint resolution by both Houses of Congress—which will insure an extension of OEO's independent status as the new Community Services Administration for at least another half-year.

This measure provides for the continuation of programs presently authorized under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, as amended, including the community action program, and immediately establishes a new independent Community Services Administration to administer these programs as the successor agency to the Office of Economic Opportunity.

Under the conference report, the independent Community Services Administration would be continued until at least June 15, 1975. At any time after March 15, 1975, the President may submit—one time only—a reorganization plan to transfer—not earlier than 90 days after he submits the plan—community action and other programs to an independent Community Services Administration in HEW and community economic development programs to a new independent Community Economic Development Administration in the Department of Commerce. Both Houses of Congress would have to disapprove such a reorganization plan by joint resolution within 60 days, and if the President vetoes this joint resolution, the Congress could override the veto by a two-thirds vote in both Houses.

If the reorganization plan should be defeated, Mr. President, then the Community Services Administration would continue as an independent agency in the executive branch thereafter.

Under a provision I first originated and advocated in conference, the vote on the resolution would be guaranteed in both Houses, under the Reorganization Act procedures in chapter 9 of title V, United States Code.

The bill further provides new legislative authority for Head Start with a new nationwide allocation formula for funding Follow Through and Native American programs in HEW. And although I would have much preferred the 80-percent Federal, 20-percent across-the-board local share of costs for CAP's which was contained in the Senate bill, the bill as reported from conference retains this 80/20 cost share for the first year for CAP's receiving under $300,000. In the second year, this would be reduced to 75/25, and in the third year, 70/30. Importantly, the Director may approve in excess of these amounts if he determines, in accordance with objective regulations, that this would be appropriate.

The bill as passed by the Senate also contained a provision I authored, in section 1102(d) of the new title XI, which earmarked, out of all funds allocated for research, demonstration, and pilot projects, 25 percent of these funds to be made available for Community Action programs to carry out such projects. This was designed to give these CAP agencies some versatile funds with which they could implement new designs and directions in antipoverty programs.

The conference agreement concerns the thrust of this provision by requiring that the CSA Director be given due consideration to CAP's requests for research and demonstration funding.

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF PROGRAMS

Mr. President, in addition to Community Action, Head Start, and Follow Through, I particularly am gratified that a number of important programs would be continued by this measure.

DESIGN AND PLANNING ASSISTANCE

Community-based design and planning organizations would continue to receive financial assistance for technical assistance and professional architectural and related services. This is a special provision—section 226—which I authored in the Economic Opportunity Amendments of 1972, Public Law 92-424.

CONSUMER ACTION AND COOPERATIVE PROGRAMS

This program was designed to aid low-income individuals and groups in enforcing consumer rights, and to protect such individuals and groups against unfair or discriminatory trade and commercial practices by providing assistance with the development and operation of consumer action, advocacy, and cooperative programs, credit resources development programs, consumer protection, and education programs. These programs—under section 228 which I also authored in Public Law 92-424—will also be continued under the committee bill.

SENIOR OPPORTUNITIES AND SERVICES

This program is designed to meet some of the special, unmet needs of elderly persons, particularly health, employment, housing, consumer, and welfare.

RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATION

In addition to seeking information concerning the causes of poverty, research activities provide for the development of workable models and innovative programs that help Federal, State, and local agencies to meet the needs of the poor.

MIGRANT AND SEASONAL FARMWORKERS

The conference agreement provides that the Director shall coordinate programs for migrant and seasonal farmworkers with other Federal programs designed to assist or serve such farmworkers. Additionally, the Director is required to give special consideration to any public or private nonprofit agency which has previously received assistance for the provision of services for migrant and other seasonally employed farmworkers and their families.

CHILDREN WITH LIMITED ENGLISH-SPEAKING ABILITY

Importantly, the conference report provides that, in administering Head Start and Follow Through programs, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare do all he can to meet the special needs of Indian and migrant children, and the joint explanatory statement stresses that the Secretary shall be especially sensitive to the needs of children with limited English-speaking ability in order to enhance the effect of these programs on these children. I was glad that these matters were resolved as I proposed in the conference.

EMERGENCY ENERGY CONSERVATION PROGRAM

I was pleased that the bulk of the Senate amendment establishing an emergency energy conservation program to lessen the impact of the high cost of energy for low-income individuals was retained in the conference report. The conference agreement requires the Director of the Community Services Administration to consult with the Administrator of the Federal Energy Agency and other appropriate departments and agencies prior to establishing the procedures to carry out the purposes of this program.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, in closing I would like to stress that the poverty programs discussed above, and others contained in the reported bill, have demonstrated their effectiveness in helping to meet the needs of the poor. In "An Analysis of the Economic Impact of a Community Action Agency," prepared by the Technical Assistance Division of the California State Office of Economic Opportunity, the introduction states—

Because bad news makes news, the positive and vital contributions made by Community Action Agencies may have been lost or have gone virtually unnoticed.

I can assure you, Mr. President, the contribution of poverty programs do not go unnoticed by one very large group of people—the tens of millions of poor people, who would have no measure of relief at all, if these programs did not exist.

The antipoverty program does not, Mr. President, come anywhere near meeting all our concerns and all our responsibilities toward helping poor persons improve their lives and opportunities. But it is an important symbol of our resolution to continue to fight—and hopefully win—the war on poverty, and I believe we are morally obliged to keep it going—to keep faith with the poor—by passing this reasonable measure. In truth, we should be doing much, much more.

I urge adoption of the conference report and pray that the President, in the spirit which should animate this season, will sign this bill as a fair and hopeful compromise measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further discussion?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

SENATE RESOLUTION 468—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE DISAPPROVING THE RECENT STEEL PRICE INCREASE

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a Senate resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILES). The resolution will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Whereas United States Steel has announced price increases averaging 8 to 10 percent on two thirds of steel items produced by the Company.

Whereas steel prices of major companies including U.S. Steel were increased by an average of 23 percent last spring.

Whereas U.S. Steel has indicated it will persist in these price increases even though it has not yet given President Ford the justification for these price increases that he has requested.

Whereas for the first nine months of 1974 U.S. Steel's profits increased by 109.4 percent over the first nine months of 1973.

Whereas an increase in the price of steel will have a deleterious effect on the already sagging auto and construction industries.

Whereas an increase in the price of steel will place upward pressure on many consumer prices. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Council on Wage and Price Stability be requested to hold hearings on both the price increase announced by U.S. Steel and price increases that have been put into effect by other steel producers since July 1, 1974. Be it

Resolved, That the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission be requested to investigate the steel industry to determine whether the industry is guilty of violations of Antitrust Laws; be it therefore

Resolved, That U.S. Steel specifically and the remainder of the Steel industry generally be notified that it is the strong desire of the U.S. Senate that no increase in the price of steel be put into effect until the recommended hearings of the Council on Wage and Price Stability have been held and the Council's report has been made; and, finally, be it

Resolved, That the President use the full power of his Office to roll-back the totally unjustified and unconscionable increases in steel prices announced by the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I have introduced today a Senate resolution expressing displeasure at the recent announcement of increases in prices by the United States Steel Corp., and, furthermore, urging the President to use the powers of his office to persuade United States Steel to withdraw its schedule of increases.

I realize the hour is late for us here in the 93d Congress. But, although we will adjourn this week, the economy will not adjourn; the unemployment lines will not adjourn; the food stamp windows will not adjourn; and the American people will not adjourn until January 14 of next year when the 94th Congress is scheduled to convene.

I am joined in the resolution by my able colleagues, Senators ABOWEZEK, CHILES, PROXMIER, HUDDLESTON, and HUGHES.

Mr. President, the announcement by United States Steel is an irresponsible action. According to reports I have read, the increases will average between 8 and 10 percent on two-thirds of the steel items it produces, although the Wall Street Journal has reported the increases will range "up to at least 11.6 percent on some major items." The Wall Street Journal further has reported that the White House received little or no advance warning that the increases were coming.

The newspaper said that United States Steel is raising the price of carbon steel plate $20 a ton to $247 a ton, the same price currently being charged by Armco Steel Corp., but it is $10 a ton more than is being charged by six other major steel producers.

The Journal said that although United States Steel asserts it is merely playing "catchup" in terms of prices compared to that charged by other producers, that, in addition to carbon steel plate differential, its new price for standard structural steel would be $241 a ton, while Bethlehem Steel Corp., the second largest steelmaker, is charging $6 less.

The impact of the price increases by United States Steel will not be slight. Steelmaking is a basic industry and a significant increase by the giant of them all—United States Steel is the biggest—will have an upward rippling effect upon prices in other sectors of the economy.

Let us remember, Mr. President, 12 years ago when the President of the United States raised enough hell after United States Steel and other producers had raised prices that these hikes were rolled back. This was done, as I read the history of the episode, because of a persisting deficit in our balance of international payments and a corresponding need for domestic price stability.

In my opinion, a similar action is called for today. President Ford should take United States Steel by the scruff of its corporate neck and wring an agreement out of it for a rollback. I do note that the President has already expressed, according to the Washington Post, "concern and disappointment" over the increases and ordered the Wage-Price

Stabilization Council to "obtain a justification in writing from United States Steel." This step, in my opinion, is not even "de minimus," as we lawyers say, and the President is a law school graduate.

Now, of course, we know that the Council does not have authority to block price increases—or wage increases, for that matter. The Council cannot even compel companies—or unions—to supply information.

It may hold hearings and make non-binding recommendations. The President's press spokesman, as quoted by the Washington Star-News, conceded that the Council's influence depends largely on "enlisting public opinion" against excessive price—or wage—increase. This is why, in my opinion, the President should do more than ask the Council to "act." He, himself, should directly talk to the chairman of the board of United States Steel—as President Kennedy talked to Roger Blough 12 years ago—and persuade him to have the price increases rescinded. President Ford should, if he has not done so already, also ask other steel companies not to fall in line with United States Steel and raise prices.

The President should point out that United States Steel, prior to this latest increase, announced, I believe, December 16, had already raised the price of its products by almost one-quarter in less than 3 months this spring and summer. As Senator PROXMIER also has pointed out, in the last year the steel industry has raised prices by more than 40 percent, while its costs rose at only half that rate.

Moody's shows that interim earnings of United States Steel have increased markedly just during the first three quarters of calendar 1974: for the first quarter, 1.65; for the second, 2.96; and for the third, ending September 30, a total of 3.95. Net income, it reports, totaled during the first 9 months of this year $463.4 million—an increase of 109.4 percent, or more than double above the corresponding 9 months of last year.

Mr. President, I would like to point out that if there had occurred, for example, an irresponsible collective-bargaining contract agreement involving a labor union or an irresponsible strike by a labor union in these difficult economic times I would take a critical view similar to that I am now taking toward United States Steel.

Mr. President, the Ford administration's policy on inflation seems to be in the nature of a "punt and a prayer" one.

In any event, lapel buttons at the White House to the contrary, it's a "no win" policy to date, or, to reverse the initials and stand them on their head, as someone has done, it stands for NIM—"nothing in mind."

I hope the Senate will agree to this resolution by which we will be telling the American people that, although this, the 93d Congress is about to adjourn, its Members are adjourning their interest in the economic well-being of our Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I rise reluctantly to object for the simple reason that I am sure that no committee has yet heard any evidence as to why these prices may have been raised. I do not know whether they are justified or not.

I believe it would not be truly responsible for us to express a judgment based on a price report which has come to our attention through the press. Under the circumstances, I reluctantly object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

DISPOSAL OF EXCESS AND SURPLUS PROPERTY IN AMERICAN SAMOA, GUAM, AND THE TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Government Operations, I report the bill H.R. 5264, to amend section 3(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, with respect to American Samoa, Guam, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5264) to amend section 3(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, with respect to American Samoa, Guam, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, this bill has been passed by the House and reported to the Senate by the Senate Government Operations Committee. It is a very simple bill. All it does is to make some Samoa, Guam, and the trust territory entitled to come under the Surplus Property Act, just like the 50 States, the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico. I ask the Senate to pass this bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN SELF-DETERMINATION AND EDUCATION ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 1017.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILES) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1017) to promote maximum Indian participation in the government and education of the Indian people; to provide for the full participation of Indian tribes in programs and services conducted by the Federal Government for Indians and to encourage the development of the human resources of the Indian people; to establish a program of assistance to upgrade Indian education; to support the right of Indian citizens to control their own educational activities; to train professionals in Indian education; to establish an Indian youth intern program; and for other purposes, as follows:

(1) Strike out all after line 2 on page 1, over to and including line 24 on page 15, and insert:
That this Act may be cited as the "Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act".

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress, after careful review of the Federal Government's historical and special legal relationship with, and resulting responsibilities to, American Indian people, finds that—

(1) the prolonged Federal domination of Indian service programs has served to retard rather than enhance the progress of Indian people and their communities by depriving Indians of the full opportunity to develop leadership skills crucial to the realization of self-government, and has denied to the Indian people an effective voice in the planning and implementation of programs for the benefit of Indians which are responsive to the true needs of Indian communities; and

(2) the Indian people will never surrender their desire to control their relationships both among themselves and with non-Indian governments, organizations, and persons.

(b) The Congress further finds that—
(1) true self-determination in any society of people is dependent upon an educational process which will insure the development of qualified people to fulfill meaningful leadership roles;

(2) the Federal responsibility for and assistance to education of Indian children has not effected the desired level of educational achievement or created the diverse opportunities and personal satisfaction which education can and should provide; and

(3) parental and community control of the educational process is of crucial importance to the Indian people.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 3. (a) The Congress hereby recognizes the obligation of the United States to respond to the strong expression of the Indian people for self-determination by assuring maximum Indian participation in the direction of educational as well as other Federal services to Indian communities so as to render such services more responsive to the needs and desires of those communities.

(b) The Congress declares its commitment to the maintenance of the Federal Government's unique and continuing relationship with and responsibility to the Indian people through the establishment of a meaningful Indian self-determination policy which will permit an orderly transition from Federal domination of programs for and services to Indians to effective and meaningful participation by the Indian people in the planning, conduct, and administration of those programs and services.

(c) The Congress declares that a major national goal of the United States is to provide the quantity and quality of educational services and opportunities which will permit Indian children to compete and excel in the life areas of their choice, and to achieve the measure of self-determination essential to their social and economic well-being.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this Act, the term—

(a) "Indian" means a person who is a member of an Indian tribe;

(b) "Indian tribe" means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community, including any Alaska Native village or regional or village corporation as defined in or established pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (85 Stat. 688) which is recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians;

(c) "Tribal organization" means the recognized governing body of any Indian tribe; any legally established organization of Indians which is controlled, sanctioned, or chartered by such governing body or which is democratically elected by the adult members of the Indian community to be served by such organization and which includes the maximum participation of Indians in all phases of its activities: Provided, That in any case where a contract is let or grant made to an organization to perform services benefitting more than one Indian tribe, the approval of each such Indian tribe shall be a prerequisite to the letting or making of such contract or grant;

(d) "Secretary", unless otherwise designated, means the Secretary of the Interior;

(f) "State education agency" means the State board of education or other agency or officer primarily responsible for supervision by the State of public elementary and secondary schools, or, if there is no such officer or agency, an officer or agency designated by the Governor or by State law.

REPORTING AND AUDIT REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 5. (a) Each recipient of Federal financial assistance from the Secretary of Interior or the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, under this Act, shall keep such records as the appropriate Secretary shall prescribe, including records which fully disclose the amount and disposition by such recipient of the proceeds of such assistance, the cost of the project or undertaking in connection with which such assistance is given or used, the amount of that portion of the cost of the project or undertaking supplied by other sources, and such other records as will facilitate an effective audit.

(b) The Comptroller General and the appropriate Secretary, or any of their duly authorized representatives, shall, until the expiration of three years after completion of the project or undertaking referred to in the preceding subsection of this section, have access (for the purpose of audit and examination) to any books, documents, papers, and records of such recipients which in the opinion of the Comptroller General or the appropriate Secretary may be related or pertinent to the grants, contracts, subcontracts, subgrants, or other arrangements referred to in the preceding subsection.

(c) Each recipient of Federal financial assistance referred to in subsection (a) of this section shall make such reports and information available to the Indian people served or represented by such recipient as and in a manner determined to be adequate by the appropriate Secretary.

(d) Any funds paid to a financial assistance recipient referred to in subsection (a) of this section and not expended or used for the purposes for which paid shall be repaid to the Treasury of the United States.

PENALTIES

SEC. 6. Whoever, being an officer, director, agent, or employee of, or connected in any capacity with, any recipient of a contract, subcontract, grant, or subgrant pursuant to this Act or the Act of April 16, 1934 (48 Stat. 596), as amended, embezzles, willfully misapplies, steals, or obtains by fraud any of the money, funds, assets, or property which are the subject of such a grant, subgrant, contract, or subcontract, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than two years, or both, but if the amount so embezzled, misapplied, stolen, or obtained by fraud does not exceed $100, he shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

WAGE AND LABOR STANDARDS

SEC. 7. (a) All laborers and mechanics employed by contractors or subcontractors in the construction, alteration, or repair, including painting or decorating of buildings or other facilities in connection with contracts or grants entered into pursuant to this Act, shall be paid wages at not less than those prevailing on similar construction in the locality, as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Davis-Bacon Act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1494), as amended. With respect to construction, alteration, or repair work to which the Act of March 3, 1921 is applicable under the terms of this section, the Secretary of Labor shall have the authority and functions set forth in Reorganization Plan Numbered 14 of 1950 (15 F.R. 3176; 64 Stat. 1267) and section 2 of the Act of June 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 948, 40 U.S.C. 276c).

(b) Any contract, subcontract, grant, or subgrant pursuant to this Act, the Act of April 16, 1934 (48 Stat. 596), as amended, or any other Act authorizing Federal contracts with or grants to Indian organizations or for the benefit of Indians, shall require that to the greatest extent feasible—

(1) preferences and opportunities for training and employment in connection with the administration of such contracts or grants shall be given to Indians; and

(2) preference in the award of subcontracts and subgrants in connection with the administration of such contracts or grants shall be given to Indian organizations and to Indian-owned economic enterprises as defined in section 3 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (88 Stat. 77).

CARRYOVER OF FUNDS

SEC. 8. The provisions of any other laws to the contrary notwithstanding, any funds appropriated pursuant to the Act of November 2, 1921 (42 Stat. 208), for any fiscal year which are not obligated and expended prior to the beginning of the fiscal year succeeding the fiscal year for which such funds were appropriated shall remain available for obligation and expenditure during such succeeding fiscal year.

TITLE I—INDIAN SELF-DETERMINATION ACT

SEC. 101. This title may be cited as the "Indian Self-Determination Act".

CONTRACTS BY THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

SEC. 102. (a) The Secretary of the Interior is directed, upon the request of any Indian tribe, to enter into a contract or contracts with any tribal organization of any such Indian tribe to plan, conduct, and administer programs, or portions thereof, provided for in the Act of April 16, 1934 (48 Stat. 596), as amended by this Act, any other program or portion thereof which the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to administer for the benefit of Indians under the Act of November 2, 1921 (42 Stat. 208), and any Act subsequent thereto: Provided, however, That the Secretary may initially decline to enter into any contract requested by an Indian tribe if he finds that: (1) the service to be rendered to the Indian beneficiaries of the particular program or function to be contracted will not be satisfactory; (2) adequate protection of trust resources is not assured, or (3) the proposed project or function to be contracted for cannot be properly completed or maintained by the proposed contract: Provided further, That in arriving at his finding, the Secretary shall consider whether the tribe or tribal organization would be deficient in performance under the contract with respect to (A) equipment, (B) bookkeeping and accounting procedures, (C) substantive knowledge of the program to be contracted for, (D) community support for the contract, (E) adequately trained personnel, or (F) other necessary components of contract performance.

(b) Whenever the Secretary declines to enter into a contract or contracts pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, he shall (1) state his objections in writing to the tribe within sixty days; (2) provide, to the extent practicable, assistance to the tribe or tribal organization to overcome his stated objections; and (3) provide the tribe with a hearing, promulgate, and the opportunity for appeal on the objections raised.

(c) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is authorized to require any tribe requesting that he enter into a contract pursuant to the provisions of this title to obtain adequate liability insurance: Provided, however, That each such policy of insurance shall contain a provision that the insurance carrier shall waive any right it may have to raise as a defense the tribe's sovereign immunity from suit, but that such waiver shall extend only to claims the amount and nature of which are within the coverage and limits of the policy and shall not authorize or empower such insurance carrier to waive or otherwise limit the tribe's sovereign immunity outside or beyond the coverage and limits of the policy of insurance.

state his objections in writing to the tribe within sixty days, (2) provide to the extent practicable assistance to the tribe or tribal organization to overcome his stated objection, and (3) provide the tribe with a hearing, under such rules and regulations as he may promulgate, and the opportunity for appeal on the objections raised.

(c) The Secretary is authorized to require any tribe requesting that he enter into a contract pursuant to the provisions of this title to obtain adequate liability insurance: Provided, however, That each such policy of insurance shall contain a provision that the insurance carrier shall waive any right it may have to raise as a defense the tribe's sovereign immunity from suit, but that such waiver shall extend only to claims the amount and nature of which are within the coverage and limits of the policy and shall not authorize or empower such insurance carrier to waive or otherwise limit the tribe's sovereign immunity outside or beyond the coverage and limits of the policy of insurance.

CONTRACTS BY THE SECRETARY OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE

SEC. 103. (a) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is directed, upon the request of any Indian tribe, to enter into a contract or contracts with any tribal organization of any such Indian tribe to carry out any or all of his functions, authorities, and responsibilities under the Act of August 5, 1954 (68 Stat. 674), as amended: Provided, however, That the Secretary may initially decline to enter into any contract requested by an Indian tribe if he finds that: (1) the service to be rendered to the Indian beneficiaries of the particular program or function to be contracted for will not be satisfactory; (2) adequate protection of trust resources is not assured; or (3) the proposed project or function to be contracted for cannot be properly completed or maintained by the proposed contract: Provided further, That the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, in arriving at his finding, shall consider whether the tribe or tribal organization would be deficient in performance under the contract with respect to (A) equipment, (B) bookkeeping and accounting procedures, (C) substantive knowledge of the program to be contracted for, (D) community support for the contract, (E) adequately trained personnel, or (F) other necessary components of contract performance.

(b) Whenever the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare declines to enter into a contract or contracts pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, he shall (1) state his objections in writing to the tribe within sixty days; (2) provide, to the extent practicable, assistance to the tribe or tribal organization to overcome his stated objections; and (3) provide the tribe with a hearing, promulgate, and the opportunity for appeal on the objections raised.

(c) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is authorized to require any tribe requesting that he enter into a contract pursuant to the provisions of this title to obtain adequate liability insurance: Provided, however, That each such policy of insurance shall contain a provision that the insurance carrier shall waive any right it may have to raise as a defense the tribe's sovereign immunity from suit, but that such waiver shall extend only to claims the amount and nature of which are within the coverage and limits of the policy and shall not authorize or empower such insurance carrier to waive or otherwise limit the tribe's sovereign immunity outside or beyond the coverage and limits of the policy of insurance.

GRANTS TO INDIAN TRIBAL ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 104. (a) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, upon the request of any Indian tribe (from funds appropriated for the benefit of Indians pursuant to the Act of November 2, 1921 (42 Stat. 208), and any Act subsequent thereto) to contract with or make a grant or grants to any tribal organization for—

(1) the strengthening or improvement of tribal government (including, but not limited to, the development, improvement, and administration of planning, financial management, or merit personnel systems; the improvement of tribally funded programs or activities; or the development, construction, improvement, maintenance, preservation, or operation of tribal facilities or resources);

(2) the planning, training, evaluation of other activities designed to improve the capacity of a tribal organization to enter into a contract or contracts pursuant to section 102 of this Act and the additional costs associated with the initial years of operation under such a contract or contracts;

(3) the acquisition of land in connection with items (1) and (2) above: Provided, That in the case of land within reservation boundaries or which adjoins on at least two sides lands held in trust by the United States for the tribe or for individual Indians, the Secretary of the Interior may (upon request of the tribe) acquire such land in trust for the tribe; or

(4) the planning, designing, monitoring, and evaluating of Federal programs serving the tribe.

(b) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may, in accordance with regulations adopted pursuant to section 107 of this Act, make grants to any Indian tribe or tribal organization for—

(1) the development, construction, operation, provision, or maintenance of adequate health facilities or services including the training of personnel for such work, from funds appropriated to the Indian Health Service for Indian health services or Indian health facilities; or

(2) planning, training, evaluation or other activities designed to improve the capacity of a tribal organization to enter into a contract or contracts pursuant to section 103 of this Act.

(c) The provisions of any other Act notwithstanding, any funds made available to a tribal organization under grants pursuant to this section may be used as matching shares for any other Federal grant programs which contribute to the purposes for which grants under this section are made.

PERSONNEL

SEC. 105. (a) Section 3371(2) of chapter 33 of title 5, United States Code, is amended (1) by deleting the word "and" immediately after the semicolon in clause (A); (2) by deleting the period at the end of clause (B) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and"; and (3) by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(C) any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community, including any Alaska Native village as defined in the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (85 Stat. 688), which is recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians and includes any tribal organization as defined in section 4(c) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act."

(b) The Act of August 5, 1954 (68 Stat. 674), as amended, is further amended by adding a new section 8 after section 7 of the Act, as follows:

"Sec. 8. In accordance with subsection (d) of section 214 of the Public Health Service Act (58 Stat. 690), as amended, upon the request of any Indian tribe, band, group, or community, commissioned officers of the Service may be assigned by the Secretary for the purpose of assisting such Indian tribe, group, band, or community in carrying out the provisions of contracts with, or grants to, tribal organizations pursuant to section 102, 103, or 104 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act".

(c) Paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of section 6 of the Military Selective Service Act of 1967 (81 Stat. 100), as amended, is amended by inserting after the words "Environmental Science Services Administration" the words "or who are assigned to assist Indian tribes, groups, bands, or communities pursuant to the Act of August 5, 1954 (68 Stat. 674), as amended".

(d) Section 502 of the Intergovernmental Personnel Act of 1970 (84 Stat. 1909, 1925) is amended—

(1) by deleting the word "and" after paragraph (3);

(2) by deleting the period after paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) Notwithstanding the population requirements of section 203(a) and 303(c) of this Act, a 'local government' and a 'general local government' also mean the recognized governing body of an Indian tribe, band, pueblo, or other organized group or community, including any Alaska Native village, as defined in the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (85 Stat. 688), which performs substantial governmental functions. The requirements of sections 203(c) and 303(d) of this Act, relating to reviews by the Governor of a State, do not apply to grant applications from the governing body of an Indian tribe, although nothing in this Act is intended to discourage or prohibit voluntary communication and cooperation between Indian tribes and State and local governments."

(e) Notwithstanding any other law, executive order, or administrative regulation, and employees serving under an appointment not limited to one year or less who leaves Federal employment to be employed by a tribal organization on or before December 31, 1985, in connection with governmental or other activities which are or have been performed by employees in or for Indian communities is entitled, if the employees and the tribal organization so elect, to the following:

(1) To retain coverage, rights, and benefits under subchapter I of chapter 81 ("Compensation for Work Injuries") of title 5, United States Code, and for this purpose his employment with the tribal organization shall be deemed employment by the United States. However, if an injured employee, or his dependents in case of his death, receives from the tribal organization any payment (including an allowance, gratuity, payment under an insurance policy for which the premium is wholly paid by the tribal organization, or other benefit of any kind) on account of the same injury or death, the amount of that payment shall be credited against any benefit payable under subchapter I of chapter 81 of title 5, United States Code, as follows:

(A) payments on account of injury or disability shall be credited against disability compensation payable to the injured employee; and

(B) payments on account of death shall be credited against death compensation payable to dependents of the deceased employee.

(2) To retain coverage, rights, and benefits under chapter 83 ("Retirement") of title 5, United States Code, if necessary employee deductions and agency contributions in payment for coverage, rights, and benefits for the period of employment with the tribal organization are currently deposited in the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund (section 8348 of title 5, United States Code); and the period during which coverage, rights, and benefits are retained under this paragraph is deemed creditable service under section 8332 of title 5, United States Code. Days of unused sick leave to the credit of an employee under a formal leave system at the time the employee leaves Federal employment to the employee by a tribal organization remain to his credit for retirement purposes during covered service with the tribal organization.

(3) To retain coverage, rights, and benefits under chapter 89 ("Health Insurance") of title 5, United States Code, if necessary employee deductions and agency contributions in payment for the coverage, rights, and benefits for the period of employment with the tribal organization are currently deposited in the Employee's Health Benefit Fund (section 8909 of title 5, United States Code); and the period during which coverage, rights, and benefits are retained under this paragraph is deemed service as an employee under chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code.

(D) To retain coverage, rights, and benefits under chapter 87 ("Life Insurance") of title 5, United States Code, if necessary employee deductions and agency contributions in payment for the coverage, rights, and benefits for the period of employment with the tribal organization are currently deposited in the Employee's Life Insurance Fund (section 8714 of title 5, United States Code); and the period during which coverage, rights, and benefits are retained under this paragraph is deemed service as an employee under chapter 87 of title 5, United States Code.

(f) During the period an employee is entitled to the coverage, rights, and benefits pursuant to the preceding subsection, the tribal organization employing such employee shall deposit currently in the appropriate funds the employee deductions and agency contributions required by paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of such preceding subsection.

(g) An employee who is employed by a tribal organization under subsection (e) of this section and such tribal organization shall make the election to retain the coverage, rights, and benefits in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) of such subsection (e) before the date of his employment by a tribal organization. An employee who is employed by a tribal organization under subsection (e) of this section shall continue to be entitled to the benefits of such subsection if he is employed by another tribal organization to perform service in activities of the type described in such subsection.

(h) For the purposes of subsections (e), (f), and (g) of this section, the term "employee" means an employee as defined in section 2105 of title 5, United States Code.

(i) The President may prescribe regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of subsections (e), (f), (g), and (h) of this section and to protect and assure the compensation, retirement, insurance, leave, re-employment rights, and such other similar civil service employment rights as he finds appropriate.

(j) Anything in sections 205 and 207 of title 18, United States Code to the contrary notwithstanding, officers and employees of the United States assigned to an Indian tribe as authorized under section 3372 of title 5, United States Code, or section 2072 of the Revised Statutes (25 U.S.C. 48) and former officers and employees of the United States employed by Indian tribes may act as agents or attorneys for or appear on behalf of such tribes in connection with any matter pending before any department, agency, court, or commission, including any matter in which the United States is a party or has a direct and substantial interest: Provided, That each such officer or employee or former officer or employee must advise in writing the head of the department, agency, court, or commission with which he is dealing or appearing on behalf of the tribe of any personal and substantial involvement he may have had as an officer or employee of the United States in connection with the matter involved.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

Sec. 106. (a) Contracts with tribal organizations pursuant to sections 102 and 103 of this Act shall be in accordance with all Federal contracting laws and regulations except that, in the discretion of the appropriate Secretary, such contracts may be negotiated without advertising and need not conform with the provisions of the Act of August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 793), as amended: Provided, That the appropriate Secretary may waive any provisions of such contracting laws or regulations which he determines are not appropriate for the purposes of the contract involved or inconsistent with the provisions of this Act.

(b) Payments of any grants or under any contracts pursuant to section 102, 103, or 104 of this Act may be made in advance or by way of reimbursement and in such installments and on such conditions as the appropriate Secretary deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this title. The transfer of funds shall be scheduled consistent with program requirements and applicable Treasury regulations, so as to minimize the time elapsing between the transfer of such funds from the United States Treasury and the disbursement thereof by the tribal organization, whether such disbursement occurs prior to or subsequent to such transfer of funds. Tribal organizations shall not be held accountable for interest earned on such funds, pending their disbursement by such organization.

(c) Any contract requested by a tribe pursuant to sections 102 and 103 of this Act shall be for a term not to exceed one year unless the appropriate Secretary determines that a longer term would be advisable: Provided, That such term may not exceed three years and shall be subject to the availability of appropriations: Provided, further, That the amounts of such contracts may be negotiated annually to reflect factors, including but not limited to cost increases beyond the control of a tribal organization.

(d) Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the appropriate Secretary may, at the request or consent of a tribal organization, revise or amend any contract or grant made by him pursuant to section 102, 103, or 104 of this Act with such organization as necessary to carry out the purposes of this title: Provided, however, That whenever an Indian tribe requests retrocession of the appropriate Secretary for any contract entered into pursuant to this Act, such retrocession shall become effective upon a date specified by the appropriate Secretary not more than one hundred and twenty days from the date of the request by the tribe or at such later date as may be mutually agreed to by the appropriate Secretary and the tribe.

(e) In connection with any contract or grant made pursuant to section 102, 103, or 104 of this Act, the appropriate Secretary may permit a tribal organization to utilize, in carrying out such contract or grant, existing school buildings, hospitals, and other facilities and all equipment therein or appertaining thereto and other personal property owned by the Government within his jurisdiction under such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon for their use and maintenance.

(f) The contracts authorized under sections 102 and 103 of this Act and grants pursuant to section 104 of this Act may include provisions for the performance of personal services which would otherwise be performed by Federal employees including, but in no way limited to, functions such as determination of eligibility of applicants for assistance, benefits, or services, and the extent or amount of such assistance, benefits, or services to be provided and the provisions of such assistance, benefits, or services, all in accordance with the terms of the contract or grant and applicable rules and regulations of the appropriate Secretary: Provided, That the Secretary shall not make any contract which would impair his ability to discharge his trust responsibilities to any Indian tribe or individuals.

(g) Contracts and grants with tribal organizations pursuant to sections 102, 103, and 104 of this Act and the rules and regulations adopted by the Secretaries of the Interior and Health, Education, and Welfare pursuant to section 107 of this Act shall include provisions to assure the fair and uniform provision by such tribal organizations of the services and assistance they provide to Indians under such contracts and grants.

(h) The amount of funds provided under the terms of contracts entered into pursuant to sections 102 and 103 shall not be less than the appropriate Secretary would have otherwise provided for his direct operation of the programs or portions thereof for the period covered by the contract: Provided, That any savings in operation under such contracts shall be utilized to provide additional services or benefits under the contract.

PROMULGATION OF RULES AND REGULATIONS

Sec. 107. (a) The Secretaries of the Interior and of Health, Education, and Welfare are each authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this title.

(b) (1) Within six months from the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall each to the extent practicable, consult with national and regional Indian organizations to consider and formulate appropriate rules and regulations to implement the provisions of this title.

(2) Within seven months from the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall each present the proposed rules and regulations to the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States Senate and House of Representatives.

(3) Within eight months from the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall publish proposed rules and regulations in the Federal Register for the purpose of receiving comments from interested parties.

(4) Within ten months from the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall promulgate rules and regulations to implement the provisions of this title.

(c) The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare are authorized to revise and amend any rules or regulations promulgated pursuant to this section: Provided, That prior to any revision or amendment to such rules or regulations, the respective Secretary or Secretaries shall present the proposed revision or amendment to the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States Senate and House of Representatives and shall, to the extent practicable, consult with appropriate national or regional Indian organizations and shall publish any proposed revisions in the Federal Register not less than sixty days prior to the effective date of such rules and regulations in order to provide adequate notice to, and receive comments from, other interested parties.

REPORTS

Sec. 108. For each fiscal year during which an Indian tribal organization receives or expends funds pursuant to a contract or grant under this title, the Indian tribe which requested such contract or grant shall submit to the appropriate Secretary a report including, but not limited to, an accounting of the amounts and purposes for which Federal funds were expended, information on the conduct of the program or service involved, and such other information as the appropriate Secretary may request.

December 19, 1974

REASSUMPTION OF PROGRAMS

Sec. 109. Each contract or grant agreement entered into pursuant to sections 102, 103, and 104 of this Act shall provide that in any case where the appropriate Secretary determines that the tribal organizations performance under such contract or grant agreement involves (1) the violation of the rights or endangerment of the health, safety, or welfare of any persons; or (2) gross negligence or mismanagement in the handling or use of funds provided to the tribal organization pursuant to such contract or grant agreement, such Secretary may, under regulations prescribed by him and after providing notice and hearing to such tribal organization, rescind such contract or grant agreement and assume or resume control or operation of the program, activity, or service involved if he determines that the tribal organization has not taken corrective action as prescribed by him: Provided, That the appropriate Secretary may, upon notice to a tribal organization, immediately rescind a contract or grant and resume control or operation of a program, activity, or service if he finds that there is an immediate threat to safety and, in such cases, he shall hold a hearing on such action within ten days thereof. Such Secretary may decline to enter into a new contract or grant agreement and retain control of such program, activity, or service until such time as he is satisfied that the violations of rights or endangerment of health, safety, or welfare which necessitated the rescission has been corrected. Nothing in this section shall be construed as contravening the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 (84 Stat. 1590), as amended (29 U.S.C. 651).

EFFECT ON EXISTING RIGHTS

Sec. 110. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as—

(1) affecting, modifying, diminishing, or otherwise impairing the sovereign immunity from suit enjoyed by an Indian tribe; or
(2) authorizing or requiring the termination of any existing trust responsibility of the United States with respect to the Indian people.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to provide maximum Indian participation in the Government and education of the Indian people; to provide for the full participation of Indian tribes in programs and services conducted by the Federal Government for Indians and to encourage the development of human resources of the Indian people; to establish a program of assistance of upgrade Indian education; to support the right of Indian citizens to control their own educational activities; and for other purposes."

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, this matter has been discussed with the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Mr. FANNIN. It has been discussed with the distinguished assistant minority whip.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado did speak with me earlier about this matter.

I should like to have it established in the record—and I know it means that this bill meets with the approval of the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN), because he mentioned it to me—has the bill been considered by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs?

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, the bill was considered by that committee. I want to be absolutely sure. Will the Senator wait one moment? I should like to check.

It was considered in hearings. It was reported unanimously from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, the House of Representatives approval of S. 1017 brings the concept of Indian self-determination within reach. The proposed measure contains two significant titles authorizing major changes in national Indian policy, which, if enacted would provide the legal impetus for implementation of that concept.

Title I—the Indian Self-Determination Act—will authorize Indian tribes and their organizations to assume the control and management of all or portions of programs currently administered by the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service within the Departments of the Interior and Health, Education, and Welfare, respectively. What this means to the Indian community is that the heavy hand of paternalism which has dominated the lives and affairs of Indian people for so many years can now be broken. In its place the Indian community, acting through its leaders, can determine the shape and form of these formal Federal programs as they relate to the actual needs of the Indian people and their communities.

Mr. President, the House agreed on both technical and substantive amendments to title I. These changes improve and strengthen the accountability of tribes who opt to contract for the control and administration of Federal programs; provide grant authority to the Secretaries of the Interior and Health, Education and Welfare to improve and strengthen tribal governing bodies; provide administrative procedures to facilitate contracting in favor of the tribes; and offer protection of employee benefits to Federal personnel assigned to tribal contractors.

Title II—the Indian Education Assistance Act—as approved by the Senate, contained several major provisions to improve the quantity and quality of Indian education for Indian children and adults.

Unfortunately, the House disagreed with the Senate on several of the educational provisions included in title II of the act. The House deleted provisions designed to authorize Federal subsidy to Indian educators desiring to obtain advanced degrees in the professional areas of education; a youth intern program for Indian youth which would have provided substantial summer employment for Indian college students desiring to return and work on their home reservations; a research and development authorization for the Bureau of Indian Affairs to support necessary research and other projects designed to improve and strengthen Indian education programs; and finally, an authorization for appropriations to undertake studies in the area of continuing education, vocational and technical career education for Indians, early childhood Indian education, and educational needs of gifted and handicapped Indian children. The foregoing provisions were deleted by the House on the grounds that the appropriate agencies already possessed the necessary authorities to support such programs and activities.

I am pleased that the House did retain our provision which provided modest reforms to the Johnson-O'Malley Act as it relates to Indian education and a much needed authority for appropriations to support construction activities in public school districts educating federally recognized Indian students.

Mr. President, members of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs continue to hold to the belief that the educational provisions deleted by the House are still important and necessary to move Indian educational programs forward. However, we are also of the belief that it is extremely important to have legislation enacted in this Congress that will give legal credibility to the concept of Indian self-determination, to provide the modest reforms to the Johnson-O'Malley Act and to authorize appropriations for the sorely needed construction activities as noted earlier. The educational provisions deleted by the House can be addressed in new legislation during the forthcoming Congress.

Mr. President, I have discussed the House amendment with the distinguished ranking minority member of the committee (Mr. FANNIN), who agrees with me that, in order to avoid a conference, we should accept the House amendments.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Washington, Mr. JACKSON, and I concur fully with them. It is, of course, distressing to me that the educational programs contained in title II of the bill could not have been retained, but I do appreciate the problems which this bill faced in the House and I am grateful that S. 1017, in some form, survived. It is not, however, my purpose here to discuss at length the contents of S. 1017, but rather to make a few observations about certain portions of the bill and implication for the future.

First, the provisions of title I will greatly facilitate contracting of BIA and HEW programs to Indian tribes and tribal organizations. In this connection, these provisions represent a major step forward in implementing the concept of Indian self-determination. But while these provisions are important, I am not convinced that the present BIA Administration will be able to apply them without making a major effort to restructure their contracting process. It has been my experience that BIA area offices have proven masterful in failing to either accommodate the demand for contracting of services or in administering existing contracts. In particular, I have not been impressed with the Bureau's effort to resolve the contracting problems of contract schools which, in my opinion, are on the front line of Indian self-determination efforts.

Thus, while title I is of major significance to Indian contracting, the Bureau will have to address, quite soon, the need for a central contracting office which will be able to effectively and efficiently implement contracting policies.

Second, it is particularly gratifying to me that the House approved the so-called Fannin amendment dealing with school construction. The need for this amendment is clearly evident and its implementation will mark a significant step in providing more funds to schools serving reservation Indian children.

As we know, funds for the construction or renovation of public schools located on or near Indian reservations are either obtained through local tax resources or sections 14a and 14b of Public Law 81-815. In most cases, however, public schools find that local funds for capital outlay projects are limited due to the presence of large blocs of non-taxable reservation lands. The result is that these schools must then rely on Public Law 815 to supply the necessary funds. The problem, however, is that funds provided under Public Law 815 to such schools have been insufficient to meet current needs.

For example, under the 1974 budget, $19 million was appropriated to support Public Law 815, of which $9.5 million, or 50 percent of the total would be allocated to sections 14a and 14b.

This $9.5 million allocation would cover the construction needs of perhaps five schools. Yet, there were 39 eligible applications approved for funding with a total cost of $37,347,202. Clearly the 1974 budget was inadequate to meet the needs of those schools serving reservation Indian children, and the 1975 budget offers little hope that the existing backlog will be cleared up. The 1975 budget is requesting only $10.5 million to meet a need of $45 million.

This situation is critical because of the continuing pressure of increased Indian enrollment. The enrollment in the public schools educating reservation based Indian children has increased over the past 5 years by a total of 23,502 students. In addition, these same schools are estimating an additional 19,428 students to educate within the next 5 years. Obviously, the lay time between the recognition of need and delivery of funds makes the problem even more difficult.

To meet these critical needs part B of title II authorizes Federal assistance in the construction of school facilities which serve reservation Indian children by providing a $35 million annual authorization to the Secretary of the Interior. When S. 1017 was originally introduced, however, guidelines as to how these funds would be allocated were conspicuously absent. It was my view that without such guidelines there would be little chance that the physical plant needs of reservation schools would be met in a reasonable and rational manner.

I proposed, therefore, that the allocation of construction funds be tied to the Public Law 815 program. This program represents the basic commitment of the Federal Government to supply funds to public schools serving Indian children. As approved, S. 1017 provides that of the amount appropriated, 75 percent will be spent on those public schools whose construction needs have been approved under Public Law 815. The allocation of funds will be based on the priorities established by the Commission on Education. In terms of procedure, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will make available to the Department of the Interior, on a periodic basis, the priority listing of approved projects under sections 14a and 14b of Public Law 815 from which the Secretary shall disburse funds made available under this act. The remaining 25 percent shall be spent, at the discretion of the Secretary for other school construction projects which he deems worthy, which under the terms of the bill, covers Indian controlled private and contract schools.

This particular approach to an old problem is an innovative one. It was chosen for the following reasons:

First, By allocating funds on the basis of the Public Law 815 priorities, additional bureaucracy in the Department of the Interior is avoided and the role of the Office of Education is retained;

Second, By allocating funds on the basis of Public Law 815, an existing formula is utilized, one based on need, thus relieving the Department of the Interior from having to establish one; and Third, By assigning new budgetary authority to the Interior, there is a greater chance for increased appropriations to meet the increasing need for school facilities.

Mr. President, it is my expectation that this provision will be funded promptly so that we can get on with the job of providing desperately needed construction funds to our reservation schools.

Third, the decision by the House to include a provision to allow the carryover of Johnson-O'Malley funds recognized the importance of preserving for the use of public schools their entire allotment of Johnson-O'Malley funds. I had been advised that the BIA had ordered that any unspent Johnson-O'Malley funds could not be carried over to the next fiscal year. In view of the importance of the Johnson-O'Malley program to many reservation public schools, I urged the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee to adopt a provision which would provide ample authority to the Bureau to carry over such funds thus insuring that the full appropriation would be used. Their acceptance of this provision is gratifying.

Fourth, the provision contained in title II ordering a study by the Department of the Interior is of particular importance to the future of Federal Indian education policies.

The significance of this mandated study lies in the fact that it represents a continuing desire on the part of the Congress to find an acceptable legislative alternative to the existing method for allocating Johnson-O'Malley funds.

By requiring a legislative proposal for the Secretary of the Interior by October 1, 1975, the Congress is making it fundamentally clear that it intends to proceed to reform the Johnson-O'Malley program.

Yet, of even more significance is the requirement that the possible duplication of Johnson-O'Malley, title I of ESEA, title IV, Public Law 874 and 815 be analyzed. The results of this part of the study may cause the Congress to consider an even more comprehensive funding approach to eliminate duplicate funding, conflicts in programs, and the multiple involvement of various Federal bureaucracies in administering these programs. I could conceive of a program for reservation public schools in which existing program funds could be combined into one authority to provide operational funds including capital expenses, and support for supplementary programs to meet the special educational needs of Indian children. This approach could possibly result in a significant change in how we assist our reservation public schools and therefore this particular part of the study is extremely important for the future of Indian education policies.

Finally, Mr. President, let me make a brief observation about the future. I have not been altogether impressed with the efforts to develop a more comprehensive policy toward financing Indian education whether in reservation public schools, contract schools or elsewhere.

The continuing struggle, for example, over the use of Johnson-O'Malley funds has gone on so long that we are ignoring the total realities of financing Indian education. Enrollments are doubling, and costs are rising, but instead of joining together in developing a comprehensive plan in recognition of such problems, we find ourselves mired in a debate over Johnson-O'Malley. It is time, it seems to me, to break out of the hamperlock in which the Johnson-O'Malley program has placed us and face up to bigger problems. It does not serve anyone's interest, especially the needs of Indian children, for example, to ignore the financial needs of reservation public schools. Such needs are real, and ways must be found to deliver sufficient financial resources to accommodate and resolve such needs. The failure of our current policies is in part the failure of those both in and out of Congress to work toward a comprehensive financial delivery system which will meet the needs of schools and most importantly, Indian children.

Mr. President, I hope that in the next Congress, there will be a new spirit of cooperation in meeting the educational needs of Indian children. Perhaps, with genuine cooperation, legislation can be developed and passed which will correct some very basic deficiencies in our Indian education programs.

Mr. President, as approved by the House, S. 1017, represents another step in the continuing effort to strengthen the Federal commitment to Indian education.

In addition, it represents another step in the implementation of the recommendations of the Special Subcommittee on Indian Education as contained in its final report; "Indian Education: A National Tragedy—A National Challenge." This report, after surveying in depth the status of Indian education programs, made some 60 recommendations to strengthen Indian education endeavors and to urge new approaches. This vital report and its recommendations were virtually ignored, however, for almost 2 years until the Congress considered, in 1971, the Indian Education Act. This measure was adopted as title IV of the Education Amendments of 1972 which became Public Law 92-318. This was the first step in realizing the objectives of the special subcommittee. Now, 2 years later, the Congress is approving legislation which will further implement the goals and objectives of the final report of the special subcommittee.

What is taking place through these legislative efforts is the development of a comprehensive Indian education policy. By identifying deficiencies and omissions in current policies, the Congress and the executive branch are developing a program to meet the contemporary needs of Indian education. Certainly there is still much to do, but these initial efforts are building a new foundation on which hopefully will rest a program which will assure a quality Indian education program.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to concur in the House amendments to S. 1017 so as to clear it for action by the President.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to S. 1017.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that there may now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each, and with my having permission at any time to close morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Heking, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Acting President pro tempore (Mr. HUGH SCOTT) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL

A message from the President of the United States stated that on December 16, 1974, he approved and signed the bill (S. 433) to amend the Public Health Service Act to assure that the public is provided with safe drinking water, and for other purposes.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

national policy of free and open competition in the economy. Referred to the Committee on Government Operations.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. COTTON (for himself and Mr. Tower):

S. 4254. A bill to authorize the appointment of Alexander P. Butterfield to the retired list of the regular Air Force, and for other purposes. Referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the Senator from Texas (Mr. Tower), I introduce a bill to authorize the President to reappoint Alexander P. Butterfield, formerly colonel, U.S. Air Force, retired, to the grade of colonel and to retire him in that grade. It permits the appointment directly, without further congressional action, and provides that the effective date of the appointment will be the day after the appointee ceases to hold the office of Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration, or the day before his death, whichever is earlier.

Section 301(b) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (Public Law 85-726) requires that the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration be a civilian at the time of his nomination. Though Mr. Butterfield had retired from the U.S. Air Force some 4 years prior to his nomination to the FAA post, he was not a civilian within the meaning of the Federal Aviation Act. He was, therefore, precluded from serving in this position unless he resigned his regular Air Force commission. Mr. Butterfield did so on February 8, 1973.

In doing so, Mr. Butterfield forfeited retirement and survivor benefits that he had earned in over 20 years of distinguished military service. This Senator does not believe that the Congress intended to deprive Mr. Butterfield permanently of the benefits and status that he acquired during his years in the Armed Forces. That would be unreasonable.

There is precedent for Congress taking this action. In 1958, under similar circumstances, Gen. Elwood R. Quesada resigned his commission in order that he might become the first Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency. During the following year, the 86th Congress passed a bill similar to the one I am introducing today providing for his restoration to the Air Force's retired lists. In January 1961, the President restored General Quesada's rank and benefits.

The reappointment of Mr. Butterfield will cause no advantage or disadvantage to accrue to him other than the mere restoration of his previous status. He will receive no increase in grade and no pay above that to which he was entitled at the time of his resignation. Nor will enactment of this bill affect his status as Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration.

The bill should result in no immediate cost to the Government.

Mr. President, I look upon the introduction of this bill today as one of several matters which I believe I should attend to before the adjournment of the 93d Congress and my retirement. During the course of the hearing before our Committee on Commerce on the nomination of Mr. Butterfield back on March 1, 1973, I made the following observation to the then-nominee, Mr. Butterfield:

I also added that I was reasonably confident that after you discharged your duties as FAA Administrator, your status could be restored so that you would not have to pay an added penalty. As I recall, similar equitable treatment was accorded Lt. Gen. Elwood R. Quesada by Private Law 86-177, in a like situation.

Mr. President, I certainly do not anticipate any action on this bill in the time remaining in this Congress. But, I would hope that its introduction will serve as a reminder to those in the succeeding Congress that this is a matter which should be addressed in all fairness to Mr. Butterfield.

By Mr. WILLIAMS (for himself and Mr. Brooke):

S. 4255. A bill to amend the Securities Investor Protection Act of 1970. Referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs.

SECURITIES INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1975

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator Brooke and myself, I am today introducing a bill to amend the Securities Investor Protection Act of 1970—the "1970 act."

The Congress established the Securities Investor Protection Corporation—SIPC—in the closing days of the 91st Congress. There was then a general recognition of the urgent need for Federal insurance to protect customers against the insolvency of broker-dealers. Indeed, the need was so great that a number of technical problems relating to the procedures for the liquidation of securities firms were left to be worked out after practical experience with the new act.

Since that time SIPC has administered over 100 broker-dealer liquidations, and has ample opportunity to evaluate the operation of the 1970 act.

In November, 1973, the present Chairman of SIPC, Hugh F. Owens, advised the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs at the hearing on his confirmation that SIPC would undertake a thorough study of possible amendments to the SIPC Act. Pursuant to this commitment, Chairman Owens appointed a broadly based task force in January of this year to explore better, quicker and more efficient methods of achieving the investor protection and concomitant investor confidence envisaged by the Congress when it passed the 1970 act. The bill I am introducing today has been prepared by SIPC and represents the culmination of the efforts of that task force.

Although modifications may be necessary in certain of SIPC's recommended amendments to the 1970 act, on the whole this bill represents a constructive effort to provide more efficient solutions to the broad range of problems which confront SIPC. I believe this bill goes a substantial way toward improving the protections afforded securities customers and enabling SIPC to perform its role more effectively and efficiently.

The bill would change the 1970 act in nine basic respects:

First, the framework of the SIPC Act would be modified to provide protection which better comports with the expectations of both cash and margin customers. This would be accomplished by moving away from a strict insurance concept and toward a scheme of returning customer's accounts intact as they existed when the broker-dealer became insolvent.

Second, the liquidation trustee would have broader authority to operate the business of the debtor, although he would not be given the authority to attempt to rehabilitate a failed firm.

Third, in appropriate cases, SIPC would have the authority to make payments directly to customers without the necessity for a judicial proceeding.

Fifth, SIPC would itself be the trustee for liquidation of small brokers and dealers.

Sixth, new procedures for the satisfaction of open contractual commitments would be established.

Seventh, the wholesale incorporation of the Bankruptcy Act into the 1970 Act would be eliminated.

Eighth, SIPC would be granted the authority to promulgate rules subject to the SEC's oversight.

And ninth, and perhaps of most importance, the limits of the protection in the SIPC program would be increased from the present $50,000 with no more than $20,000 to be paid in cash, to $100,000 with no more than $40,000 to be paid in cash.

The provisions of the bill are designed to meet the reasonable needs and expectations of the investing public and at the same time to assure faster and more efficient liquidation of failed securities firms. Because of the extreme importance of the 1970 act for the protection of securities customers and the confidence of investors in our securities markets, this bill deserves careful consideration by all members of the securities industry, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the self-regulatory organizations, and interested investors. Senator Brooke and I are introducing the bill at this time to facilitate this consideration. We anticipate reintroducing the bill shortly after the new Congress convenes in January.

One aspect of the bill will require special scrutiny. As presently drafted the bill would eliminate all current exclusions from SIPC membership. As a result, all registered broker-dealers would become members of SIPC and required to pay the statutory assessment. Accordingly, broker-dealers whose sole business is the distribution of mutual fund shares, the sale of variable annuities, the business of insurance, and the business of rendering investment advisory services to one or more investment companies would become SIPC members.

The elimination of the current exclusions from SIPC membership will unquestionably be a controversial recommendation. The SIPC task force was split on the issue. In the course of hearings on the bill, it will be necessary for us to weigh carefully the customer protection which would be provided by the elimination of these exemptions against the financial burden which would be placed on highly specialized broker-dealers. The proposal to include broker-dealer affiliates of insurance companies appears to raise special problems, particularly in light of the absence of any customer losses during SIPC's existence growing out of variable annuity contracts.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that a letter to me from Hugh F. Owens, chairman of the Securities Investor Protection Corporation, and the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and bill were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECURITIES INVESTOR PROTECTION CORP.,
Washington, D.C., December 17, 1974.

HON. HARRISON A. WILLIAMS, JR.,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Securities, Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: I am pleased to transmit herewith two copies of proposed amendments to the Securities Investor Protection Act of 1970 (15 U.S.C. 78aaa et seq.). You may recall that a year ago I formed a Special Task Force to examine the experience SIPC has had with the 1970 Act and to make recommendations to the SIPC Board of Directors for changes and improvements in the SIPC program. The Task Force was composed of representatives of the Securities and Exchange Commission ("Commission"), the various self-regulatory organizations, trustees who have served in SIPC liquidations, the securities industry itself, and SIPC. It met throughout the first half of this year and issued a comprehensive report to our Board of Directors on July 31, 1974. Copies of that report were sent to you at that time. Most, but not all, of the proposals embodied in the amendments transmitted herewith are the result of recommendations contained in the Task Force Report.

The Board of Directors of SIPC, after reviewing the Task Force Report, directed (with only minor modifications) that the recommendations of the Task Force be drafted into proposed amendments. I am pleased to say that this work has now been finished and the enclosed amendments are the product of that effort which was begun a year ago.

While the proposed amendments are comprehensive and deal with many aspects of the SIPC program, their common purpose is to improve the protection which is made available to investors and to increase the efficiency of the program. This is done principally by adding more flexibility to the procedures for the liquidation of a broker-dealer firm. Certain other changes are recommended which will afford to customers more adequate protection, both quantitatively and qualitatively, and thereby aid substantially in increasing investor confidence in securities firms and in our securities markets. In addition, many of the amendments are designed to deal with technical problems (some major but many minor) which have been experienced in our three and one-half years of operations.

The Board of Directors has asked me to call particularly to your attention one of the recommendations of the Task Force which has generated considerable divergence of views. It is the only matter on which there was any dissenting view filed with the Task Force Report. This is the question of the inclusion of transactions in mutual funds and variable annuities in the assessment base of the SIPC program. Under the present Act, transactions in mutual funds and variable annuities are specifically excluded from the assessment base. Indeed, firms dealing exclusively in this type of business are excluded from membership in SIPC. As the Task Force Report points out, however, SIPC has experienced claims based on transactions in mutual fund shares and has advanced approximately $170,000 to satisfy these claims. For this and other reasons, the Task Force recommended that transactions in mutual funds and variable annuities be included in the SIPC assessment base. As you will note from page 59 of the Task Force Report, the representative of the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc. dissented from that recommendation.

The SIPC Board of Directors, after reviewing the matter, determined to propose an amendment to accomplish what the Task Force recommended. Should the Congress, however, determine not to adopt such an amendment to the 1970 Act, the SIPC Board of Directors would respectfully request the adoption of an amendment which would make it clear that SIPC funds should not be used to satisfy claims based on transactions in mutual funds or variable annuities.

We have tried to work closely with interested groups on these amendments. That would be indicated from the composition of the Special Task Force. We are, of course, pleased that the members of the Task Force, who represented diverse views and organizations, were able to arrive at the consensus which was reached in the Task Force Report. Many of the recommendations represent an appropriate compromising and blending of views and positions in order to obtain the goal of all of us—increased investor confidence because of the existence of a viable and efficient SIPC program. While I cannot speak for any of the organizations (other than SIPC) represented on the Task Force, it is fair for me to point out the unanimity of the views reached by the Task Force. Of special relevance, understandably, are the views of the Commission. We have made available to the Commission drafts of the proposed amendments as they were developed. The staff of the Commission has provided us with certain comments on those drafts. Many of those comments have been incorporated into the proposals transmitted herewith; others will require further discussion between the staffs of our respective organizations.

Finally, I should express to you our great hope that these amendments can receive early consideration by the Congress. We believe this is advisable from the standpoint of the public's interest generally in our nation's securities markets and particularly in the protections afforded to customers by the SIPC program. The timeliness of these amendments is highlighted by the recent doubling in the limits of protection afforded to bank and savings accounts under the FDIC and FSLIC programs. We would particularly note that one of the amendments transmitted herewith would make a corresponding increase in the limits of protection in the SIPC program (from the present $20,000/$50,000 to $40,000/$100,000). In this connection I should call to your attention a recent letter I have received from Commission Chairman Ray Garrett, Jr., which states, "The Commission supports the provisions of the proposed amendments increasing the limits of coverage under the SIPC Act and, in this regard, the Commission welcomes the efforts of SIPC to provide more comprehensive protection to the investing public."

We will be pleased to provide any assistance to you and your staff which may be useful as you review these proposals. We welcome an early opportunity to discuss them with you.

Respectfully,

HUGH F. OWENS.

(8) by striking out subparagraph (C) of paragraph (2) thereof as redesignated.
(c) In subsection (d) of such section—
(1) strike out "(c)(3)" in paragraph (1)(A) and insert in lieu thereof "(c)(2)";
(2) insert at the end of paragraph (1) the following:
(C) MINIMUM ASSESSMENT.—The minimum assessment imposed upon each member shall be $25 per annum through the year ending December 30, 1974. [to be three years from date of enactment], and thereafter shall be the amount from time to time set by SIPC bylaw"; and
(3) insert at the end of paragraph (2) the following:
(C) OTHER LINES.—SIPC may maintain such other confirmed lines of credit as it deems necessary or appropriate, and such other confirmed lines of credit shall not be included in the balance of the fund, but amounts received from such lines of credit may be disbursed by SIPC under this Act as though they were part of the fund."
(d) In subsection (e) of such section—
(1) strike out "(c)(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)(1)";
(2) amend paragraphs (2) and (3) to read as follows:
(2) OVERPAYMENTS.—To the extent that any payment by a member exceeds the maximum rate permitted by subsection (c) of this section, the excess shall be recoverable only against future payments by such member except as otherwise provided by SIPC bylaw.
(3) UNDERPAYMENTS.—If a member fails to pay when due all or any part of an assessment made upon such member, the unpaid portion thereof shall bear interest at such rate as may be determined by SIPC bylaw and, in addition to such interest, SIPC may impose a penalty charge in such amount as may be determined by SIPC bylaw. SIPC may waive such penalty charge in whole or in part in circumstances where it deems such action appropriate."
(e) In subsection (f) of such section, strike out "examining authority as" in the fourth sentence.
(f) In subsection (1)—
(1) amend clause (F) to read as follows:
(F) fees for investment advisory services or account supervision in respect of securities."
(2) amend clauses (J) and (K) to read as follows:
(J) fees in connection with put, call, and other option transactions in securities.
(K) commissions and fees in connection with the distribution of shares of a registered open end investment company or unit investment trust or from the sale of variable annuities, and"
(3) strike out the last sentence of the subsection and insert in lieu thereof the following new clause:
(L) all other income related to the securities business; and
(3) by striking out paragraph (3).
Sec. 5. (a) Section 5(a) of the Act is amended by striking out paragraphs (2) and (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:
(2) ACTION BY SELF-REGULATORY ORGANIZATION.—If a self-regulatory organization has given notice to SIPC pursuant to subsec-

December 19, 1974

tion (a)(1), and the broker or dealer undertakes to liquidate or reduce its business either pursuant to the direction of a self-regulatory organization or voluntarily, a self-regulatory organization may render such assistance or oversight to the broker or dealer as it deems appropriate to protect the interests of customers of the broker or dealer. The assistance or oversight by a self-regulatory organization shall not be deemed the assumption or adoption by the self-regulatory organization of any obligation or liability to customers, other creditors, shareholders, or partners of the broker or dealer, and shall not prevent or act as a bar to any action by SIPC pursuant to a liquidation proceeding or a direct payment procedure.
(3) ACTION BY SIPC.—If SIPC determines that any member (including a person who was a member within 180 days prior to such determination by SIPC) has failed or is in danger of failing to meet its obligations to customers whose claims could be satisfied with SIPC advances in a liquidation proceeding, and that there exists one or more of the conditions specified in subsection (b)(1), SIPC, upon notice to such member, may apply to any court of competent jurisdiction specified in section 27 or 21(e) of the 1934 Act for a decree that customers of such member are in need of the protection provided by this Act (referred to as a "protective decree").
(4) EFFECT OF OTHER PENDING ACTIONS.—An application under paragraph (2)—
(A) with the consent of the Commission, may be combined with any action brought by the Commission including an action by it for a temporary receiver pending an appointment of a trustee under subsection (b)(3), and
(B) may be filed notwithstanding the pendency in the same or any other court of any bankruptcy, mortgage foreclosure, or equity receivership proceeding or any proceeding to reorganize, conserve, or liquidate such member or its property, or any proceeding to enforce a lien against property of such member."
(b) Subsection (b) of such section 5 is amended to read as follows:
(b) COURT ACTION.
(1) ISSUANCE OF PROTECTIVE DECREE.—A court shall forthwith issue a protective decree if the debtor consents thereto, or if the debtor fails to contest SIPC's application therefor, or if the court finds that such debtor—
(A) is insolvent within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, or is unable to meet its obligations as they mature, or
(B) has committed an act of bankruptcy within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, or
(C) is the subject of a proceeding pending in any court or before any agency of the United States or any State in which a receiver, trustee, or liquidator for such member has been appointed, or
(D) is not in compliance with applicable requirements under the 1934 Act or rules or regulations of the Commission or any self-regulatory organization with respect to financial responsibility or hypothecation of customers' securities, or
(E) is unable to make such computations as may be necessary to establish compliance with such financial responsibility or hypothecation rules or regulations.
Unless the debtor consents to the issuance of a protective decree, SIPC's application shall be heard within three business days after the filing thereof or at such other time as the court for cause shown shall determine.
(2) EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION OF COURT.—Upon the filing of an application for a protective decree, the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the debtor involved and its property wherever located (including (A) property located outside the territorial limits of such court, and (B) property held by any other person as security for a debt or subject to a lien) and of any suit against the trustee with respect to a liquidation proceeding. In addition, except as inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, the court shall have the jurisdiction, powers, and duties conferred upon a court of bankruptcy by the Bankruptcy Act, together with such other jurisdiction, powers, and duties as are prescribed by this Act. Pending the issuance of a protective decree under subsection (1) such court shall stay, and upon appointment by it of a trustee as provided in subsection (3) such court shall continue the stay of, any pending bankruptcy, mortgage foreclosure, equity receivership, or other proceeding to reorganize, conserve, or liquidate the debtor or its property and any other suit against any receiver, conservator, or trustee of the debtor or its property. Pending the issuance of a protective decree and upon the appointment of a trustee and thereafter, the court may stay any proceeding to enforce a lien against property of the debtor or any other suit against the debtor, including a suit by stockholders of the debtor which interferes with the trustee's prosecution of claims against former directors or officers of the debtor. In addition, the court may, for such period as may be appropriate, stay enforcement of, but shall not abrogate, the rights of setoff provided in the Bankruptcy Act (section 68) and the right to enforce a valid, nonpreferential lien or pledge against the property of the debtor. Pending the issuance of a protective decree, the court may appoint a temporary receiver.

(3) APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEE AND COUNSEL.—If the court issues a protective decree, it shall forthwith appoint as trustee for the liquidation of the business of the debtor (referred to as "trustee") and as attorney for the trustee, such persons as SIPC in its sole discretion shall specify, and the persons so appointed may be with the same firm. SIPC may in its sole discretion specify itself or one of its employees as trustee in any case in which SIPC has determined that the liabilities of the debtor to unsecured general creditors and to subordinated lenders appear to aggregate less than $750,000 and that there appear to be fewer than 500 customers as defined in subsection (c)(1) of section 6. No person shall serve as trustee or attorney if such person is not "disinterested" within the meaning of subsection (7), except that for any specified purpose other than to represent a trustee in conducting a liquidation proceeding, the trustee may with the approval of SIPC employ an attorney who is not disinterested. A trustee appointed hereunder shall qualify by filing a bond in the manner prescribed by the applicable provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. Neither SIPC nor an employee of SIPC shall be required to file a bond when appointed as trustee.
(4) REFERENCE TO REFEREE IN BANKRUPTCY.—If the court issues a protective decree and appoints a trustee under this section, it may at any stage of the proceeding refer the proceeding to a referee in bankruptcy (including a bankruptcy judge) to hear and determine any and all matters, or to a referee as special master to hear and report generally or upon specified matters. Only under special circumstances shall references be made to a special master who is not a referee.
(5) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this Act—
(A) DEBTOR.—The term 'debtor' means a person in respect of whom an application for a protective decree has been filed.
(B) FILING DATE.—The term 'filing date' means the date on which an application for a protective decree has been filed; except that if—
(1) a petition was filed before such date by or against the debtor under the Bankruptcy Act (as defined below) or under chapter X or XI as now in effect or as amended from time to time, or

(11) the debtor is the subject of a proceeding pending in any court or before any agency of the United States or any State in which a receiver, trustee, or liquidator for such debtor was appointed which proceeding was commenced before the date on which such application was filed, then the term 'filing date' means the date on which such petition was filed or such proceeding commenced.
(C) BANKRUPTCY ACT.—The term 'Bankruptcy Act' means those provisions of the Bankruptcy Act relating to Ordinary Bankruptcy (chapters I through VII) as now in effect or as amended from time to time and the rules of bankruptcy procedure promulgated with respect thereto, except the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act relating exclusively to stockbrokerage bankruptcies (section 60e) shall not apply.
(6) COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEES AND ATTORNEYS.—
(A) The court shall grant reasonable compensation for services rendered and reimbursement for proper costs and expenses incurred (referred to as 'allowances') in connection with a liquidation proceeding by a trustee appointed under subsection (3) and by the attorneys for a trustee. No compensation for services shall be allowed to SIPC or an employee of SIPC for serving as a trustee, however, reimbursement for their proper costs and expenses shall be granted by the court. Allowances may be granted on an interim basis during the course of the liquidation proceeding at such times and in such amounts as the court shall deem appropriate.
(B) A person seeking allowances hereunder shall file with the court an application setting forth a detailed statement of (1) the services rendered and costs and expenses incurred, and (11) the amount requested. The application shall include such statements by the applicant as may be required in an application for compensation for services rendered and reimbursement of costs and expenses filed under the applicable provisions of the Bankruptcy Act.
(C) A copy of an application filed pursuant to subsection (B) shall be filed with SIPC, and SIPC shall forthwith prepare its recommendation thereon. The recommendation shall be transmitted to the court prior to the hearing on the application and a copy shall be given the applicant.
(D) After hearing on notice to the applicant, to SIPC and to such other persons as the court may designate, and after SIPC has been given an opportunity to provide a supplemental recommendation, the court shall determine the allowance.
(E) Where allowances are to be paid by SIPC without reasonable expectation of recoupment thereof as provided in subsection (d) of section 9 and there is no difference between the amounts requested and the amounts recommended by SIPC, the court shall award the amounts recommended by SIPC. In determining allowances in all other cases the court shall give due consideration to the nature, extent and value of the services rendered and shall place considerable reliance on the recommendation of SIPC.
(F) The restrictions on sharing of compensation as prescribed in the Bankruptcy Act shall apply.
(G) Allowances granted by the court, including interim allowances, shall be charged as a cost and expense of administration against the general estate of the debtor. If the general estate is insufficient to pay allowances in whole or in part, SIPC shall advance such funds as are necessary.
(7) DISINTERESTEDNESS.—
(A) STANDARDS.—A person shall not be deemed disinterested, for the purposes of subsection (b)(3), if—

"(i) he is a creditor (including a customer) or stockholder of the debtor; or
 "(ii) he is or was an underwriter of any of the outstanding securities of the debtor or within five years prior to the filing date was the underwriter of any securities of the debtor; or
 "(iii) he is, or was within two years prior to the filing date, a director, officer, or employee of the debtor or any such underwriter, or an attorney for the debtor or such underwriter; or
 "(iv) it appears that he has, by reason of any direct or indirect relationship to, connection with, or interest in the debtor or such underwriter, or for any reason an interest materially adverse to the interests of any class of creditors (including customers) or stockholders;

except that SIPC shall in all cases be deemed disinterested, and an employee of SIPC shall be deemed disinterested if he would meet the aforesaid standards except for his association with SIPC.
 "(B) HEARING.—The court shall fix a time for a hearing on disinterestedness, to be held promptly after the appointment of a trustee, notice of which shall be mailed at least ten days prior thereto to each person who, from the debtor's books and records, appears to have been a customer of the debtor with an open account within the past 12 months, to his address as it shall appear from the debtor's books and records, and to the creditors and stockholders of the debtor, to SIPC, and to such other persons as the court may designate. The court in its discretion may also require that notice be given by publication in such newspaper or newspapers of general circulation as it may designate. At such hearing, or at any adjournment thereof, or upon application, the court shall hear objections to the retention in office of a trustee or counsel to a trustee upon the ground that he is not disinterested as provided in this Act."

SEC. 6. The Act is amended by striking out section 6 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:
 "SEC. 6. GENERAL PROVISIONS OF A LIQUIDATION PROCEEDING.
 "(a) PURPOSES.—The purposes of any proceeding in which a trustee has been appointed under section 5(b)(3) (referred to as a liquidation proceeding) shall be:
 "(1) as promptly as possible after such appointment and in accordance with the provisions of this section—
 "(A) to deliver customer name securities to or on behalf of the customers of the debtor entitled thereto as provided in subsection (a)(2) of section 8;
 "(B) to distribute customer property and (in advance thereof or concurrently therewith) otherwise to satisfy net equity claims of customers to the extent provided in this section; and
 "(C) to transfer customer accounts to other members of SIPC as provided in subsection (d) of section 8;
 "(2) to sell or transfer offices and other productive units of the business of the debtor;
 "(3) to enforce rights of subrogation as provided in this Act; and
 "(4) to liquidate the business of the debtor.
 "(b) APPLICATION OF BANKRUPTCY ACT.—To the extent consistent with the provisions of this Act, a liquidation proceeding shall be conducted in accordance with, and as though it were being conducted under, the Bankruptcy Act. Any reference in the Bankruptcy Act to the date of commencement of proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the filing date for purposes of this Act.
 "(c) DEFINITIONS.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, for purposes of a liquidation proceeding and the application of the Bankruptcy Act to a liquidation proceeding:

"(1) 'Customers' of a debtor means persons (including persons with whom the debtor deals as principal or agent) who have claims on account of securities received, acquired, or held by the debtor in the ordinary course of his business as a broker or dealer from or for the securities accounts of such persons (A) for safekeeping, or (B) with a view to sale, or (C) to cover consummated sales, or (D) pursuant to purchases, or (E) as collateral security, or (F) for purposes of effecting transfer. Customers shall include persons who have claims against the debtor arising out of sales or conversions of such securities, and shall include any person who has deposited cash with the debtor for the purpose of purchasing securities, but shall not include any person to the extent that such person has a claim for cash or securities which by contract, agreement, or understanding, or by operation of law, is part of the capital of the debtor, or is subordinated to the claims of any or all creditors of the debtor, notwithstanding that some ground might have existed for declaring such contract, agreement, or understanding void or voidable in a suit between the claimant and the debtor.
 "(2) 'Net equity' means the dollar amount of a customer's account or accounts determined by excluding any customer name securities reclaimed by the customer, and by subtracting any indebtedness of the customer to the debtor from the sum which would have been owing by the debtor to the customer had the debtor liquidated, by sale or purchase on the filing date, all securities positions of the customer. A customer may, with the approval of the trustee and within such period as the trustee may determine, pay to the trustee any indebtedness of the customer to the debtor, and the customer's net equity will be increased by the amount of the payment. Accounts held by a customer in separate capacities shall be deemed to be accounts of separate customers. Where a customer has acted with respect to cash or securities with the debtor after the filing date and in a manner which would have given him the status of a customer with respect to the cash or securities had the action occurred prior to the filing date, and the trustee is satisfied that such action was taken by the customer in good faith and prior to the appointment of the trustee, the date on which such action was taken shall be deemed to be the filing date for determining such customer's net equity with respect to the cash or securities.
 "(3) 'Securities' means any note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, any collateral trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, voting-trust certificate, certificate of deposit, or in general, any instrument commonly known as a "security"; or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase or sell any of the foregoing; but shall not include any currency; investment contract; certificate of interest or participation in any profit-sharing agreement or in any oil, gas, or other mineral royalty or lease; or commodity or related contract or futures contract; or any warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase or sell any of the foregoing.
 "(4) 'Customer property' means cash and securities (except customer name securities delivered to the customer) at any time received, acquired or held by or for the account of a debtor from or for the account of customers and the proceeds of any such property transferred by the debtor including property unlawfully converted. Customer property shall include:
 "(A) securities held as the property of the debtor to the extent such securities are necessary to meet the debtor's obligations to his customers for their net equities based upon securities of the same class and series of an issuer; and

"(B) resources provided through the use or realization of customers' debit cash balances and the debit items includable in the "Formula for Determination of Reserve Requirement for Brokers and Dealers" under Rule 15c3-3 of the 1934 Act.

Customer property shall also include other property of the debtor which, upon compliance with applicable laws, rules and regulations, would have been set aside or held for the benefit of customers, unless the trustee determines that effecting such inclusion would not significantly increase customer property. Any cash or securities remaining after the liquidation of a lien or pledge made by a debtor shall be apportioned between his general estate and customer property in the proportion in which the general property of the debtor and the cash and securities of his customers contributed to such lien or pledge.
 "(5) "Customer name securities" means securities which were held for the account of a customer on the filing date by or on behalf of the debtor and which on the filing date were registered in the customer's name or were in the process of being so registered pursuant to instructions from the debtor, but shall not include securities registered in the customer's name which by endorsement or otherwise were in negotiable form.

"(d) COSTS AND EXPENSES OF ADMINISTRATION.—All costs and expenses of administration of the debtor's estate and the liquidation proceeding shall be borne by the general estate to the extent it is sufficient therefor, and the priorities of distribution from the general estate shall be as provided in the Bankruptcy Act. Costs and expenses of administration shall include payments pursuant to subsection (c) of section 8 and costs and expenses of SIPC employees utilized by the trustee pursuant to subsection (a)(2) of section 7. All funds advanced by SIPC to a trustee for such costs and expenses of administration shall be recouped from the general estate as a first priority under the Bankruptcy Act.
 "SEC. 7. POWERS AND DUTIES OF TRUSTEE
 "(a) TRUSTEE POWERS.—A trustee shall be vested with the same powers and title with respect to the debtor and the property of the debtor, including the same rights to avoid preferences, as a trustee in bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Act has with respect to a bankrupt. In addition, a trustee shall, with the approval of SIPC, have the right—
 "(1) to hire and fix the compensation of all personnel (including officers and employees of the debtor and of its examining authority) and other persons (including but not limited to accountants) that are deemed by the trustee necessary for all or any purposes of the liquidation proceeding;
 "(2) to utilize SIPC employees for all or any purposes of a liquidation proceeding; and
 "(3) to margin and maintain customer accounts of the debtor for the purposes of subsection (d) of section 8; and no approval of the court shall be required therefor.
 "(b) TRUSTEE DUTIES.—To the extent consistent with the provisions of this Act or as otherwise ordered by the court, a trustee shall be subject to the same duties as a trustee in bankruptcy, except that a trustee may, but shall have no duty to, reduce to money any securities constituting customer property or in the general estate of the debtor. In addition, the trustee shall,
 "(1) deliver securities to or on behalf of customers to the maximum extent practicable in satisfaction of customer claims for securities of the same class and series of an issuer; and
 "(2) subject to the prior approval of SIPC, pay or guarantee all or any part of the indebtedness of the debtor to a bank, lender or other person if the trustee determines that the aggregate market value of securities to be made available to the trustee upon the payment or guarantee of such indebtedness does not appear to be less than the total amount of the payment or guarantee, and no approval of the court shall be required therefor.

 "(c) REPORTS BY TRUSTEE TO COURT.—The trustee shall make to the court and to SIPC such written reports as may be required by the Bankruptcy Act, and shall include therein information as to the progress in distributing cash and securities to customers. The reports required hereunder shall also be in such form and detail as, having due regard to the requirements of section 17 of the 1934 Act and the rules and regulations thereunder and the magnitude of items and transactions involved in connection with the operations of a broker or dealer, the Commission shall determine by rules and regulations to present fairly the results of such proceeding as of the dates or for the periods covered by such reports.
 "(d) INVESTIGATIONS.—The trustee shall—
 "(1) as soon as practicable, investigate the acts, conduct, property, liabilities, and financial condition of the debtor, the operation of its business, and any other matter, to the extent relevant to the liquidation proceeding, and report thereon to the court;
 "(2) examine by deposition or otherwise the directors and officers of the debtor and any other witnesses concerning any of the foregoing matters;
 "(3) report to the court any facts ascertained by him pertaining to fraud, misconduct, mismanagement and irregularities, and to any causes of action available to the estate; and
 "(4) as soon as practicable, prepare and submit a statement of his investigation of the property, liabilities, and financial condition of the debtor, and the operation of its business, in such form and manner as the court may direct, to SIPC and such other persons as the court may designate.
 "SEC. 8. SPECIAL PROVISIONS OF A LIQUIDATION PROCEEDING.
 "(a) CUSTOMER RELATED PROPERTY.—
 "(1) ALLOCATION OF CUSTOMER PROPERTY.—All customers shall be entitled to share ratably in customer property on the basis of and to the extent of their respective net equities. In, or for the purpose of, allocating customer property, securities to be delivered in payment of net equity claims for securities of the same class and series of an issuer shall be valued as of the close of business on the filing date. General creditors may not share in customer property, except that any customer property remaining after the satisfaction of all claims of customers and all claims of SIPC as subrogee and after the repayment to SIPC of moneys advanced pursuant to subsection (c) of section 9 shall become part of the general estate. To the extent customer property and SIPC advances pursuant to subsection (a) of section 9 shall not be sufficient to pay or otherwise satisfy in full the net equity claims of customers, such customers shall be entitled, to the extent only of their respective unsatisfied net equity claims, to participate in the general estate as unsecured creditors.
 "(2) DELIVERY OF CUSTOMER NAME SECURITIES.—The trustee shall deliver customer name securities to or on behalf of a customer of the debtor entitled thereto if the customer is not indebted to the debtor. With the approval of the trustee a customer may reclaim customer name securities upon payment to the trustee, within such period of time as the trustee may determine, of all indebtedness of the customer to the debtor.
 "(3) RECOVERY OF TRANSFERS.—Where customer property is not sufficient to pay in full the claims of customers, a transfer by a debtor of any property which, except for such transfer, would have been customer property may be recovered by the trustee and shall be treated as customer property if such transfer is voidable or void under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. For the purpose of such recovery, the property so transferred shall be deemed to have been the property of the debtor and, if such transfer was made to a customer or for his benefit, such customer may be deemed to have been a creditor, the laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

 "(b) PURCHASE OF SECURITIES.—The trustee may purchase securities as necessary for the delivery of securities to customers in satisfaction of their claims for net equities based on securities under subsection (b)(1) of section 7 and for the transfer of customer accounts under subsection (d), in each case to the extent that the securities can be purchased by the trustee in a fair and orderly market to restore such accounts as of the filing date. Customer property and moneys advanced by SIPC may be used by the trustee to pay for securities so purchased. Moneys advanced by SIPC may not be used to purchase securities to the extent that the aggregate value of such securities on the filing date exceeded the amount permitted to be advanced by SIPC under the provisions of subsection (a) of section 9.
 "(c) CLOSE-OUTS.—Contracts of the debtor for the purchase or sale of securities in the ordinary course of its business with other brokers or dealers and which are wholly executory on the filing date shall not be completed by the trustee, except to the extent permitted by SIPC rule. To the extent practicable, such contracts shall be closed out by such other broker or dealer without unnecessary delay in the best available market. The broker or dealer shall net all profits and losses on all such closed out contracts and shall pay any net profit to the trustee. In the event the broker or dealer sustains a net loss on such closed out contracts, it shall be entitled to file a claim against the debtor with the trustee in the amount of such loss.
 "(1) To the extent such net loss arises from contracts pursuant to which the broker or dealer was acting for his own customer, the broker or dealer shall be entitled to receive funds advanced by SIPC to the trustee in the amount of such loss up to a maximum amount of $40,000 on each such customer account with respect to which he sustained a loss.
 "(2) With respect to a net loss not payable from funds advanced by SIPC under subsection (c)(1), the broker or dealer shall be entitled to participate in the general estate as an unsecured creditor.
 "(3) For the purposes of this subsection (c), the term "customer" excludes any person who (A) is a broker or dealer, (B) had a claim for cash or securities which by contract, agreement or understanding or by operation of law, was part of the capital of the claiming broker or dealer or was subordinated to the claims of any or all creditors of such broker or dealer, or (C) had a relationship as specified in subsection (a)(5) of section 9 with either the debtor or the claiming broker or dealer. A claiming broker or dealer shall be deemed to have been acting on behalf of its customer if it acted as agent for such customer or if it held such customer's order which was to be executed as a part of its contract with the debtor.
 "(4) Neither a clearing corporation which by its rules or regulations has an established procedure for the closing out of open contracts between an insolvent broker or dealer and its members, nor its members to the extent such members' claims are or may be processed within the clearing corporation, shall be entitled to receive SIPC funds in payment of any losses on such contracts. If such clearing corporation or its members sus-tain a net loss on the closing out of such contracts with the debtor, they shall have the right to participate in the general estate as unsecured creditors to the extent of such loss. Any excess collateral held by the clearing corporation shall be promptly paid to the trustee.

 "(d) TRANSFER OF CUSTOMER ACCOUNTS.—In order to facilitate the prompt satisfaction of customer claims and the orderly liquidation of the debtor, the trustee shall have the right, on terms satisfactory to him and subject to the prior approval of SIPC, to sell or otherwise transfer, without consent of any customer, all or any part of a customer's account to another member of SIPC. In connection with any such sale or transfer and subject to the prior approval of SIPC, the trustee may—"(1) waive or modify the need to file a written statement of claim pursuant to subsection (f)(2); and
 "(2) enter into such agreements as the trustee deems appropriate under the circumstances to indemnify any such receiving member of SIPC against shortages of cash or securities in the customer accounts sold or transferred, and funds of SIPC may be made available to guarantee or secure any such indemnification. The prior approval of SIPC to such indemnity shall be conditioned, among such other standards as SIPC may determine, upon a determination by SIPC that the probable cost of any such indemnity can reasonably be expected not to exceed the cost to SIPC under subsections (a) and (b) of section 9.
 "(e) PAYMENTS TO CUSTOMERS.—Following receipt of a written statement of claim as provided in subsection (f)(2), it shall be the duty of the trustee to discharge promptly, in accordance with the provisions of this section, all obligations of the debtor to a customer relating to, or net equity claims based upon, securities or cash by the delivery of securities or the effecting of payments to or for the account of such customer (subject to the provisions of subsection (b) of section 8 and subsection (a) of section 9) insofar as such obligations are ascertainable from the books and records of the debtor or are otherwise established to the satisfaction of the trustee. In, or for the purpose of, distributing securities to customers, all securities shall be valued as of the close of business on the filing date. For the purpose of this subsection the court among other things shall—
 "(1) in respect of net equity claims, authorize the trustee to satisfy claims out of moneys made available to the trustee by SIPC notwithstanding the fact that there shall not have been any showing or determination that there are sufficient funds of the debtor available to make such payment; and
 "(2) in respect of claims relating to, or net equities based upon, securities of a class and series of an issuer which are ascertainable from the books and records of the debtor or are otherwise established to the satisfaction of the trustee, authorize the trustee to deliver securities of such class and series if and to the extent available to satisfy such claims in whole or in part, with partial deliveries to be made pro rata to the greatest extent considered practicable by the trustee.
 Any payment or delivery of property pursuant to this subsection may be conditioned upon the trustee requiring claimants to execute in a form to be determined by the trustee appropriate receipts, supporting affidavits, releases, and assignments, but shall be without prejudice to the right of any claimant to file formal proof of claim within the period specified in subsection (f) for any balance of securities or cash to which he may deem himself entitled.
 "(f) NOTICE AND CLAIMS.—
 "(1) Promptly after his appointment, the trustee shall cause notice of the commencement of proceedings under this section to be published in one or more newspapers of general circulation in the form and manner determined by the court, and shall cause a copy of such notice to be mailed to each person who, from the debtor's books and records, appears to have been a customer of the debtor with an open account within the past 12 months, to his address as it shall appear from the debtor's books and records. Notice to creditors other than customers shall be given in the manner prescribed by the Bankruptcy Act, except that such notice shall be given by the trustee.

December 19, 1974

"(2) Customers need not file formal proofs of claim, but must file a written statement of claim, except that no obligation of the debtor to any person 'associated' with the debtor as defined in section 3(a)(18) of the 1934 Act, any beneficial owner of 5 per centum or more of the voting stock of the debtor, or any member of the immediate family of any of the foregoing may be satisfied without formal proofs of claim. Claims for net equities received by the trustee after the expiration of such period of time (not exceeding 60 days after the date of publication under subsection (f)(1)) as may be fixed by the court, need not be paid or satisfied in whole or part out of customer property, and to the extent they are satisfied from moneys advanced by SIPC they shall be satisfied in cash or securities or both as the trustee may determine is most economical to the estate. No such claim shall be allowed unless received by the trustee within six months after the date of publication.

"(3) No claims of creditors received by the trustee after the expiration of six months from the date of publication shall be allowed, except that the court may, upon application within such period, and for cause shown, grant a reasonable, fixed extension of time for the filing of a claim by the United States, by a State or subdivision thereof, or by an infant or incompetent person without guardian.

"(4) Except as otherwise provided in this section, and without limiting the powers and duties of the trustee to discharge obligations promptly as specified in this section, nothing in this section shall limit the right of any person, including any subrogee, to establish by formal proof or otherwise as the court may provide such claims as such person may have against the debtor, including claims for the payment of money and the delivery of specific securities, without resort to moneys advanced by SIPC to the trustee.

"SEC. 9. SIPC ADVANCES IN A LIQUIDATION PROCEEDING.

"(a) ADVANCE FOR CUSTOMERS' CLAIMS.—In order to provide for prompt payment and satisfaction of net equities of customers of the debtor, SIPC shall advance to the trustee such moneys as may be required to pay or otherwise satisfy claims for the amount by which the net equity of each customer exceeds his ratable share of customer property but only to the extent that the amount of such excess shall not exceed $100,000 for such customer; except that—

"(1) insofar as all or any portion of the net equity claim of a customer in excess of his ratable share of customer property is a claim for cash, as distinct from securities, the amount advanced by reason of such claim for cash shall not exceed $40,000;

"(2) a customer who holds accounts with the debtor in separate capacities shall be deemed to be a different customer in each capacity;

"(3) insofar as all or any portion of the net equity claim of a customer is satisfied by the delivery of securities purchased by the trustee pursuant to subsection (b) of section 8, the securities so purchased shall be valued as of the filing date for the purpose of applying the limitations of this subsection (a);

"(4) insofar as all or any portion of the net equity of a customer is determined pursuant to the last sentence of subsection (c) (2) of section 6, SIPC may but shall not be required to make an advance with respect to the portion so determined;

"(5) no advance shall be made by SIPC to the trustee to pay or otherwise satisfy, directly or indirectly, any claim of a customer who is a general partner, officer, or director of the debtor, a beneficial owner of 5 per centum or more of any class of equity security of the debtor (other than a non-convertible stock having fixed preferential dividend and liquidation rights), a limited partner with a participation of 5 per centum or more in the net assets or net profits of the debtor, or a person who directly or indirectly through agreement or otherwise exercised or had the power to exercise a controlling influence over the management or policies of the debtor; and

"(6) no advance shall be made by SIPC to the trustee to pay or otherwise satisfy net equity claims of any customer who is a broker or dealer or bank, other than to the extent that it shall be established to the satisfaction of the trustee, from the books and records of the debtor or from the books and records of a broker or dealer or bank or otherwise, that net equity claims of such broker or dealer or bank against the debtor arise out of transactions for customers of such broker or dealer or bank, which customers are not themselves a broker or dealer or bank or a person described in subsection (a)(5), and each such customer of such broker or dealer or bank shall be deemed a separate customer of the debtor.

To the extent moneys are advanced by SIPC to the trustee to pay the claims of customers, SIPC shall be subrogated to the claims of such customers with the rights and priorities provided in this section or otherwise provided by law, except that SIPC as subrogee may assert no claim against customer property prior to the allocation thereof as provided in subsection (a)(1) of section 8.

"(b) OTHER ADVANCES.—SIPC shall advance to the trustee:

"(1) such moneys as may be required to effectuate subsection (c) of section 8; and

"(2) to the extent the general property of the debtor is not sufficient to pay any and all costs and expenses of administration of the debtor's estate and the liquidation proceeding, the amount of such costs and expenses.

"(c) DISCRETIONARY ADVANCES.—SIPC may advance to the trustee such moneys as may be required to:

"(1) pay or guarantee indebtedness of the debtor to a bank, lender or other person under subsection (b)(2) of section 7;

"(2) guarantee or secure any indemnity under subsection (d) of section 8; and

"(3) purchase securities under subsection (b) of section 8.

"SEC. 10. DIRECT PAYMENT PROCEDURE.

"(a) DETERMINATION REGARDING DIRECT PAYMENTS.—If SIPC determines that any member (including a person who was a member within 180 days prior to such determination by SIPC) has failed or is in danger of failing to meet its obligations to customers, and that there exists one or more of the conditions specified in subsection (b) (1) (A) of section 5, and that each of the following conditions appears to exist, namely—

"(1) the claim of each customer of the member is within the limits of protection provided in subsection (a) of section 9;

"(2) the claims of all customers of the member aggregate less than $250,000, and

"(3) the cost to SIPC of satisfying customer claims under this section will be less than in a liquidation proceeding,

SIPC, may, in its discretion, determine to use the direct payment procedure provided in this section, in lieu of instituting a liquidation proceeding. For purposes of this section, the terms "customer", "net equity" and "securities" shall have the same meanings as provided in subsection (c) of section 6, except that any reference to a filing date shall be deemed a reference to the date of first publication under subsection (b).

"(b) NOTICE.—Promptly after the determination in subsection (a), SIPC shall cause notice of the direct payment procedure to be published in one or more newspapers of general circulation in a form and manner determined by SIPC, and at the same time shall cause to be mailed a copy of such notice to each person who appears, from the member's books and records, to have been a customer of the member with an open account within the past 12 months to his address as it shall appear from the member's books and records. Such notice shall state that SIPC will satisfy customer claims directly, without a liquidation proceeding, and shall set forth the form and manner in which claims may be presented. A direct payment procedure shall be deemed to commence on the date of first publication and no claim by a customer shall be paid or otherwise satisfied by SIPC unless filed and received within six months after such date.

"(c) PAYMENTS TO CUSTOMERS.—SIPC shall promptly satisfy all obligations of the member to each of its customers relating to, or net equity claims based upon, securities or cash by the delivery of securities or the effecting of payments to such customer (subject to the provisions of subsection (b), of section 8 and subsection (a) of section 9) insofar as such obligations are ascertainable from the books and records of the member or are otherwise established to the satisfaction of SIPC. In, or for the purpose of, distributing securities to customers, all securities shall be valued as of the close of business on the date of publication under subsection (b) above. Any payment or delivery of securities pursuant to this section may be conditioned upon the execution and delivery in a form to be determined by SIPC of appropriate receipts, supporting affidavits, releases, and assignments. To the extent moneys of SIPC are used to satisfy the claims of customers, SIPC shall be subrogated to the claims of such customers with the rights and priorities provided by law.

"(d) EFFECT ON CLAIMS.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, nothing in this section shall limit the right of any person, including any subrogee, to establish by formal proof or otherwise such claims as such person may have against the member, including claims for the payment of money and the delivery of specific securities, without resort to moneys of SIPC.

"(e) JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS.—After SIPC has published notice of the institution of a direct payment procedure pursuant to this section, persons aggrieved by any determination by SIPC with respect to their claims filed pursuant to such notice may, within six months following mailing by SIPC of its determination with respect to such claims, seek the final adjudication of such claim. Suits arising hereunder shall be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States, and the United States district courts shall have original jurisdiction thereof without regard to the amount in controversy. Such suits shall be brought in the district where the head office of the debtor is located.

"(f) DISCONTINUANCE OF DIRECT PAYMENTS.—If at any time SIPC in its discretion shall determine that direct payments are not appropriate, SIPC may cease the direct payment procedure. Thereupon SIPC may institute a liquidation proceeding. To the extent payments of cash, distributions of securities or determinations with respect to the validity of a customer's claim are made under this section, such payments, distributions and determinations shall be recognized and given full effect in the event of any subsequent liquidation proceeding. Any suits arising under section (e) and pending at the time of the appointment of a trustee under subsection (b)(3) of section 5 shall be permanently stayed by the court at the time of such appointment, and the court shall then or thereafter enter an order directing the transfer or removal to it of such suit. Upon such removal or transfer the complaint in such suit shall constitute the plaintiff's claim in the liquidation proceeding. If appropriate, and it shall be deemed received by the trustee on the day of his appointment regardless of the date of actual transfer or removal of the claimant's suit.

"(g) EFFECT ON SIPC.—SIPC shall incur no liability to a member or to any creditor of a member for any action taken or omitted pursuant to this section."

Sec. 7. (a) Section 7 of the Act is redesignated as section 11.

(b) Subsection (a) of such section is amended by striking out "section 3(e) and section 9(f)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 3(e)(4) and section 13(f)".

(c) Such section is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(e) FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY RULES.—Section 3(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection (22) as follows:

"(22) The term 'Financial Responsibility Rules' means the rules and regulations of the Commission or the rules and regulations prescribed by any national securities exchange or registered national securities association pertaining to financial responsibility and related practices which are designated by the Commission by rule or regulation to be 'Financial Responsibility Rules'."

Sec. 8. Sections 8 through 12 of the Act are redesignated as sections 12 through 16.

Sec. 9. Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 13 as redesignated are amended to read as follows:

"(a) COLLECTION AGENT.—Each self-regulatory organization shall act as collection agent for SIPC to collect the assessments payable by all members of SIPC for whom such self-regulatory organization is the examining authority, unless SIPC designates a self-regulatory organization other than the examining authority to act as collection agent for any SIPC member who is a member of more than one self-regulatory organization. Members of SIPC who are not members of a self-regulatory organization shall make payments direct to SIPC. The collection agent shall be obligated to remit to SIPC assessments made under section 4 only to the extent that payments of such assessments are received by such collection agent.

"(b) IMMUNITY.—No self-regulatory organization shall have any liability to any person for any action taken or omitted in good faith pursuant to subsections (a) (1) and (2) of section 5.

"(c) INSPECTIONS.—The self-regulatory organization of which a member of SIPC is a member shall inspect or examine such member for compliance with applicable financial responsibility rules, except that if a member of SIPC is a member of more than one self-regulatory organization, the self-regulatory organization designated as examining authority by the Commission shall conduct such inspection or examination."

Sec. 10. (a) Section 14(a) of the Act as redesignated is amended to read as follows:

"(a) FAILURE TO PAY ASSESSMENT, ETC.—If a member of SIPC shall fail to file any report or information required pursuant to this Act, or shall fail to pay when due all or any part of an assessment made upon such member pursuant to this Act, and such failure shall not have been cured by the filing of such report or information or by the making of such payment, together with interest and penalty thereon, within five days after receipt by such member of written notice of such failure given by or on behalf of SIPC, it shall be unlawful for such member, unless specifically authorized by the Commission, to engage in business as a broker or dealer. If such member denies that he owes all or any part of the amount specified in such notice, he may after payment of the full amount so specified commence an action against SIPC in the appropriate United States district court to recover the amount he denies owing."

(b) Section 14(c) of the Act as redesignated is amended to read as follows:

"(c) EMBEZZLEMENT, FALSE CLAIMS, ETC.—Whoever steals, unlawfully abstracts, unlawfully and willfully converts to his own use or to the use of another, or embezzles any of the moneys, securities, or other assets of SIPC or otherwise defrauds or attempts to defraud SIPC or a trustee by any means including, but not limited to, the willful filing or presenting of a false claim in a liquidation proceeding or a direct payment procedure shall be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than five years or both."

Sec. 11. Section 15 of the Act as redesignated is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (b);

(2) by redesignating subsections (c) through (h) as subsections (b) through (g), respectively;

(3) by striking out subsection (c) as redesignated and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(c) LIABILITY OF SIPC, DIRECTORS, AND OTHERS.—Neither SIPC nor any of its Directors, officers or employees shall have any liability to any person for any action taken or omitted in good faith under or in connection with any matter contemplated by this Act;" and

(4) by striking out in the first sentence of subsection (d) as redesignated the words "or rule" and by striking out in such sentence the word "may" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "shall".

Sec. 12. Section 16(2) of the Act as redesignated is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Financial Responsibility Rules.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the term 'Financial Responsibility Rules' shall have the same meaning as under the 1934 Act."

Sec. 13. The amendments made by this Act shall become effective as of the date of enactment thereof, except that they shall not apply to a liquidation proceeding commenced prior thereto.

By Mr. HUGH SCOTT:

S. 4256. A bill to direct the Secretary of Commerce to require reports from foreign investors in the United States and their agents, and for other purposes. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, prudence dictates that we put ourselves in a position to protect our Nation's domestic properties at this critical time in our economy from possible encroachment by over-zealous foreign investors.

For this reason, today I am introducing legislation requiring foreign investors in the United States, or their agents here, to disclose all their U.S. holdings valued at more than $10,000 or else face imprisonment or fine.

The legislation would also enable the Secretary of Commerce to ask the Attorney General to bring action in a U.S. district court to compel compliance with the requirements in cases where any person has failed to comply. The court could then issue a temporary restraining order or preliminary or permanent injunction without bond after a hearing.

The court could also order that any investment made without compliance with the requirements of the act be sold or otherwise disposed of in such a manner and during such period of time as the court may prescribe.

The reports to the Secretary of Commerce would contain the name of the foreign investor or agent, the amount of interest in a domestic business acquired—stated both in dollars and in percentage of outstanding securities of the business, the name of the domestic business, and such other information as the Secretary may require. The reports would be required quarterly.

I want to state as strongly as possible that this bill is not intended to restrict foreign investment nor to threaten potential foreign investors. To do so would deprive our Nation of badly needed capital. Rather, the intent of this legislation is to guard our legitimate national interests.

I ask unanimous consent that this bill be printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks and that it be referred to the appropriate committee for prompt consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S. 4256

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Foreign Investment Reporting Act of 1974".

DEFINITIONS

Sec. 2. As used in this Act—

(1) the term "foreign investor" means an individual who is not a citizen of the United States, and any person or entity which, directly or indirectly, is owned or controlled by one or more such individuals;

(2) the term "domestic business" means any corporation, partnership, trust, joint venture, or other association or entity, which is located in the United States and which is substantially owned by United States citizens; and

(3) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Commerce.

PENALTIES

Sec. 4. (a) Whoever knowingly violates any provision of this Act or any order or regulation issued under this Act may be fined not to exceed $1,000 or imprisoned for not to exceed 1 year, or both.

(b) Whenever it appears to the Secretary that any person has failed to comply with the requirements of section 3 or any requirement imposed thereunder, he may request the Attorney General to bring an action in the appropriate district court of the United States to compel compliance with such requirements, and upon a proper showing a temporary restraining order or a preliminary or permanent injunction shall be granted without bond. In addition, such court may, upon a proper showing, order that any investment made without compliance with the requirements imposed under this Act be sold or otherwise disposed of in such manner and during such period of time as the court may prescribe in order to achieve compliance with the provisions of this Act.

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 5. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

Mr. JACKSON (for himself and Mr. CHURCH):

S. 4257. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to prevent discrimination against the Armed Forces of the United States in the supply of petroleum products, and for other purposes. Referred to the Committee on Government Operations.

PROHIBITION OF OIL COMPANIES FROM CUTTING OFF FUEL SUPPLIES TO U.S. ARMED FORCES ABROAD

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, last April the permanent Subcommittee on Investigations held hearings on the cutoff of oil to our military forces in the aftermath of the 1973 Arab-Israeli war. The subcommittee's investigation probed a crucial question: The role of U.S. corporations in implementing a cutoff by foreign nations of vitally needed oil supplies to our military forces abroad at a time when our 6th Fleet was on alert. The subcommittee examined the role of the multinational oil corporations which were placed in the position of having to act to implement the foreign policy decisions of another nation which were detrimental to the interests of the United States. There is no doubt that our oil corporations found themselves in a very difficult position: Assist the Arabs in implementing the embargo or face the threat of nationalization and economic retaliation.

The purpose of the subcommittee's investigation was to review the circumstances surrounding the oil companies' implementation of the Arab nations' cutoff of delivery of fuel to our Armed Forces abroad and to insure that this never happens again. The hearing demonstrated that the companies were unable to point to any legislative standards or requirement which would obligate them to resist or to withstand pressures by foreign countries to force them to work against the interests of the United States. And some Government officials appeared to be unable or unwilling to respond to the actions contemplated by the oil companies. This situation must be remedied. Today I introduced a bill which will go a long way toward establishing a standard with specific actions to be taken by the Secretary of Defense and the Attorney General in the event there is a repetition of events which transpired in October and November of 1973.

It has recently come to my attention that the oil companies have once again been less than fully cooperative with the Department of Defense in furnishing vitally needed petroleum supplies. Specifically I refer to attempts by the oil companies to force the Department to enter into contracts without supplying certain cost and pricing data required under the Truth in Negotiations Act and complying with certain cost accounting standards promulgated by the Cost Accounting Standards Board and applicable to all defense contracts.

I am placing in the RECORD a separate statement dealing with actions taken to insure oil company compliance with these statutory standards which will provide the basis for determining whether prices paid are fair and reasonable.

Of importance here, however, is the fact although the oil companies are required, under the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act, to supply the Department of Defense with its domestic requirements, this is not true with respect to furnishing foreign supplies to our military. Therefore we could face the situation of the oil companies refusing to contract for petroleum supplies for our military outside of the United States unless the contracts exclude requirements for cost data. Indeed, as I note in my statement on this matter, Mobil Oil asked for a waiver of these requirements on a $6,787,928 contract for military fuel supplies for Turkey and was refused.

The bill will also deal with this situation since "discrimination" as covered by the law will include not only the failure to perform contracts for the supply of petroleum products, as was the case in the aftermath of the 1973 Arab-Israeli war, but also the refusal or failure promptly to enter into such contracts at appropriate prices.

This bill provides that whenever the Secretary of Defense has reason to believe that there has been such discrimination against the Armed Forces of the United States by any U.S. citizen or corporation with regard to contracts involving the furnishing of petroleum supplies he shall immediately institute an investigation. If the Secretary of Defense determines that there has been discrimination he refers the matter to the Attorney General of the United States who is authorized to institute appropriate proceedings, including the enjoining of such discrimination. The amendment also provides that the Attorney General may file with the clerk of the District Court a certificate of the Secretary of Defense stating that, in the Secretary's opinion, the proceeding is of critical importance to the effective operation of the Armed Forces of the United States and that immediate relief from the discrimination is necessary. Upon receipt of such a certificate, a panel of three judges shall be convened to immediately hear and make a determination in such proceedings. Convictions for such discrimination will carry penalties of a fine of $100,000 or imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

Other amendments to title 10 would cover jurisdiction, the right to inspect records, and other procedural matters.

The need for such legislation is best illustrated by the facts surrounding the 1973 cutoff and the questions which were raised at our hearing. These are expressed in my opening statement at the hearing and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be printed in the RECORD at this time.

Mr. President, I ask that the amendments I propose to title 10, United States Supreme Court be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the statement and bill were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CURRENT ENERGY SHORTAGES OVERSIGHT SERIES—CUTOFF OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS TO U.S. MILITARY FORCES

Chairman JACKSON. The purpose of today's hearing is to initiate an inquiry into an issue that is emerging as a major and critical question of public policy.

In the broadest sense, the issue presented is this: What are the responsibilities of American-based multinational oil corporations to the U.S. Government when the vital interests of the United States and the policies of the oil-producing nations these multinational corporations operate in are in direct and fundamental conflict?

The focus of today's hearing centers on the corporate and Federal decisionmaking process whereby four domestic oil companies furnished information to the Government of Saudi Arabia which enabled the Arab oil-producing countries to implement a secondary oil embargo which effectively cut off supplies of refined oil products to U.S. defense and military installations abroad during a worldwide strategic alert.

The initial task before the subcommittee is to develop the factual record concerning the secondary embargo, the manner in which it was implemented, and its impact. This will require direct testimony of participants in these decisions as to the respective roles of the Aramco shareholders, Aramco, the Saudi Government, the Department of Defense, and other Federal agencies.

On the basis of this factual record, the subcommittee will then have to address a number of major issues which relate to insuring against a repetition of incidents of this nature or, if that is not possible, developing contingency plans to deal with shortages that threaten vital defense missions.

From staff investigation we find that these are the basic facts:

On October 31, 1973, Aramco, the Arabian-American Oil Co., a Delaware corporation, was directed by the Government of Saudi Arabia to obtain data on the petroleum products sold to the U.S. military from their shareholders' refineries in third countries which were derived from Saudi crude.

This information was apparently intended to be used to fully implement the embargo announced by Saudi Arabia against the United States on October 20, 1973.

This request was transmitted by cables signed by Frank Jungers, president of Aramco, dated October 31, to Aramco's U.S. shareholders—Exxon, Texaco, Standard of California, and Mobil. The sales data was desired in Aramco's New York office by Friday, November 2, and required in Saudi Arabia on Saturday, November 3.

The information was turned over to Aramco on November 2 and the secondary embargo was implemented on November 9.

Prior to turning over this information to Aramco, the shareholder companies had discussions among themselves and with officials of the Department of Defense.

On November 2, a Mobil official voiced concern to its Aramco partners over the disclosure of such data to the Saudi Government. Exxon, the largest military supplier, took this matter up with officials of the Department of Defense. However, very little time was left to meet the deadline imposed by the Saudi Arabian Government.

Recollections of these key conversations between Exxon officials and officials of the Department of Defense vary. We will examine these discrepancies by receiving testimony today from the participants.

Exxon apparently concluded that Defense had no objections to the turnover of such information to Aramco and so informed its fellow shareholders of Aramco. The information was subsequently turned over to Aramco and used as a basis for cutting off refined petroleum products to our military.

Thus, we will be examining the propriety of turning over such information to implement a cutoff of supplies to our military at a time when our 6th Fleet was still on alert.

Since the companies had communications between themselves and with the Department of Defense before forwarding such information to Aramco, we will be examining the responses of each of the companies as well as the Department of Defense to Aramco's request.

The issues presented by the oil embargo are difficult and complex. They are also very important. As our oil imports increase and as our dependence on foreign sources becomes greater, vital national interests are increasingly vulnerable to the use of the "oil weapon" by producing nations.

Today the subcommittee will be seeking answers to these and other questions:

1. What was the chronology of events and discussions which led to the secondary embargo?

2. What options are available to the companies short of strict compliance?

3. What kind of retaliation for noncompliance or partial compliance was either threatened or likely?

4. Assuming the companies had not cooperated in effectively enforcing the embargo, could the Arab nations have successfully enforced it themselves?

5. What kind of consultative process between the U.S. Government and the companies should be followed in the future should similar incidents arise?

6. What actions have the Department of Defense or the companies taken to avoid a repetition of such an incident?

7. Is new legislation needed to provide regulatory authority over U.S. based multinational corporations and their foreign subsidiaries when they are in the position of acting to implement the foreign policy decisions of another nation which are detrimental to U.S. interests?

The subcommittee's purpose is to obtain all of the facts which are necessary to develop policies which will protect U.S. interests. In this regard I would like to state that it is my belief that the companies made substantial efforts to shift supplies to our military during this critical embargo period.

In our search for all of the facts in this matter, we have disclosed to oil company representatives, as well as all participants in this hearing, conflicts in data and recollection so that there will be no surprises.

I would like, in conclusion, to express my sincere appreciation to Senator Percy and the minority staff for their cooperation in this important investigation.

S. 4257

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That title 10 of the United States Code is amended as follows:

(1) Chapter 141 is amended by the addition of the following:

§ 2390. Findings and declaration of purpose.

The Armed Forces of the United States operate worldwide in maintaining international peace and in protecting the interests of the United States. It is essential to the effective operation of the Armed Forces that they receive adequate supplies of petroleum products. Citizens of the United States and corporations organized within the United States enjoy the benefits of the United States flag and the protection of the Armed Forces and owe allegiance to the United States. It is the purpose of sections 2391 thru 2396 of this chapter to provide a remedy against the recurrence of discrimination by United States citizens or corporations, or persons or organizations controlled by them, against the Armed Forces in the supply of petroleum products.

§ 2391. Investigation of discrimination by the Secretary of Defense.

(a) No U.S. citizen or corporation organized or operating within the United States, or person or organization controlled by them, shall engage in discrimination in the supply, either within or outside the United States, of petroleum products for the Armed Forces of the United States.

(b) The Secretary of Defense, whenever he has reason to believe that there has been such discrimination shall immediately institute an investigation.

(c) If, following such investigation the Secretary of Defense determines that there has been a discrimination against the Armed Forces of the United States, he shall refer the matter to the Attorney General of the United States.

§ 2392. Jurisdiction of the United States courts.

(a) The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain such discrimination; and it shall be the duty of the several United States attorneys, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such discrimination. Such proceedings may be by way of petitions setting forth the case, and requesting that such discrimination shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition the court shall proceed, as soon as possible, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises.

(b) Whenever it shall appear to the court before which any proceeding under subsection (a) of this section may be pending, that the ends of justice require that other parties should be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be summoned, whether they reside in the district in which the court is held or not; and subpoenas to that end may be served in any district by the marshal thereof.

(c) Any proceeding against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district where of it is incorporated, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is incorporated, or wherever it may be found.

(d) In any proceeding brought in any district court of the United States pursuant to this section, the Attorney General may file with the clerk of such court a certificate of the Secretary of Defense that, in his opinion, the proceeding is of critical importance to the effective operation of the Armed Forces of the United States and that immediate relief from the discrimination is necessary, a copy of which shall be immediately furnished by such clerk to the chief judge of the circuit (or, in his absence, the presiding circuit judge) in which the proceeding is pending. Upon receipt of the copy of such certificate, it shall be the duty of the chief judge of the circuit or the presiding circuit judge, as the case may be, to designate immediately three judges in such circuit, of whom at least one shall be a circuit judge, to hear and determine such proceeding, and it shall be the duty of the judges so designated to assign the proceeding for hearing at the earliest practicable date, to participate in the hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the proceeding to be in every way expedited.

(e) In every proceeding brought in any district court of the United States under this section, an appeal from the final order of the district court will be only to the Supreme Court.

§ 2393. Inspection of records and furnishing of information.

For the purpose of the investigation instituted by the Secretary of Defense pursuant to section 2391, he, or any officer, employee, or agent of the United States authorized by him, shall at all reasonable times, have access to and the right to copy any book, account, record, paper, or correspondence relating to the business affairs of the person or corporation being investigated. Such person or corporation, upon demand of the Secretary of Defense, or any officer, employee, or agent of the United States authorized by him, shall furnish such information as the Secretary of Defense may require as to his or its business, organization, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other individuals, corporations, partnerships, associations and other entities.

§ 2394. Definitions.

As used in Sections 2390-2393 of this chapter:

(a) The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense includes the several States, the possessions of the United States, the Canal Zone, and the District of Columbia.

(b) The term "discrimination" means the refusal or failure promptly to enter into or perform contracts for the supply of petroleum products, at appropriate prices, in accordance with the laws and regulations of the United States governing the entering into and performance of such contracts when requested by the Secretary or his designee.

§ 2395. Penalties.

Any person or corporation who wilfully discriminates as prohibited by Section 2391 shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned for not more than two years, or both.

§ 2396. Separability.

If any provision of sections 2391 thru 2396 or the applicability thereof is held invalid, the remainder of these sections shall not be affected thereby.

(2) The analysis for chapter 141 is amended by the addition of the following:

§ 2390. Findings and declaration of purpose.

§ 2391. Investigation of discrimination by the Secretary of Defense.

§ 2392. Jurisdiction of United States courts.

§ 2393. Inspection of records and furnishing of information.

§ 2394. Definition.

§ 2395. Penalties.

§ 2396. Separability.

S. 4258. A bill to impose a moratorium on the receipt of deposits or the making of loans by financial institutions at places of business, other than those of financial institutions through the means of electronic methods of funds transfers. Referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs.

MORATORIUM ON ELECTRONIC BRANCHING

Mr. PROXMIER. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation to impose a moratorium on the establishment of electronic transfer facilities on the part of financial institutions. The moratorium would be effective as of today and would continue until December 1, 1976. The purpose of the moratorium is to enable the National Commission on Electronic Fund Transfers, which was recently established by the Congress, to study the implications of electronic branching and to make appropriate recommendations to the Congress and the President. I understand similar legislation is being introduced today in the House of Representatives by Congressman St GERMAIN.

Mr. President, the need for a moratorium on electronic branching has become necessary due to a recent interpretation of the Comptroller of the Currency holding that electronic facilities for effecting deposits, withdrawals or loans are not branches within the meaning of the National Bank Act and, therefore, are not subject to the various geographic restrictions imposed on the establishment of branches by national banks. Under this interpretation, a handful of large money center banks could establish electronic branches throughout the United States and siphon money away from locally chartered financial institutions. While these electronic branches obviously have considerable benefit for the consuming public, they also can profoundly affect the structure of financial institutions and threaten the viability of the dual banking system.

The National Committee on Electronic Fund Transfers was established to assess all of these implications and to recommend a balanced approach to the problem. However, if the interpretation of the Comptroller is allowed to stand, the Commission could be quickly faced with a fait accompli. Accordingly, I believe it is in the public interest to defer further experimentation into electronic branching until Congress can receive the Commission's report.

By recommending this moratorium I do not mean to imply that these electronic facilities will in the long run be contrary to the public interest. I can see many advantages to electronic banking and I am hopeful that these new technological developments can proceed in such a way that the stability of our financial regulatory system is not unduly threatened. I also feel strongly that we should move cautiously in this area until the recommendations of the Commission on Electronic Fund Transfers are received.

By establishing the moratorium effective December 19, 1974, I believe financial institutions are put on fair notice that Congress is seriously considering legislation to restrict electronic branching until the report of the Electronic Fund Transfers Commission is received. It is my intent to press for the adoption of such a moratorium in the next Congress retroactive to December 19, 1974. The purpose of introducing the bill today is to advise financial institutions of the possibility of a moratorium so that they will not be caught unawares if they invest in electronic branching facilities prior to congressional action next year.

PATENT MODERNIZATION ACT

Mr. FONG. Mr. President, S. 4259, a bill for the general revision and modernization of the patent law, title 35 of the United States Code, and for other purposes. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. President, one important reason why the United States of America has been able to exercise leadership in the world over the past several decades is that we have been in the forefront of science and technology. At the end of World War II in 1945, America was the undisputed leader, having crossed new frontiers of knowledge under the impetus of wartime necessity.

But those nations whose economies were shattered by the war have made a comeback, and certain other formerly agrarian nations are now making great strides in science and technology. Our Nation is facing increasingly fierce competition in world markets.

It is imperative that the United States keep pace with our competitors and exceed them, if possible.

Outnumbered as we are in population by some of our competitors, we must take positive steps to make sure we make up in quality what we lack in quantity.

This is why it is so vital that America's educational system must be the best possible. This is why our private competitive enterprise system is so important to fostering initiative and innovation. This is why we as a nation must continue to encourage research, both basic and applied.

An unsung, yet vital, component of America's success story to date is our patent system. I believe our patent system can be further improved to give even greater stimulus to invention, innovation, and advancement of the arts and sciences as envisioned by our Founding Fathers, who included in the Constitution authority for Congress:

To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries.

I am, therefore, today proposing the Patent Modernization Act of 1974, which I believe will encourage even greater disclosure by Americans of their writings and discoveries under patent safeguards, all in furtherance of our national interest.

Facing as we do in America the critical problems of energy shortages and soaring energy costs, high retail food prices, worldwide shortages of grains and other protein foods, and global inflation, we need now more than ever to provide added incentive to our inventors and scientists to find ways to solve these problems.

Our patent system can and should be increasingly instrumental in promoting discovery of feasible methods to harness solar energy, ocean wave energy, and geothermal energy. An improved patent system can stimulate discovery of methods to convert nonedible substances like cellulose into edible foods, which in turn can assist in overcoming predicted food shortages in the years to come.

Our Nation's patent incentive system should and can be improved so that its incentives not only will be preserved and protected but also perfected. Such an improved system should encourage and stimulate would-be innovators to redouble their efforts to solve our technological and scientific problems in energy, food production, and other fields through needed inventions as soon as possible.

An improved patent system can also be instrumental in the fight against inflation by encouraging new inventions that allow industry to produce more and better products per unit time, thereby increasing efficiency and output and permitting reduced prices of goods and services.

Patents represent an important and effective avenue for creating incentive to produce a greater variety of new products, spurring competition with a better product or with reduced price. Additionally, prices of existing products can be lowered through the creation of new and more efficient patentable processes which allow these goods to be produced at lower cost and sold at lower prices.

Increased productivity, of course, is most important to our Nation and at this time in our history when our total national output of goods and services—gross national product—GNP—expressed in real dollars has declined over the past three quarters.

Additional, Mr. President, patents stimulate competition and allow smaller companies to compete successfully with larger companies. As the experienced and knowledgeable Commissioner of Patents, C. Marshall Dann, explained in his June 6 speech this year before the Conference on Patents, Antitrust, and Trade Secrets, sponsored by the Federal Bar Association and the Bureau of National Affairs:

The patent system provides a spur to competition in research and development. . . . Patents can be of great value in the competitive struggle both to small companies and to large ones. To the extent they permit a small company to compete more effectively with larger companies in the same field there is an overall benefit to competition. (Emphasis supplied.)

Mr. President, without belaboring the matter further, I believe I have illustrated the need for improvement in our patent system and the importance of a viable patent system to future scientific and technological leadership for our country. May I just proceed to explain the background of patent legislation in the current Congress and then explain the provisions of the bill I am offering.

Although there is, of course, no possibility of action on my bill in the remaining several days of this session, I offer it so that it can be printed and available to all interested parties. I look upon it as a vehicle for study and discussion, and I hope that anyone interested will offer comments on the bill and suggestions for improvement, so that it can be further refined for introduction in the new Congress, which convenes in mid-January.

BACKGROUND ON PATENT LEGISLATION IN CURRENT 93D CONGRESS

There are now pending several bills offered for modernization and revision of patent laws. These are S. 1321, by Senator HART, S. 2504 by Senator SCOTT, and S. 2930 by Senator BUCKLEY.

S. 1321 (HART)

After hearings in September, 1973, on this bill and upon introduction and selection for markup of the Scott-administration—bill, work on S. 1321 ceased.

S. 2504 (SCOTT-ADMINISTRATION BILL)

The subcommittee on Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights of the Judiciary Committee labored in this Congress upon S. 2504 submitted by Senator SCOTT as a courtesy to the administration. Members of the subcommittee and their staffs soon were informed that the individuals and organizations which constitute the voluntary disclosure, patent incentive or innovative community, upon whom this country must rely for the progress of the useful arts as mandated by the U.S. Constitution, were deeply and vigorously opposed to the concepts in the administration bill. The bill received virtually no support by the public.

The will of the inventive community, as expressed at meetings of patent and inventor associations, legal organizations, chemical, engineering, and other societies, was virtually unanimous in opposition to the administration bill. Activity on S. 2504 committee print—C.P.—amended to include some of the essence of amendments offered by the administration, a small group of patent counsels, and by me, is now ended. This is discussed extensively in my "individual views" on this bill and briefly in the views of Senator JOHN L. MCCLELLAN, subcommittee chairman. I ask unanimous consent that both of these statements be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

S. 2930 (BUCKLEY—AMERICAN PATENT LAW ASSOCIATION PATENT LAW MODERNIZATION BILL)

Mr. FONG. Virtually unanimous support from the public and the innovative community was given and still exists for S. 2930 introduced by Senator BUCKLEY. This bill was prepared by members of the American Patent Law Association and members of the Section of Patent, Trademark, and Copyright Law of the American Bar Association. I found this to be a good bill. However, none of its principal provisions received the approval of the Subcommittee on Patents, Trademarks and Copyrights. Yet, this bill, in its entirety, was presented and supported by Commissioner of Patents Marshall Dann when, as president of the American Patent Law Association, he testified before the Senate September 11, 1973. Unfortunately, no real consideration was given this bill even after its formal introduction on January 31, 1974.

NEW PATENT BILL (FONG)

Upon fresh, objective reconsideration of the entire subject of patent law, I have concluded it to be desirable and appropriate to offer today a new bill to accomplish expeditiously an effective vision of the patent system.

I believe this bill will improve our Nation's patent system while maintaining the basic structure of the law, which has served us adequately for many years. The bill does not intend a radical change in the patent laws, but rather is designed to increase the incentive to the inventive community, to streamline the patent system itself, and to spur the progress of science and technology. I do not believe it is necessary to perform radical surgery to improve the health and vitality of our Nation's patent system.

My bill seeks to balance the equities between the national interests of our country and the rights of our Nation's inventors, all within the framework of a practical, workable system.

My bill is designed to meet the following goals:

First. To increase the incentive to our Nation's inventors to create more inventions to meet our country's needs now;

Second. To achieve the maximum percentage of valid patents at a minimum of cost;

Third. To allow the public to request the Patent Office to reexamine any questionable patent;

Fourth. To harness the patent system to help fight inflation, solve our energy problems, and relieve our food shortages;

Fifth. To accelerate the public disclosure of technological advances.

Sixth. To reduce the expense of obtaining and litigating a patent.

Seventh. To shorten the period of pendency of a patent application from filing to final disposition by the Patent Office.

Eighth. To raise the quality and reliability of the U.S. patents.

HISTORY OF PATENT LAW LEGISLATION, GENERAL INFORMATION

Since 1966 the following bills have been introduced: S. 1042, February 1967; S. 2597, October 18, 1973; S. 3892, July 1968; S. 1246, February 1969; S. 2756, August 1969; S. 643, February 1971; S. 1321, March 1973; S. 2504, October 1, 1973; and S. 2930, January 31, 1974.

In an effort to achieve legislation to revise title 35, which had been before the subcommittee since early 1967, the so-called Fong amendments to S. 2504 were offered during subcommittee markup sessions in mid-1974. To a large extent, the thrust of these amendments has been incorporated into the Hart-Scott markup of S. 2504 committee print and is essentially incorporated in the bill I am introducing today.

PROBLEMS OF THE INCENTIVE SYSTEM FOR GRANTING PATENTS

My proposed bill is drafted in the light of the following facts:

(A) PRIOR ACT

Studies have shown the principal problem in determining whether an invention is worthy of a patent is to make certain that all the relevant prior art is before the Patent Office.

Under present law, relevant prior art is supplied voluntarily by the applicant and through a "search" of the available prior art in the Patent Office by the patent examiner assigned to that particular case.

Under my bill, the applicant is required to submit to the Patent Office all information which he "reasonably believes" to be pertinent to the patentability of his invention.

In addition, prior art can be cited to the Patent Office by the public at any time after the patent issues. A reexamination of the patent on the basis of such cited prior art can be requested by anyone at any time. Any art to be used in a patent suit must have been considered first by the Patent Office.

Thus, my bill allows the public to attack any patent at any time during its entire life—at a very low cost—since this "reexamination" process would be done in the Patent Office, eliminating the need for hiring courtroom patent attorneys. Appeal processes are also provided within the framework of the Patent Office.

Bringing all the pertinent prior art before the patent examiner will maximize the percentage of valid patents issued by the Patent Office. According to the Patent Office Study of Court Determinations of Validity-Invalidity for the period 1968 through 1972, out of 1,500,000 patents outstanding, 2,025 were challenged as invalid. In other words, less than fifteen one-hundredths of 1 percent of all the outstanding patents were challenged.

Approximately 50 percent of the challenged patents were determined invalid, the majority of these because all the prior art was not before the examiner before the patent was issued.

It is well-nigh impossible to ensure that every patent issued will be valid, considering the approximately 80,000 patents issued each year and considering the fact that, on patent validity questions, reasonable men may honestly disagree.

As we all know, no system can ever be perfect. But I believe that by the additional input from the public as provided in chapter 31 of my bill, we can achieve the highest percentage of valid patents possible, while still protecting the inventor's rights by not denying him the power of injunction to protect his invention while his patent is being challenged.

(B) UNCLEAN HANDS; FRAUD

In the 1968 through 1972 period, 2,025 notices of patent suit were given to the Commissioner of Patents as required by law. In only 22 of the 2,025 cases, or about 1 percent of the total patents challenged, was fraud or unclean hands found. During the same 5-year period, there were an estimated 1.5 million patents outstanding. Also, in the same period of 5 years, the Patent Office issued about 400,000 patents, an average of 80,000 per year. For further information please see Patent Office study dated August 31, 1973.

Present law already provides sufficient means to deal effectively with those who may deliberately abuse the system by improper or fraudulent conduct. As the knowledgeable Assistant Attorney General of the Antitrust Division, now Judge Richard W. McLaren, said when testifying before our Senate Subcommittee on Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights, is May of 1971:

The procurement of a patent by fraud on the Patent Office may give rise to an action by the United States for cancellation of a patent, or a perjury or other criminal prosecution.

Patent Office Study of Court Determinations of Validity-Invalidity, in 1968-1972, Published Patent Trademark, Copyright Journal, No. 144, September 13, 1973, Appendix.

December 19, 1974

cution; and an attempt to enforce such a patent may constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. Similarly, the invalidity of a patent obtained by fraud is a defense in an action for infringement. . . . the Patent Code should and presently does contain safeguards to insure proper conduct by applicants before the Patent Office." (Emphasis supplied.)

Therefore, since the problem of fraud or unclean hands is already down to an almost irreducible percentage—22 of the 2,025 cases in the period 1968 through 1972—and since the patent code presently does contain sufficient safeguards to insure proper conduct by applicants before the Patent Office, my bill retains present law. As we all know, one cannot legislate honesty.

OVERVIEW

My bill includes concepts and provisions selected with care and deliberation from the several bills introduced in the past, including the recent administration bill. Concepts taken from these bills are implemented with language reflecting suggestions and recommendations from those with knowledge and expertise gained from many years of patent experience across a wide spectrum.

A substantial number of provisions from Senator BUCKLEY's bill (S. 2930), which was sponsored by the American Patent Law Association, and some provisions from the administration bill (S. 2504) have been incorporated.

My bill provides for a brand new procedure called reexamination that allows any member of the public to attack a patent and cause the Commissioner of Patents to reexamine the validity of an issued patent. This provides an inexpensive means by which anyone may attack a patent without hiring a patent attorney.

I have sought to hold down the cost of this bill by adhering to present law whenever possible.

Most importantly, my bill not only retains the crucial incentive for inventors contained in our present patent law, but I believe it significantly increases that incentive.

My bill is in accord with the fundamentals of the viable patent system, which are:

First. Availability, accessibility, and utilization of the system on the widest possible basis to the public, especially to those who would use the system—inventors, coworkers, and investors.

Second. Reasonable costs for obtaining valid patent protection for inventions.

Third. Reasonably valid protection when the patent has been obtained.

Fourth. Adequate protection of the disclosure made in the application for patent and thus disclosed to the Patent Office by the applicant, if ultimately no patent is granted.

I believe the patent system must be fair and equitable to the vast number of applicants—those who deal fairly with the Patent Office. It must not unduly burden all because of the transgressions of a very few!

THE CONGRESSIONAL PROVISION—ARTICLE I, SECTION 8, CLAUSE 8

The constitutional provision upon which the patent incentive system is based reads:

To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Rights to their respective Writings and Discoveries—(Art. I, Sec. 8, Cl. 8)

This provision mandates a voluntary disclosure patent incentive system; it also mandates that the inventor's exclusive rights be secured. In the constitutional provision, the word "securing" requires safeguarding the inventor's inherent rights to his invention.

Our Patent Office does not, as is so often mistakenly stated, grant a "monopoly." It grants a patent.

This patent is an "open letter" which, in effect, states to all who may be concerned that, in exchange for and upon the disclosure of his invention, the inventor's rights, which are inherent in him the moment he has completed his invention, have been secured so that his rights can be enforced in the courts of our land.

STIMULATION OF COMPETITION BY EARLY PATENTING

The primary purpose of the voluntary disclosure patent incentive system is to get to the public at the earliest possible moment the basic concept of the invention. Given the "crux" of the inventive concept, one skilled in the art can work with the invention or design around it. When the invention becomes known publicly, it engenders competition by those who will design around the patent claims to keep themselves competitive.

Obviously, price-cutting on the same product produced by more than one individual or organization is a kind of competition. In an innovative society, true competition results in the making available of alternative or better products, goods, or services as a result of the exclusive right. It is the exclusive right to one person which induces his competitor to produce something different or better with which to continue to compete. Thus, our patent incentive system stimulates competition.

TOO-BURDENSOME PATENT CHANGES WOULD DISCOURAGE DISCLOSURES OF INVENTIONS; ENCOURAGE RELIANCE ON TRADE SECRETS

Some provisions of other patent bills offered in this Congress concerned me because I believe they would impose unnecessary burdens upon the patent applicant and upon the Patent Office. There were too many requirements for excessive disclosure of information not needed by one skilled in the art to understand the invention for which a patent was applied.

These requirements would also impose much greater expense on the applicant and would drastically increase the reading burden on the examiner in the Patent Office. Printing costs would greatly increase without any quid pro quo benefit to anyone. Unreasonable statutory requirements for superfluous disclosure would only provide additional points for attack on validity decreasing rather than increasing the number of valid patents issued.

One bill which concerned me would have required full disclosure of the inventor's application for patent before a patent was issued on it. This would not have protected the inventor.

Neither individuals nor companies would invest time, funds, and energy to make and to develop expensive inventions only to turn them over to a competitor. Nor would they seek to obtain a patent in the face of patent law provisions that were difficult if not impossible, to comply with. They may well proceed to use their inventions secretly.

As Roger M. Milgrim said in Harvard Business Review, November-December, 1974; in his article "Getting Most Out of Your Trade Secrets," there is a growing disenchantment with the patent system of the United States—A patent is time-consuming and expensive to obtain.

Mr. Milgrim added: The key to the success of many a business, they (trade secrets) are often a good alternative to patents, and their use and licensing have been a mainstay of U.S. foreign revenues for many years.

On May 13, 1974, however, the Supreme Court determined that the law of trade secrets is independent of and complementary to the federal court patent system. Trade secret developers, therefore, can continue to choose freely between seeking patent protection and treating the matter as a trade secret.

Is it better to hold a given piece of patentable knowledge as a trade secret, thereby holding an advantage for as long as it remains secret, or is it better to seek a patent, trading public disclosure in the issued patent for a guaranteed period of statutory exclusivity?

Perhaps the major disadvantage of relying on trade secret protection, given the choice, is that the law of trade secrets encourages independent development of matter protected by a trade secret. It is, for example, perfectly lawful to purchase a competitor's formulation or product and attempt to copy it by reverse engineering. Many complex chemical processes, formulas, and manufacturing methods and techniques, however, are not readily reverse engineered and often prove terribly difficult to develop independently.

"Potential trade secret relief is startlingly superior to patent infringement relief in one respect: more than 20 states have trade secret theft statutes.

If those who are inventing and developing inventions, so that they can better compete in the marketplace with their goods and services, find that the "incentive" of our voluntary disclosure, patent incentive, inventive system is substantially reduced—and even destroyed—it is clear that they will direct their efforts toward secrecy. Return to the guilds may become the order of the day. Competition will be greatly reduced. Progress of science and the useful arts will be seriously impeded.

Only recently, the U.S. Supreme Court in Kewanee v. Bicron, 416 U.S. 470 (1974), recognized that the Federal patent laws do not compel disclosure of an invention but merely offer the exchange of a patent for the disclosure of an invention.

The present patent law, which is currently resulting in the publication of some 80,000 disclosures annually, has been eminently successful in causing the disclosure of inventions to the public.

December 19, 1974

GENERAL DISCUSSION OF SOME PROVISIONS OF THE FONG PATENT MODERNIZATION ACT

1. STATUS OF COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS—ELEVATION

Presently the Commissioner of Patents is under an Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Science and Technology.

My bill would elevate the Commissioner of Patents to Assistant Secretary of Commerce, would raise his grade from executive level V to executive level IV, and would provide the Commissioner with full authority, responsibility, and necessary flexibility to conduct the operations of the Office.

My bill would provide the essential statutory guidance for the operation of the Patent Office and the examination of patent applications. It would leave the rulemaking authority in the administration of the Patent Office, where it belongs.

2. MAJOR PROVISIONS OF PRESENT TITLE 35 UNITED STATES CODE ARE RETAINED

Those provisions which are essential in present title 35 are retained as a basis for continued effective operation of our system.

The major portion of my bill consists of existing law, with slight modifications in some cases and substantive improvements in others.

3. SUBMISSION OF PRIOR ART BY APPLICANT

Present law does not require nor provide for submission of prior art known to applicant.

As I have noted, the principal problem in patent procurement is to place before the patent examiner the pertinent information needed to reach a judgment on patentability. My bill provides this in a reasonable, relatively feasible, inexpensive, manner. All pertinent information that reasonably can be found which would affect the examiner's judgment is required to be submitted by the applicant into the record.

4. RECORD OF ORAL INTERVIEWS

Present law provides no guidelines for recording of oral interviews.

My bill would provide that no oral interviews can be had without making a written record of points covered and their disposition. This record would be a permanent part of the patent file in the Patent Office. It would be available to the public whenever a study of the patent is made.

5. PATENT DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS—VALIDITY

Present law provides requirements for disclosure.

My bill would require only that the inventor or applicant for patent shall disclose sufficiently that concept or that information which those skilled in the art need to understand the invention.

The constitutional provision regarding patents obviously envisioned a system in which the return to the applicant will make it worth his while to relinquish his disclosure to competitors. Any attempt to siphon from him the continuing results of his research will operate as a serious disincentive, particularly at this time when we need to increase incentives.

The constitutional mandate does not require extensive, time-consuming disclosure of "all" the knowledge of the inventor or his associates. Funds and time should not be required to prepare a cookbook detailed disclosure to those skilled in the art.

6. RE-EXAMINATION OF ISSUED PATENTS

Present law has no provision for re-examination of patents.

(A) CITATION OF ART

Importantly, my bill provides that the applicant's invention shall not be disclosed to the public by the Patent Office unless and until the applicant and the Patent Office Examiner are both satisfied that a patent should and does issue. I have previously noted that my bill provides that any interested party can cite additional prior art to the Patent Office at any time after a patent issues. Upon a request for re-examination the Patent Office will consider the new art. That consideration will show whether the disclosure of the newly cited art is in fact closer to the invention claimed in the patent than that of the art previously considered by the Office. If it is, the Office will then decide whether it will nullify the patent or one or more of its claims or to abbreviate their scope.

(B) RIGHTS OF PATENT HOLDER

Present law sufficiently provides for rights of a patent holder.

My bill preserves the present rights of a patent holder.

Importantly, at the moment the patent is granted, the inventor—now a patentee—will, under my bill, have the rights which under our laws always have been those of a patent holder and which provided the incentive to disclose his invention. The incentive to apply for a patent will have been preserved. He will have the right to proceed, under due process of law, to obtain an injunction against anyone who infringes a claim of his patent.

Potential infringers will know this and only at their own risk will then proceed to use the invention and/or to make, use, sell, or stockpile either machines, manufactures, articles, or compositions of matter protected by patent claims. Full measure of damages for infringement will be available to the patentee in the courts. The mandate of our Constitution will have been "secured."

Many approaches have been advanced for improving potential validity of patents through the means of opposition proceedings. One approach called for opposition proceedings before the issuance of a patent. This could allow third parties to cite from time to time prior art, hoping that, by repeated new citations, issuance will be delayed. Also, I have noted great concern about the inherent expense of such proceedings.

In that respect, I have supported S. 2930 introduced by my colleague from New York, Senator JAMES BUCKLEY. However, as I have previously stated, chapter 31 of my bill does insure that all art will be considered by the Patent Office in connection with those patents which may be offered for license or in the course of litigation.

This procedure is also attractive because it is relatively inexpensive. Thus, under chapter 31 there are reduced to a minimum the time and expense involved on the part of the Office personnel and on the part of the innovative community to deal with art cited against the patent, leaving the time and money for further progress of the useful arts through innovation.

The provisions of chapter 31 of my bill should be contrasted, carefully, with provisions of other bills which would publish and thus disclose the invention to a competitor of the inventor before a patent has been granted. Unless such bills would provide that the remedies for any unauthorized practice during the period starting with publication and ending with issuance of patent shall be those which would have been available had the patent been issued at the beginning of the period, and, further, that there shall be upon issuance of the patent the right to enjoin the use or sale of machines, manufactures, or compositions of matter made during that period, the provisions should be condemned as failing to meet the constitutional test.

Without these provisions, these bills would permit a compulsory licensing of the invention and to compulsory licensing of the patent with respect to machines, manufactures, or compositions of matter made during that opposition period.

Even if such provision includes that a reasonable royalty shall be paid to the patentee, that provision is defective because a reasonable royalty to one may not be a reasonable royalty to another.

Furthermore, the patentee may have wanted to practice his invention and to permit no one else to do so. He may have wished to start his own company or to cause his own company to grow, this being his free choice of how to compete in the marketplace.

7. SUBPENA POWERS—SECTION 23, SECTION 24

Present law, in sections 23 and 24, provides subpoena powers which have always been ample and proper.

My bill would preserve these powers.

In line with the principle of keeping examination in the Patent Office, I believe that subpoena powers should be retained in the Federal courts. A person, especially one who has no experience in the Patent Office, should continue to have, as he now does, the right to move to quash a subpoena issued against him and to do so in his own home district or jurisdiction. He should be able to do this under due process of law in a duly established court where each citizen would have the protection of the law as applied by a judge of that court. My bill preserves this due process of law for all persons.

8. SOLICITOR—SECTION 3 (d); BOARD OF APPEALS—SECTION 7

Present title 35 does not establish the position of Solicitor.

For a very long time, however, by administrative action there has been a satisfactorily functioning Solicitor and aides in the Patent Office.

There has also been a Board of Appeals and this Board is currently provided for in title 35.

My bill retains the Board of Appeals and also provides statutorily for a Solicitor. It prescribes the powers and duties of the Solicitor and the Board of Appeals. The functions of the Solicitor and the Board of Appeals are basically retained as in present law.

December 19, 1974

9. PROVISIONS FOR DISCLOSURE TO THE PATENT OFFICE—SECTIONS 112, 115, 131, 251

Present law provides for disclosure, for an oath, for examination, and for reissue of a defective patent.

My bill preserves and modifies, with improvements, these provisions.

I reiterate that the primary function of the Patent Office is to obtain disclosure of invention in such a manner that its basic concept will be clear to one who is skilled in the art to which it pertains or with which it may be most nearly connected. The would-be discloser of an invention should be continually encouraged, subject only to reasonable regulations or requirements, to come forward and to disclose his invention.

If the basic concept of his invention is not sufficiently made clear so that one skilled in the art applying his skill can place the invention into practice, then the patent should not be granted. My bill amply provides for a court to hold the patent invalid if it is granted without adequate disclosure of the invention. This will be a loss to the patentee of his secured rights to exclude others. This possible loss of right is ample incentive to produce the necessary disclosure.

Thousands of persons apply for a patent each year. Of these, a very few may inadvertently fail to disclose sufficiently that which is needed by one skilled in the art to comprehend and to practice the invention. There may be some who may deliberately withhold essential information from those skilled in the art. Burdening thousands of patent applicants because of relatively very few who may not have dealt fairly or properly with the Patent Office would be grossly inequitable.

Our great voluntary disclosure, patent incentive, inventive system should be made even more attractive, if possible, to encourage more progress of the useful arts and competition. It should not be made less attractive to the thousands of applicants because of a dishonest few. The patents of those few would, of course, be judged invalid.

Only reasonable disclosure requirements can be successful in a voluntary disclosure, patent incentive, inventive system.

The provisions which relate to disclosure including sections 112, 115, 131, and 251; should be sufficient to insure that an adequate disclosure will be made. There must be a balance between that which in theory may be required and that which in practice can be reasonably supplied. Anything less than adequate would be under my bill, as at present, basis for refusing to grant a patent.

(A) INFORMATION IN POSSESSION OF APPLICANT

Present title 35 makes no explicit requirement that information relating to prior art in possession of applicant shall be disclosed to the Patent Office.

My bill provides a practical requirement for such disclosure.

It is reasonable to require that the applicant, his associates, and/or his attorney tell the Patent Office the principal items of prior art that any of them have in their possession and which any of them have considered during the preparation of the application for patent.

It is reasonable to expect that such items will be noted by them so that when the time comes that the application for patent is filed, they can apprise the Patent Office of prior art which, upon review of all the matters noted by them, should in good conscience be disclosed to the Patent Office.

Also, it is reasonable to insist that the disclosure of such information and knowledge be reasonably complete at the time the application for patent is filed.

(B) PRIOR ART AFTER FILING

My bill further provides that, subsequent to the filing of the application, any prior art coming to the attention of either the inventor or his associates, or their attorneys or agent, shall be made available to the Patent Office within a reasonable time. There should be no penalty for inadvertence leading to a failure to disclose. Invalidity of a patent should not rest on mere technicality. It should be based only on whether or not the essential information has been disclosed.

10. COMMISSIONER'S FREEDOM TO REGULATE APPROPRIATELY

Present law provides the Commissioner of Patents with authority to issue regulations or rules not inconsistent with the law.

My bill preserves and improves present law.

Under my bill, the Commissioner of Patents would have the authority, as he has now, to promulgate rules and regulations not inconsistent with the law. In addition, by elevating the Commissioner of Patents to the level of Assistant Secretary, my bill eliminates one layer of bureaucracy and thus streamlines the operation of the Patent Office.

My bill does not, as the administration bill had proposed, write detailed regulations into the statute. I believe the existing Administrative Procedure Act not only provides the necessary flexibility for the Commissioner, but also provides opportunity for all interested parties to express to the Commissioner their views prior to final promulgation of regulations. In addition, this act provides for judicial review of regulations.

In the very complex, highly technical field of patent examination, Congress should set the policy guidelines and let the rulemaking process with all its safeguards under well-established law fill in the pertinent details.

11. COSTS OF PATENT OFFICE OPERATIONS—FEES AND BUDGET

At present, the entire Patent Office operation involves a budget of about $80,000,000 annually. The Patent Office collects fees to the extent of about $30,000,000, which are paid to the Treasury. If only these fees are taken into consideration, the net cost of the operation of the Patent Office is approximately $50,000,000. As I noted earlier, however, the tax revenues generated through licensing of patents and through taxable income earned by enterprises using the patents totals more than the budget of the Patent Office.

My bill retains the fee schedule of 35 U.S.C. I do not favor drastic revision of those fees. The public will continue to benefit greatly by continued widespread use of the patent system. They should not be discouraged in that use by fee increases.

Many in Government circles choose to ignore the general income taxes that patent owners pay on income from patent licenses. Also, many ignore the taxes generated by the great many enterprises created and operated as a result of the working of the incentive of our patent incentive system. Despite the fact that such funds are not set aside for specific use of the Patent Office, I believe we should recognize the financial support to the Federal Government by those funds and not try to cut too deeply into the patent owner's returns.

Setting of fees has been, and should continue to be, the prerogative of the Congress by statute. The Commissioner and his staff should submit to the Congress a schedule of fees with suitable justification.

12. MAINTENANCE FEES

Present law does not require the inventor or patent holder to pay fees to maintain the patent for its statutory life.

My bill provides for reasonable maintenance fees.

It is a fallacy to contend, as some have done, that under present law the Patent Office operates at a financial loss to our Government. Our Nation derives benefit far in excess of costs of operation of the Patent Office. It taxes incomes created by the progress of the useful arts and by consequent competition induced by the granting of patents. As earlier indicated, taxes collected by the Federal, State, and local governments on all operations, production of goods and services or by earned income in wages and salaries, and on royalties on patent license agreements, are so vast that our government at all levels—local, State, and Federal—is amply repaid for operation of the Federal patent incentive system.

On the other hand, those who would seek a patent should pay reasonable filing fees so that they will not lightly file applications for patent.

Time has allowed review of whether and to what extent maintenance fees should be payable on issued patents and yet retain the maximum possible incentive to come forward and to disclose. It must be clear to the inventor or to the organization to which he may assign his invention that the expense in proceeding by the patent route will be reasonable in his or its circumstances, otherwise he will proceed in secrecy, as I noted earlier.

Whether maintenance fees should be charged should not be related to the cost of operation of the Patent Office. At best such fees should be related only to the cost of collecting the fees.

In my "Individual Views," referring to the question of maintenance fees, I stated:

There have never been maintenance fees in the United States. There are no maintenance fees under present law. Once an inventor pays his patent attorney the fees for the prosecution for a patent and pays the fees charged by the Patent Office and his patent is issued, he has his patent free and clear for 17 years. He has responded to the incentive of the system and has disclosed his invention to the public.

December 19, 1974

Inventors are creators. Inventors take nothing from the public; they add to the public. Perhaps they should not be charged at all for filing patent applications, but should be paid for doing so.

At a time when our nation's economy is floundering, and our Gross National Product is declining, I question the wisdom of adding this heavy handicap to our nation's inventors. At a time when our Gross National Product has fallen 5.8% and we have a negative export/import balance, it appears to be a most inappropriate time to possibly DESTIMULATE our economy. (See April 19, 1974, Washington Post article entitled "GNP Falls 5.8%; Inflation Rate Rises to 10.8%")

It is also arguable that extremely high maintenance fees are possibly unconstitutional. Congress has been mandated (Article I, Sec. 8, Cl. 8):

"To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries."

There is no indication in our Constitution that the government should charge any more than nominal administrative fees.

Many of the inventive community argue that the taxes received by the government from royalties paid to inventors and the taxes received by the government from the sale of products covered by patents far outweigh the cost of running the Patent Office, now estimated at about $77 million per year.

Indeed, it has been said as early as in the 1950's that the tax on the royalties which are received in the electronics industry alone, through patent license and other arrangements, just about equals the cost of operations of the Patent Office. Therefore, the Patent Office could be looked upon as already a self-sustaining operation in the sense that it earns for the government taxes which already exceed the cost of operating the Patent Office.

There is no logical reason based either on the constitutional mandate or otherwise for which maintenance fees should be charged. The Patent Office is operated to stimulate invention and disclosure thereof to benefit all the people. All parties agree that this function has been amply discharged. The value of the award of a patent in exchange for the disclosure of the invention therein described should not be significantly reduced by maintenance fees. Maintenance fees will constitute a second big bite of the apple from the patent owner.

In a spirit of compromise, I am willing to accept reasonable maintenance fees.

13. INFRINGEMENT OF PATENTED PROCESS BY IMPORTED PRODUCT

Present title 35 does not contain any explicit provision securing the right of a process patent holder to sue for infringement by an importer of a product made abroad by his patented process.

My bill would provide protection for the U.S. process patent holder.

Major industrial nations—France, West Germany, Japan, England, Italy—who are competitors of U.S. producers protect their inventors holding process patents.

My bill would provide similar protection to our Nation's inventors holding process patents.

CXX—2594—Part 31

Section 271(e) of my bill would provide to the American patentee or patent holder the right to sue for infringement upon any unauthorized importation of a product produced abroad by anyone else using his patented process.

PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON PATENT SYSTEM

Finally, my bill has been designed to accomplish the objectives of the President's Commission on the Patent System as these are reported by that Commission on pages 3 and 4 of its report submitted to the President on November 17, 1966. These objectives are worthy of repetition because all of them must be implemented in such a manner as to preserve, protect, and perfect the incentive of our voluntary disclosure, patent incentive, inventive system. Accordingly, they are contained in my "Individual Views" on S. 2504 committee print at the conclusion of my remarks.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

In preparing and presenting this bill, I have endeavored to find common ground on which all parties can agree, so that the patent incentive system will be truly improved. I believe the provisions of my bill are reasonable and reach the objectives of the President's Commission.

A complete rewrite or even extensive revision of title 35 or of its basic concepts can but engender 20 to 30 years of litigation at great expense to the public and great uncertainty to the inventive community.

I am seeking to avoid a dichotomy amounting to a polarization of opinion respecting key provisions. I have endeavored to give due weight to the views of the voluntary disclosure, patent incentive, inventive system community, which includes the Patent Office Commissioner, the Commission on Revision of the Federal Appellate System, and inventors, individuals, industry, and members of the bar who advise those responding to the patent incentive.

As I stated in my introductory remarks, I offer my bill for discussion and study by all interested parties. I look forward to receiving their comments and suggestions which would improve any features of my bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my bill be printed in the Record at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S. 4259

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Patent Modernization Act of 1974."

- "The Patent and Trademark Office, hereinafter termed 'Office,' shall continue as an office in the Department of Commerce, where records, books, drawings, specifications, and other papers and things pertaining to patents and to trade-mark registrations shall be kept and preserved, except as otherwise provided by law. The Office shall function independently of the Department of Commerce in the exercise of discretion concerning the rule-making, investigatory, and adjudicatory functions of the Office, including judicial proceedings related thereto. Appointment of members of the Board of Examiners-in-Chief and primary examiners shall not be subject to the provisions of section 3105 of Title 5, United States Code.
- "§ 2. Seal
- "The Patent Office shall have a seal with which letters patent, certificates of trademark registrations, and papers issued from the Office shall be authenticated.
- "§ 3. Commissioner and other officers

"(a) (1) There shall be a chief administrative officer of the Office, the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks, referred to in this title as the Commissioner. The Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Patents and Trademarks, shall, ex officio, be the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks. The Commissioner shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and he shall be compensated at the rate now or hereafter provided for level IV of the Executive Schedule pay rates (5 U.S.C. 5315). The Commissioner shall superintend or perform all duties required by law respecting the granting and issuing of patents and the registration of trademarks, shall have the authority to carry on studies and programs regarding domestic and international patent and trademark law and practice, and shall have charge of property belonging to the Office. The Commissioner is authorized to promulgate rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, governing proceedings before the office; to review, himself or by such delegate as he shall designate, all decisions or orders of the Office, the review of which other provisions of this title do not assign to the Board of Appeals; and otherwise to prescribe such further rules and regulations and take such further actions as may be necessary or proper for purposes of administration of the Office.

"(2) The Commissioner may, in coordination with the Department of State, carry on programs and studies cooperatively with foreign patent offices and international intergovernmental organizations, or may authorize such programs and studies to be carried on, in connection with the performance of duties stated in subsection (a)(1) of this section.

"(3) The Commissioner may, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State, transfer funds appropriated to the Office, not to exceed $200,000 in any year, to the Department of State for the purpose of making special payments to international intergovernmental organizations for studies and programs for advancing international cooperation concerning patents and trademarks. These special payments may be in addition to any other payments or contributions to the international organization and shall not be subject to any limitations imposed by law on the amounts of such other payments or contributions by the Government of the United States.

"(4) The Commissioner may, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State, allocate funds appropriated to the Office, to the Department of State for the purpose of payment of the share on the part of the United States to the working capital fund established under the Patent Cooperation Treaty. Contributions to cover the share on the part of the United States of any operating deficits of the International Bureau under the Patent Cooperation Treaty shall be included in the annual budget of the Office and may be transferred by the Commissioner to the Department of State for the purpose of making payments thereof to the International Bureau.

"(b) There shall be a Deputy Commissioner of the Office, who shall be appointed by the Commissioner, and who shall be compensated at a per annum rate of basic compensation not in excess of the maximum scheduled rate provided for positions in grade 18 of the General Schedule. The Deputy Commissioner shall perform such functions as the Commissioner may assign or delegate and he shall act as Commissioner during the absence or disability of the Commissioner or in the event of a vacancy in the office of the Commissioner.

"(c) The Commissioner may appoint not more than four assistant Commissioners of the Office who shall be compensated at a per annum rate of basic compensation not in excess of the maximum scheduled rate provided for positions in grade 18 of the General Schedule. Such Assistant Commissioners shall perform such functions as the Commissioner may from time to time assign or delegate. In the event of vacancies in the offices of Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner, or their absence or disability, the Assistant Commissioner senior in date of appointment shall fill the office of Commissioner until said vacancies, absences, or disabilities terminate.

"(d) In addition to the officers designated in the preceding subsections of this section, there shall be a solicitor of competent legal and scientific knowledge and ability, appointed by the Commissioner, who shall be compensated at a per annum rate of basic compensation not in excess of the maximum scheduled rate provided for positions in grade 18 of the General Schedule. He shall perform such legal functions as requested by the Commissioner under regulations promulgated by the Commissioner. He or his delegate—

"(1) may participate in any proceeding before the Office when the supervisory primary examiner or the Board of Appeals so requests and it appears to him that it is necessary or appropriate in the public interest for him to participate;

"(2) shall defend appeals from any final action of the office, except as otherwise provided by subsection (f) of this section;

"(3) shall conduct such investigations or inquiries pursuant to section 24 of this title, as may be necessary or appropriate to investigate violations of this title and rules and regulations promulgated thereunder; and

"(4) shall take measures appropriate to assure that adverse or conflicting interests or positions are not taken by the same employee of the Office.

"(e) The Commissioner shall, subject to other requirements of law, appoint Examiners-in-Chief and other officers and employees and assign or delegate to them the functions of the Office. The Commissioner is authorized to fix the per annum rate of basic compensation of each examiner-in-chief at not in excess of the maximum scheduled rate provided for positions in Grade 17 of the General Schedule (5 U.S.C. 5104).

"(f) Any other provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding the authority of the Solicitor and that of any officer or employee of the Office, to appear before the courts shall be subject to the direction and control of the Attorney General, and shall be limited to such delegation of authority as the Attorney General or his duly authorized representative may make.

"(g) The Secretary of Commerce may vest in himself the functions of the Patent Office and its officers and employees specified in this title and may from time to time authorize their performance by any other officer or employee.

"§ 4. Restrictions on officers and employees as to interest in patents

"(a) Officers and employees of the Office shall be incapable, during the period of their appointments and for one year thereafter, of applying for a patent or, during such period and for one year thereafter, being named as an inventor in an application for patent for an invention made during such period or for one year thereafter and of acquiring, directly or indirectly, except by inheritance or bequest, any patent or any right or interest in any patent, issued or to be issued by the Office.

"(b) After expiration of the one-year post-appointment period provided for in subsection (a) of this section, a former officer or employee may apply for a patent or be named as an inventor in an application for patent: Provided, however, that if the subject matter claimed in an application for patent was invented during the period of his appointment or employment or within one year thereafter, the application for such patent shall not be entitled to any date of invention earlier than one year after termination of the appointment of such former officer or employee.

"(c) The Commissioner shall prescribe regulations governing the participation of present or former officers and employees of the Office in the preparation or prosecution of applications for patent which may be or have been assigned to one or more examining groups to which the work of such officers or employees may be or has been related.

"(d) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to modify the obligations imposed by this or any other title of the United States Code upon present or former officers and employees of the United States.

"§ 7. Board of Appeals

"(a) The Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioners, and the examiners-in-chief shall constitute a Board of Appeals in the Patent Office. The examiners-in-chief shall be persons of competent legal knowledge and scientific ability, who shall be appointed under the classified Civil Service. There shall be not more than thirty examiners-in-chief.

"(b) The Board of Appeals shall:

"(1) Review adverse decisions of the primary examiners upon applications for patents as provided in section 134 of this title.

"(2) Review or consider actions arising under Section 135 of this title and perform the functions specified in other Acts of Congress as being performed by a Board of Patent Interferences and when performing said functions shall constitute a Board of Patent Interferences.

"(3) Render other decisions and orders or perform other functions or duties as provided in this title or as the Commissioner of Patents may by regulation or order prescribe.

"(c) Each appeal or other action shall be decided by at least three members of the Board of Appeals. The Board of Appeals has sole power to reconsider its decisions.

"(d) Whenever the Commissioner considers it necessary to maintain the work of the Board of Appeals current, he may designate any patent examiner of the primary examiner grade or higher having the requisite ability to serve as examiner-in-chief for periods not exceeding six months each. An examiner so designated shall be qualified to act as a member of the Board of Appeals. Not more than one such designated examiner-in-chief shall be a member of the Board of Appeals hearing an appeal or considering a case. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to fix the per annum rate of basic compensation of each designated examiner-in-chief in the Office at not in excess of the maximum scheduled rate provided for positions in grade 16 of the General Schedule of positions referred to in section 5104 of title 5, United States Code. The per annum rate of basic compensation of each designated examiner-in-chief shall be adjusted, at the close of the period for which he was designated to act as examiner-in-chief, to the per annum rate of basic compensation which he would have been receiving at the close of such period if such designation had not been made.

"(e) Except as otherwise provided in or pursuant to this title, the Board of Appeals shall exercise judicial functions of the Office, including all agency review of appeals, as provided in this title. Except as provided otherwise in this title, the decision of the Board of Appeals shall constitute final agency action (as that term is defined in 5 U.S.C. 551) in all matters considered by it, and shall be the final decision of the Office for the purposes of chapter 13 of this title.

"§ 8. Library

"(a) The Commissioner shall make all reasonable efforts to maintain a complete and current library of scientific and technical works and periodicals, both foreign and domestic, in the Office which shall be available to its employees in the discharge of their duties under this title and to assist the public in the study of the useful arts.

"(b) The Commissioner may establish liaison with such Government agencies as may be appropriate in order to make available to the Office library additional scientific and other works and periodicals, both foreign and domestic.

"§ 9. Classification of patents

The Commissioner shall maintain with appropriate revisions the classification by subject matter of published specifications of United States patents and of such other patents and applications and other scientific and technical information as may be necessary or practicable, for the purpose of determining with readiness and accuracy the patentability of subject matter for which applications for patent are filed.

"§ 10. Certified copies of records

"The Commissioner may, upon payment of the prescribed fee, furnish certified copies of records of the Office to persons entitled thereto.

"§ 11. Publications and public services

"(a) The Commissioner shall cause to be published, in such format as he determines to be suitable, the following:

"(1) The specifications and drawings of patents and patent applications, subject to the provisions of this title.

"(2) Certificates of trademark registrations, including statements and drawings.

"(b) The Commissioner may cause to be published, in such format as he determines to be suitable, the following:

"(1) Patent abstracts.

"(2) The Official Gazette of the United States Patent Office.

"(3) Annual indices of patents, published applications and trademarks, and information concerning the same.

"(4) Annual volumes of decisions in patent and trademark cases.

"(5) Classification manuals and indices of the classifications of patents.

"(6) Pamphlet copies of the patent laws and rules of practice, laws, and rules relating to trademarks and circulars and other publications relating to the business of the office.

"(c) The Office may print the headings of the drawings for patents for use in lithography.

"(d) The Commissioner (1) shall maintain public facilities for the searching of patent materials, (2) may establish a public information service for the dissemination to the public of information concerning patents and trademarks, and (3) may from time to time disseminate or provide for dissemination of public technological and other public information, the publication of which in his judgment would encourage invention and progress in the useful arts. Such dissemination may be made by periodical or other publications, the preparation and display of exhibits, and other appropriate means.

"(e) The Commissioner may exchange copies of any of the publications specified in subsections (a) and (b) for publications desirable for the use of the Office for like items of other countries, and may furnish copies of any of these publications to international intergovernmental organizations of which the United States is a member.

"(f) The Commissioner may supply copies of specifications and drawings of patents to public libraries in the United States which shall maintain such copies for the use of the public, at the rate for each year's issue established for this purpose in section 41 of this title.

"§ 12. Research and studies

"The Commissioner shall conduct a program of research and development to improve and expedite the handling, classification, storage, and retrieval of patents and other scientific and technical information.

"§ 13. Annual report to Congress

"The Commissioner shall report to Congress annually the moneys received and expended, statistics concerning the work of the Office, and other information relating to the Office as may be useful to the Congress or the public.

"Chapter 2—PROCEEDINGS IN THE OFFICE

"Sec.

"21. Day for taking action falling on Saturday, Sunday, or holiday.

"22. Form of papers filed.

"23. Evidence on Office cases.

"24. Subpoenas, witnesses.

"25. Oath and declaration in lieu of oath.

"26. Effect of defective or missing execution.

"27. Effective date of documents and fees to be filed in the Office.

"§ 21. Day for taking action falling on Saturday, Sunday, or holiday

"When the day, or the last day, for taking any action or paying any fee required by this title falls on Saturday, Sunday, a holiday within the District of Columbia, or on any other day where receipt of papers cannot be effected the action may be taken, or the fee paid, on the next succeeding secular business day.

"§ 22. Form of papers filed

"The Commissioner may by regulation prescribe the form of papers filed in the Office.

"§ 23. Evidence in Office cases

"The Commissioner shall establish regulations for the presentation and production of evidence in Office proceedings, including affidavits, depositions, discovery, and other evidence required in the Office. Any officer authorized by law to take depositions to be used in the courts of the United States, or of the State where he resides, may take such affidavits and depositions.

"§ 24. Subpoenas, witnesses

"(a) The clerk of any United States court for the district wherein testimony is to be taken in accordance with regulations established by the Commissioner for use in any case in the Office, shall, upon the application of any party thereto, issue a subpoena for any witness residing or being within such district, commanding him to appear and testify before an officer in such district authorized to take depositions and affidavits, at the time and place stated in the subpoena. The provisions of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure relating to the attendance of witnesses, discovery and to the production of documents and things shall apply to contested cases in the Office consistent with Office regulations established under Section 23 of this title.

"(b) Every witness subpoenaed and in attendance shall be allowed the fees and traveling expenses allowed to witnesses attending the United States district courts.

"(c) A judge of a court whose clerk issued a subpoena may enforce obedience to the process or punish disobedience as in other like cases, on proof that a witness, served with such subpoena, neglected or refused to appear or to testify. No witness shall be deemed guilty of contempt for disobeying such subpoena unless his fees and traveling expenses in going to, and returning from, and one day's attendance at the place of examination, are paid or tendered him at the time of the service of the subpoena; nor for refusing to disclose any secret matter except upon appropriate order of the court which issued the subpoena.

"The Commissioner may by regulation prescribe the form of papers filed in the Office.

"§ 23. Evidence in Office cases

"The Commissioner shall establish regulations for the presentation and production of evidence in Office proceedings, including affidavits, depositions, discovery, and other evidence required in the Office. Any officer authorized by law to take depositions to be used in the courts of the United States, or of the State where he resides, may take such affidavits and depositions.

"§ 24. Subpoenas, witnesses

"(a) The clerk of any United States court for the district wherein testimony is to be taken in accordance with regulations established by the Commissioner for use in any case in the Office, shall, upon the application of any party thereto, issue a subpoena for any witness residing or being within such district, commanding him to appear and testify before an officer in such district authorized to take depositions and affidavits, at the time and place stated in the subpoena. The provisions of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure relating to the attendance of witnesses, discovery and to the production of documents and things shall apply to contested cases in the Office consistent with Office regulations established under Section 23 of this title.

"(b) Every witness subpoenaed and in attendance shall be allowed the fees and traveling expenses allowed to witnesses attending the United States district courts.

"(c) A judge of a court whose clerk issued a subpoena may enforce obedience to the process or punish disobedience as in other like cases, on proof that a witness, served with such subpoena, neglected or refused to appear or to testify. No witness shall be deemed guilty of contempt for disobeying such subpoena unless his fees and traveling expenses in going to, and returning from, and one day's attendance at the place of examination, are paid or tendered him at the time of the service of the subpoena; nor for refusing to disclose any secret matter except upon appropriate order of the court which issued the subpoena.

"§ 25. Oath and declaration in lieu of oath

"(a) An oath to be filed in the Office may be made before any person within the United States authorized by law to administer oaths or, when made in a foreign country, before any diplomatic or consular officer of the United States authorized to administer oaths, or before any officer authorized to administer oaths in the foreign country in which the applicant may be, whose authority shall be proved by certificate of a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, and such oath shall be valid if it complies with the laws of the state or country where made.

"(b) The Commissioner may by regulation prescribe that any document to be filed in the Office and which is required by law, rule, or other regulation to be under oath may be subscribed to by a written declaration in such form as the Commissioner may prescribe, such declaration to be in lieu of the oath otherwise required.

"(c) Whenever such written declaration is used, the document must warn the declarant that willful false statements and the like are punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, in accordance with 18 U.S.C. 1001.

"(d) The Commissioner may by regulation prescribe that any oath or declaration of a person not fluent in English shall be in a language in which he is fluent, together with an English translation thereof, the accuracy of which shall be attested to pursuant to such rules as the Commissioner may prescribe.

"§ 26. Effect of defective or missing execution

"Any document to be filed in the Office and which is required by any law or regulation to be executed in a specified manner may be provisionally accepted by the Commissioner despite a defective or missing execution, provided a properly executed document is submitted within such reasonable time as may be prescribed by the Commissioner.

"§ 27. Effective date of documents and fees to be filed in the Office

"The Commissioner may by regulation prescribe that an application for Letters Patent, or for Trademark registration, any other document or thing, or a fee shall be deemed to have been filed in the Office as of the day of deposit thereof in the United States mails, and the Commissioner may by regulation prescribe the conditions which must be fulfilled to make such deposit effective as a filing in the Office as of the date of such deposit.

"Chapter 3—PRACTICE BEFORE OFFICE

"Sec.

"31. Regulations for agents and attorneys.

"32. Suspension or exclusion from practice.

"33. Unauthorized practice.

"§ 31. Regulations for agents and attorneys

"The Commissioner may prescribe regulations governing the recognition and conduct of agents, attorneys, or other persons representing applicants or other parties before the Office, and may require them, before being recognized as representatives of applicants or other persons, to show that they are of good moral character and reputation and are possessed of the necessary qualifications to render to applicants or other persons valuable service, advice, and assistance in the presentation or prosecution of their applications or other business before the Office.

"§ 32. Suspension or exclusion from practice

"The Commissioner may, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, suspend or exclude, either generally or in any particular case, from further practice before the Office, any person, agent, or attorney shown to be incompetent or disreputable, or guilty of gross misconduct, or who does not comply with the regulations established under section 31 of this title, or who shall, by word, circular, letter, or advertising, with intent to defraud in any manner, deceive, mislead, or threaten any applicant or prospective applicant, or other person having immediate or prospective business before the Office. The reasons for any such suspension or exclusion shall be duly recorded. The United States District Court for the District of Columbia, under such conditions and upon such proceedings as it by its rules determines, may review the action of the Commissioner upon the petition of the person so refused recognition or so suspended or excluded.

"§ 33. Unauthorized practice

"(a) Whoever, not being recognized to practice before the Office:

"(1) Holds himself out or knowingly permits himself to be held out as so recognized, or

"(2) Holds himself out or knowingly permits himself to be held out as available either to perform the service of preparing or prosecuting an application for patent or to provide such service to be performed by a person not so recognized or by an unidentifiable person, or

"(3) For compensation, either performs the service of preparing or prosecuting an application for patent for another not so recognized or provides such service to be performed by a person not so recognized or by an unidentified person, or

"(4) Knowingly makes to an applicant or prospective applicant for a patent any false, misleading or deceptive material representation, by commission or omission, with respect to patentability or the procurement of a patent—shall be punishable by imprisonment not exceeding one (1) year or a fine not exceeding $25,000 nor less than $1,000 for each offense or both.

"(b) Where an agent, attorney, or firm recognized to practice before the Office assumes responsibility for the service of preparing or prosecuting a patent application at the time such service is rendered, the service shall be considered as performed by such agent, attorney, or firm within the meaning of this section.

December 19, 1974

"(c) An action for injunctive relief may be brought by the United States or by any person that is or is likely to be injured by any act proscribed in sub-section (a) of this section. In any action under this sub-section, it shall not be necessary that actual damage be alleged or proved.

"(d) Whoever engages in any act proscribed in sub-section (a) of this section shall be liable in a civil action to any person injured by such acts, and the person injured shall be entitled to recover damages which the court may treble in its discretion, and full costs and expenses including attorneys' fees.

"(e) The district and territorial courts of the United States shall have original jurisdiction of all actions arising under this section, without regard to the amount in controversy or to the diversity of the citizenship of the parties.

"(f) The bringing of or maintenance of a civil action for damages or injunctive relief under this section shall not prevent or be prevented by the institution or continuation of criminal proceedings against whoever commits any act proscribed in sub-section (a) of this section.

"Chapter 4—PATENT FEES

"Sec.

"41. Patent fees.

"42. Payment of patent fees; return of excess amounts.

"43. Maintenance fees.

"§ 41. Patent fees.

"(a) The Commissioner shall charge the following fees:

"1. On filing each application for an original patent, except in design cases, $65; in addition, on filing or on presentation at any other time, $10 for each claim in independent form which is in excess of one, and $2 for each claim (whether independent or dependent) which is in excess of ten. Errors in payment of the additional fees may be rectified in accordance with regulations of the Commissioner.

"2. For issuing each original or reissue patent, except in design cases, $100; in addition, $10 for each page (or portion thereof) of specification as printed, and $2 for each sheet of drawing.

"3. In design cases:

a. On filing each design application, $20.
b. On issuing each design patent: For three years and six months, $10; for seven years, $20; and for fourteen years, $30.

"4. On filing each application for the reissue of a patent, $65; in addition, on filing or on presentation at any other time, $10 for each claim in independent form which is in excess of the number of independent claims of the original patent, and $2 for each claim (whether independent or dependent) which is in excess of ten and also in excess of the number of claims of the original patent. Errors in payment of the additional fees may be rectified in accordance with regulations of the Commissioner.

"5. On filing each disclaimer, $15.

"6. On appeal for the first time from the examiner to the Board of Appeals, $50; in addition, on filing a brief in support of the appeal, $50.

"7. On filing each petition for the revival of an abandoned application for a patent or for the delayed payment of the fee for issuing each patent, $15.

"8. For certificate under section 255 or under section 256 of this title, $15.

"9. As available and if in print: For uncertified printed copies of specifications and drawings of patents (except design patents), 50 cents per copy; for design patents, 20 cents per copy; the Commissioner may establish a charge not to exceed $1 per copy for patents in excess of twenty-five pages of drawings and specifications and for plant patents printed in color; special rates for libraries specified in section 13 of this title, $50 for patents issued in one year. The Commissioner may, without charge, provide applicants with copies of specifications and drawings of patents when referred to in a notice under section 132.

"10. For recording every assignment, agreement, or other paper relating to the property in a patent or application, $20; where the document relates to more than one patent or application, $3 for each additional item.

"11. For each certificate, $1.

"(b) The Commissioner may establish charges for copies of records, publications, or services furnished by the Office, not specified above.

"(c) The fees prescribed by or under this section shall apply to any other Government department or agency, or officer thereof, except that the Commissioner may waive the payment of any fee for services or materials in cases of occasional or incidental requests by a Government department or agency, or officer thereof. (Amended July 24, 1965, Public Law 89-83, secs. 1 and 2, 79 Stat. 259.)

"12. For any request for patent re-examination under Chapter 31, $75.

"§ 42. Payment of patent fees; return of excess amounts

"All patent fees shall be paid to the Commissioner who, except as provided in sections 361(b) and 376(b) of this title, shall deposit the same in the Treasury of the United States in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury directs, and the Commissioner may refund any sum paid by mistake or in excess of the fee required by law.

"§ 43. Maintenance fees

"(a) During the term of a patent, other than for a design, the following maintenance fees shall be due:

"(1) a first maintenance fee of $300 on or before the seventh anniversary of the beginning of the term of the patent; and

"(2) a second maintenance fee of $600 on or before the tenth anniversary of the beginning of the term of the patent; and

"(3) a third maintenance fee of $1100 on or before the thirteenth anniversary of the beginning of the term of the patent.

"(b) In the case of a reissue patent the times specified herein shall run from the date of the original patent.

"(c) (1) A grace period of six months will be allowed in which to pay any maintenance fee, provided it is accompanied by the fee prescribed for delayed payment. When a response is not received to the notice provided by paragraph (e) of this subsection, a subsequent notice shall be sent approximately sixty days after the due date of any maintenance fee.

"(2) The first and second maintenance fees may be deferred in accordance with paragraph (f) of this subsection.

"(d) A patent will terminate on the due date for any maintenance fee unless, as provided for in this section, the fee due (including any fees previously deferred) is paid or a statement in accordance with paragraph (f) of this subsection requesting deferment is filed. Such termination or lapsing shall be without prejudice to rights existing under any other patent.

"(e) Notice of the requirement for the payment of the maintenance fees and the filing of statements in compliance with this subsection shall be attached to or embodied in the patent. Approximately thirty days before a maintenance fee is due, the Commissioner shall send an initial notice thereof to the patentee and all other parties having an interest of record at the addresses last furnished to the Office. Irrespective of any other provision of this subsection, a maintenance fee may be paid within thirty days after the date of such initial notice.

"(f) Any inventor to whom a patent issued (or his heirs) and who owns the patent, or any small business concern (as that term is defined in or pursuant to section 2[3] of the Small Business Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C.

632), may within six months of the seventh anniversary of the beginning of the term of the patent by a statement to the Commissioner request deferment of the first maintenance fee if the gross benefit received by the inventor or any other party having or having had any interest in the subject matter of the patent, from, under, or by virtue of the patent or from the manufacture, use, or sale of the invention, was less in value than the amount of the fee, and the statement so specifies. The fee shall thereupon be deferred until the time the second maintenance fee is due and shall be paid in addition to the second maintenance fee.

"102. Conditions for patentability; novelty and loss of right to patent.

"103. Conditions for patentability; non-obvious subject matter.

"104. Invention made abroad.

"§ 100. Definitions

"When used in this title unless the context otherwise indicates:

"(a) The term 'invention' means invention or discovery.

"(b) The term 'process' means process, art, or method and includes a new use of a known process, machine, manufacture, composition of matter, or material.

"(c) The terms 'United States' and 'this country' mean the United States of America, its territories and possessions, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"(d) The term 'applicant' means any person who owns an application for a patent, as provided in this title.

"(e) The term 'patentee' includes not only the person to whom the patent was issued but also the successors in title to such person.

"(f) The term 'actual filing date in the United States' includes the filing date to which an application, an international application under section 363 of this title, or patent, or the subject matter of any claim thereof, may be entitled under the provisions of sections 120 and 365 (c) of this title (and excludes any date under section 119, 365 (a) or 365 (b) of this title). An application or the resulting patent may contain separate claims for subject matter having different actual filing dates in the United States by virtue of the provisions of section 120 of this title or may contain claims entitled to the benefit of a prior date under the provisions of section 119 of this title, in addition to claims not so entitled.

"(g) The term 'useful' shall include, but shall not be limited to, utility in agriculture, commerce, industry, health or research.

"(h) The term 'person' includes an individual and any entity considered as such at law, including a corporation, company, foundation, institution, society, union, club, church, the United States, any government agency, or any other group of persons whether or not organized for any purpose.

"§ 101. Subject matter patentable

"Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, or his successor in title, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

December 19, 1974

"§ 102. Conditions for patentability; novelty and loss of right to patent

"A person shall be entitled to a patent unless:

"(a) The applicant or any of his predecessors in title has abandoned the invention; or

"(b) The invention was first patented or caused to be patented or was the subject of an inventor's certificate by the inventor or applicant, or their assigns or legal representatives, or described or caused to be described in an official publication of an application in a foreign country before the actual filing date of the United States application, the application for patent or inventor's certificate resulting in the patenting or description of this subsection having been filed in said country more than twelve months before said actual filing date in the United States; or

"(c) Before the invention thereof the invention was made in this country by another, provided the invention of such other does not stand abandoned at the time of the invention which is the subject of the application; and further provided that such other has not suppressed or concealed his invention. In determining priority of invention, there shall be considered not only the respective dates of conception and reduction to practice of the invention, but also the reasonable diligence of one who was first to conceive and last to reduce to practice, from a time before conception by the other until his own reduction to practice. However, in establishing priority of invention, an invention which has been abandoned shall not be accorded a date prior to the date of resumption of activity; or

"(d) The subject matter was not invented by the inventor himself but rather derived by him from another; or

"(e) The invention is identically disclosed or described in any of the following prior art:

"(1) A patent or publication in this or a foreign country reasonably available to the public of the United States in printed or other tangible form before the invention was made by the inventor, or more than one year before the actual filing date in the United States of the application; or

"(2) A published United States patent application or United States patent of another which has an actual filing date in the United States before the invention was made by the inventor named in the application; or

"(3) Subject matter made known publicly by another, or in public use by another, in this country before the invention was made by the inventor named in the application; or

"(4) Subject matter on sale or in public use in this country more than one year before the actual filing date in the United States of the application; or

"(5) With respect to the losing party, of a priority of invention contest under sections 135 and 291 of this title, the subject matter of the claim involved.

"§ 103. Conditions for patentability; non-obvious subject matter

"A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described in the prior art as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious from said prior art at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made, or because the invention has simplicity or is the last step in an evolutionary development, or because it is not revolutionary, basic, scientific or technical in character. Claims for a new combination or assemblage of known mechanical or other elements shall be subjected to the same standard of patentability as is applied to claims for other types of subject matter.

"§ 104. Invention made abroad

"In proceedings in the Office and the courts, an applicant for a patent, or a patentee, may not establish a date of invention by reference to knowledge or use thereof, or other activity with respect thereto, in a foreign country, except as provided in sections 119 and 365 of this title. Where an invention was made by a person, civil or military, while domiciled in the United States and serving in a foreign country in connection with operations by or on behalf of the United States, he shall be entitled to the same rights of priority with respect to such invention as though the same had been made in the United States.

"120. Benefit of earlier filing date in the United States.

"121. Divisional applications.

"122. Confidential status of applications.

"123. Publication.

"§ 111. Application for patent

"(a) An application for patent may be filed by either the inventor or the owner of the invention sought to be patented. The application shall be made in writing to the Commissioner, shall be signed by the applicant and include the name of each person believed to have made an inventive contribution, and shall be accompanied by the prescribed fee. An application filed by a person not the inventor shall include, at the time of filing, a statement of the fact supporting the allegation of ownership of the invention.

"(b) An application for patent shall include: (1) A specification as prescribed by section 112 of this chapter, and (2) A drawing as prescribed by section 113 of this chapter.

"(c) For purposes of filing a patent application and securing a filing date, an application may be signed by an agent of the applicant, provided that the agent is authorized so to do or provided that the application is ratified in writing by the applicant within six months after the filing. Failure of proof of the authority of the agent or of ratification by the applicant within six months after the filing of the application shall result in abandonment of the application.

"(d) When the application is signed by the owner or his agent, the owner, within thirty days after filing an application for patent, shall serve a copy of the application on the inventor, along with a statement calling the inventor's attention to the provisions of subsection (e) of this section. Service may be effected by mailing a copy of the application and statement, by first-class mail, to the last known address of the inventor. Failure to serve a copy of the application and statement on the inventor within thirty days shall result in abandonment of the application. The Commissioner may by regulation require proof of such service, and may extend the thirty-day period or waive the requirement for service upon a showing of sufficient cause.

"(e) An inventor, within a time prescribed by the Commissioner, may furnish a statement under oath to the Commissioner alleging that the applicant is not the owner of the invention as required by subsection (a) of this section. The Commissioner, in accordance with such regulations as he establishes and on compliance with the requirements of this title, shall issue a patent to the inventor filing such statement without prejudice to later judicial proceedings, unless the notice is withdrawn by the inventor or the applicant records in the Office an assignment by the inventor, or in lieu thereof, files a written statement by the inventor consenting to the filing of the application by and the issuance of the patent to the applicant.

"(f) Notice to the Commissioner, in a manner prescribed by regulations, of a final decision in a judicial proceeding in a court having jurisdiction thereof, from which no appeal has or can be taken, that an applicant is the owner of an invention shall authorize the Commissioner to issue a patent to such applicant for such invention.

"(g) An error in the naming of an inventor, in either a sole or joint application for patent, without deceptive intent, may be corrected at any time, in accordance with regulations established by the Commissioner.

"§ 112. Specification

"(a) The specification shall contain a written description of the invention, and of the manner and process of making and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and use the same, and shall set forth the best mode contemplated by the applicant of carrying out his invention.

"(b) The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention. A claim may be written in independent or dependent form, and if in dependent form, it shall be construed to include all the limitations of the claim incorporated by reference into the dependent claim.

"(c) An element in a claim for a combination may be expressed as a means or step for performing a specified function without the recital of structure, material, or acts in support thereof, and such claim shall be construed to cover the corresponding structure, material, or acts described in the specification and equivalents thereof.

"(d) When the invention relates to a process involving the action of a micro-organism not already known and available to the public, or in a product of such a process, the written description required by subsection (a) of this section shall be sufficient as to said micro-organism if:

"(1) Not later than the date that the date that the United States application is filed, an approved deposit of a culture of the microorganism is made by or on behalf of the applicant or his predecessor in title, and

"(2) The written description includes the name of the depository and its designation of the approved deposit and, taken as a whole, is in such descriptive terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to which the invention pertains to make and use the same.

An approved deposit shall be a deposit which:

"(1) Is made in any public depository in the United States which shall have been designated for such deposits by the Commissioner of Patents by publication, and

"(2) Is available, except as otherwise prohibited by law, in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed:

"a. To the public upon issuance of a United States patent to the applicant or his predecessor or successor in title which refers to such deposit, and

"b. Prior to issuance of said patent, under the conditions specified in section 122.

"(e) For the dissemination of information and other purposes, the Commissioner, in accordance with such regulations as he establishes, may require a brief abstract of all or part of the application. The abstract shall not be used for interpreting the scope of any claims of a patent, nor shall it affect in any way the validity of the patent.

December 19, 1974

"§ 113. Drawings

When the nature of the case admits, the applicant shall furnish a drawing.

"§ 114. Models, specimens

"(a) The Commissioner may require the applicant to furnish a model of convenient size to exhibit advantageously the several parts of his invention.

"(b) When the invention relates to a composition of matter the Commissioner may require the applicant to furnish specimens or ingredients for the purpose of inspection or experiment.

"§ 115. Oath of applicant; duty to disclose

"(a) Except as provided in section 118, the inventor shall make oath that he believes to the best of his knowledge that he is the first inventor, that he is aware of no prior public use or other facts which would bar the issuance of the patent, and that he has made full disclosure to the Office of all facts he reasonably believes to be pertinent to the prosecution of his application. Such oath shall state of what country the inventor is a citizen.

"(b) The applicant of an application filed pursuant to section 117 of this title may make the oath required by subsection (a) of this section, so varied in form that it can be made by him.

"(c) The oath or oaths shall be submitted not later than the time of payment of the fee required under the provisions of section 151 (a) of this title.

"(d) The applicant, and his agent or attorney (while responsible for prosecution of his application) have an obligation, continuing until issuance of the patent, to notify the Office of any known change in, or addition to, the information provided in accordance with section 131(b) of this title.

"(e) Only one of the inventor, the applicant (if not the inventor), any person to whom the inventor is under any obligation to assign the application, and the agent or attorney (or other representative recognized under Section 31 of this title) shall be responsible for making a reasonable inquiry and filing a statement of facts with respect to any change in or addition to the information required by subsections (a) and (d) of this section.

"§ 116. Joint inventors

"(a) When two or more persons have made inventive contributions to subject matter claimed in an application, they shall apply for a patent jointly and each sign the application and make the required oath, or, if the application is filed by some other person having the right to do so, they shall be named as the inventors.

"(b) In an application for patent for an invention naming two or more inventors, it shall not be necessary for each person named as an inventor to be a joint inventor of the invention asserted in any claim.

"(c) If a joint inventor refuses upon notice to him to join another inventor in an application for patent, or cannot be found or reached after diligent effort, the application may, subject to the requirements of section 111 of this title, be made by the other inventor on behalf of himself and the omitted inventor. The Commissioner, on proof of the pertinent facts and after such notice to the omitted inventor as he prescribes, may grant a patent to the inventor making the application, subject to the same rights which the omitted inventor would have had if he had been joined. The omitted inventor may subsequently join in the application.

"(d) Whenever a person is joined in an application for patent as joint inventor through error, or a joint inventor is not included in an application through error, and such error arose without any deceptive intention on his part, the Commissioner may permit the application to be amended accordingly, under such terms as he prescribes.

"§ 117. Death or incapacity of inventor

"Legal representatives of deceased inventors and of those under legal incapacity and, if necessary to preserve his legal rights or prevent irreparable damage, the assignee or any person to whom the inventor was or is under an obligation to assign the application, may make application for patent and otherwise proceed on behalf of the inventor upon compliance with the requirements and on the same terms and conditions applicable to the inventor.

"§ 118. Filing by other than inventor, oath by other than inventor

"Whenever an inventor refuses to execute an application for patent, or an oath, or cannot be found or reached after diligent effort, a person to whom the inventor has assigned or agreed in writing to assign the invention or who otherwise shows sufficient proprietary interest in the matter justifying such action, may make application for patent on behalf of and as agent for the inventor on proof of the pertinent facts and a showing that such action is necessary to preserve the rights of the parties or to prevent irreparable damage; and the Commissioner may grant a patent to such inventor upon such notice to him as the Commissioner deems sufficient, and on compliance with such regulations as he prescribes.

"§ 119. Benefit of earlier filing date in foreign country; right of priority

"(a) An application for patent for an invention filed in this country by any person who has, or whose predecessor or successor has, previously regularly filed an application for a patent for the same invention in a foreign country which affords similar privileges in the case of applications filed in the United States or to citizens of the United States, shall have the same effect as the same application would have if filed in this country on the date on which the application for patent for the same invention was first filed in such foreign country, if the application in this country is filed within twelve months from the earliest date on which such foreign application was filed; but no patent shall be granted on any application for patent for an invention which had been patented or described in a printed publication in any country more than one year before the date of the actual filing of the application in this country, or which had been in public use or on sale in this country more than one year prior to such filing.

"(b) No application for patent shall be entitled to this right of priority unless a claim therefor and a certified copy of the original foreign application, specification and drawings upon which it is based are filed in the Office before the patent is granted, or at such time during the pendency of the application as required by the Commissioner not earlier than six months after the filing of the application in this country. Such certification shall be made by the office of the foreign country in which filed and show the date of the application and of the filing of the specification and other papers. The Commissioner may require a translation of the papers filed if not in the English language and such other information as he deems necessary.

"(c) In like manner and subject to the same conditions and requirements, the right provided in this section may be based upon a subsequent regularly filed application in the same foreign country instead of the first filed foreign application, provided that any foreign application filed prior to such subsequent application has been withdrawn, abandoned, or otherwise disposed of, without having been laid open to public inspection and without leaving any rights outstanding, and has not served, nor thereafter shall serve, as a basis for claiming a right of priority.

"(d) When the application claiming priority under this section discloses an invention relating to a process involving the action of a micro-organism not already known and available to the public, or to a product of such a process, and an approved deposit is made under section 112, subsection (d) the approved deposit shall be considered to have been made on the earliest date that an application in a foreign country, the priority of which is being claimed, contains a reference identifying a deposit of the same micro-organism made in a public depository.

"(e) Applications for inventor's certificates filed in a foreign country in which applicants have a right to apply, at their discretion, either for a patent or for an inventor's certificate shall be treated in this country in the same manner and have the same effect for purpose of the right of priority under this section as applications for patent, subject to the same conditions and requirements of this section as apply to applications for patent, provided such applicants are entitled to the benefits of the Stockholm Revision of the Paris Convention at the time of such filing.

"§ 120. Benefit of earlier filing date in the United States

"(a) An application for patent for an invention disclosed in the manner provided in section 112(a) of this chapter in an application previously filed in the United States shall have the same effect, as to such invention, as though filed on the date of the prior application if:

"(1) It is filed during the pendency of the prior application, that is, before the patenting or abandonment of, or the termination of proceedings in, the prior application;

"(2) The two applications have the same inventor for the subject matter common to both, and

"(3) The application specifically claims or is amended to claim the benefit of the date of filing of the prior application for subject matter claimed in the second application.

"(b) In a series of applications with respect to an invention, each of which is entitled to the benefit of the filing date of the immediately preceding application in the series in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, the last application in the series shall be entitled to the benefit of the filing date of the earliest application in the series for which a claim is made, even though any application in the series may be depending only with the immediately preceding application.

"(c) Subject to the limitations of this section, if a previous application referred to in subsection (a) of this section is entitled to the benefit of the date of an application in a foreign country under section 119 of this chapter, with respect to the subject matter sought to be patented in the later application, then the later application referred to in subsection (a) of this section shall be entitled to the benefit of such date.

"(d) An applicant must claim the benefit of the filing date of the earliest application on which he intends to rely in a later filed application within three months of the time of filing such later application, or during examination or re-examination of such application as provided in chapter 12 of this title upon an adequate showing why the claim was not made earlier. In a series, each application must claim the benefit of the immediately preceding application in accordance with the provisions herein.

"(e) The Commissioner may by regulation dispense with signing and execution in the case of an application directed solely to subject matter described and claimed in the prior application.

"§ 121. Divisional applications

"If two or more independent and distinct inventions are claimed in one application, the Commissioner may require the application to be restricted to one of the inventions. If the other invention is made the subject of a divisional application which complies with the requirements of section 120 of this title it shall be entitled to the benefit of the filing date of the original application. A patent issuing on an application with respect to which a requirement for restriction under this section has been made, or on an application filed as a result of such a requirement, shall not be used as a reference either in the Office or in the courts against a divisional application or against the original application or any patent issued on either of them, if the divisional application is filed before the issuance of the patent on the other application. If a divisional application is directed solely to subject matter described and claimed in the original application as filed, the Commissioner may dispense with signing and execution by the inventor. The validity of a patent shall not be questioned for failure of the Commissioner to require the application to be restricted to one invention.

"§ 122. Confidential status of applications

"Applications for patents shall be kept in confidence by the Office and no information concerning the same given without authority of the applicant, or owner of record of the application, unless necessary to carry out the provisions of any Act of Congress or in such special circumstances as may be determined by the Commissioner

"§ 123. Publication

"The Commissioner may establish regulations for the publication of pending applications at the request of applicants and shall publish applications in accordance therewith.

"131. Examination of application.

"132. Notice of rejection; reexamination.

"133. Time for prosecuting application.

"134. Appeal to the Board of Appeals.

"135. Priority of invention contest.

"136. Settlement agreements.

"§ 131. Examination of application

"(a) The Commissioner shall cause an examination to be made of the application and the alleged new invention. If on such examination it appears that the applicant is entitled to a patent under the law, the Commissioner shall issue a patent therefor as herein provided.

"(b) All oral interviews related to applications pending in the Office shall be in recorded form. Any arguments, or representations by the applicant, anyone acting on his behalf, or for the Office shall be summarized into the record and shall be available to the public in the patented file.

"(c) The Commissioner may require an applicant, within such time as he may prescribe by regulation, to submit copies of or cite a reasonable number of patents and publications the applicant has specifically considered in connection with the application for patent, and which were known with reasonable certainty to be prior art or, if no specific relevant patents or publications were considered, a statement to that effect and an explanation as to why the claims in such application are believed to be patentable. The Commissioner may at any time require an applicant to state in the record why a claim is patentable over any patent or publication. Neither matters of judgment exercised in citing such patents or publications, nor inadvertent failure to comply with the provisions of this section in whole or in part, shall constitute a ground for holding a patent invalid or unenforceable, or subject the patentee or patentee's attorney or agent to a charge of misuse or fraud.

"(d) The granting of a patent shall not be refused solely on the ground that if it occurred there would then exist more than one patent for the same invention where the patents will expire on the same date as a result of filing on the same date or as the result of a terminal disclaimer pursuant to section 253 of this title, so long as the right to sue for infringement of said patents is in the same legal entity.

"§ 132. Notice of rejection; reexamination

"Whenever, on examination, any claim of an application is rejected, or any objection or requirement made, the Commissioner shall notify the applicant thereof, stating the reasons for such rejection, or objection or requirement, together with such information and references as may be useful in judging of the propriety of continuing the prosecution of the application; and if after receiving such notice, the applicant persists in his claim for a patent, with or without amendment, the application shall be reexamined. No amendment shall introduce new matter into the disclosure of the invention.

"§ 133. Time for prosecuting application

"Upon failure of applicant to prosecute the application within six months after any action therein, of which notice has been given or mailed to the applicant, or within such shorter time, not less than one month as fixed by the Commissioner in such action, the application shall be regarded as abandoned by the parties thereto, unless it be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that such delay was unavoidable.

"§ 134. Appeal to the Board of Appeals

"An applicant for a patent, any of whose claims have been finally or twice rejected, may appeal from the decision of the primary examiner to the Board of Appeals, having once paid the fee for such appeal.

"§ 135. Priority of invention contest

"(a) Whenever there are two applications naming different inventors claiming the same or substantially the same subject matter, a patent shall ordinarily be issued on the application having the earliest actual filing date in the United States, if otherwise allowable. The application having the later filing date in the United States with respect to such subject matter shall be rejected on the basis of such patent. If, within one year after the issuance of the patent or within six months after a rejection of claims in his application on the basis of the invention claimed in the patent, or within such shorter time as fixed by the Commissioner, not less than one month, the applicant for such later filed application, which application is found otherwise allowable, makes a prima facie showing of priority of invention in accordance with section 102(c), 119, or 120 of this title with respect to the actual filing date in the United States of such patent and offers to present evidence in support of such showing, the matter of priority of invention shall be determined by the Board of Appeals in such proceedings as the Commissioner shall establish. The Commissioner, upon the institution of proceedings under this section, shall issue a patent at the request of such applicant if his application is otherwise allowable. Failure of that applicant to proceed hereunder within the time specified shall preclude such applicant from asserting priority of his invention with respect to the invention claimed in the patent for the purpose of obtaining a patent.

"(b) Whenever an otherwise allowable claim of an application is for the same or substantially the same subject matter as a claim of a patent having a later actual filing date in the United States, or for subject matter over which a claim of such patent is unpatentable, the Commissioner may, on his own motion or at the request of the applicant, initiate proceedings under this section on notice to the parties, requiring such patentee to present his prima facie case within a designated time not less than three months. The Commissioner upon the institution of proceedings under this section, shall issue a patent at the request of such applicant if his application is otherwise allowable.

"(c) If two or more applications for the same or substantially the same subject matter have the same actual filing date in the United States, the Commissioner may initiate a priority contest under this section on his own motion, whether or not any of the applications may have been issued as a patent. The Commissioner shall, upon the institution of proceedings under this subsection and at the request of any applicant, issue a patent on his otherwise allowable application.

"(d) A claim for the same or substantially the same subject matter as a claim of an issued patent may not be made in any application unless such claim is made prior to one year after the date on which the patent was granted.

"(e) In any proceeding under this section, the Office or a party may raise the question of the patentability of any claim of the application or patent of one party over the subject matter claimed in the application or patent of the other party, and such question may be considered in the proceeding.

"(f) Whenever a patent, reexamination of which under provisions of chapter 31 has been ordered has an actual filing date earlier than that of an application, the patent shall have prima facie priority with respect to the application. In the case of two patents being reexamined, the patent having the earlier actual filing date shall have prima facie priority.

"(g) The decision of the Board of Appeals in proceedings under this section adverse to a claim of an application shall constitute the final refusal by the Office of such claim. A final judgment adverse to a claim of a patent from which no appeal or other review has been or can be taken or had been taken shall constitute cancellation of such claim from the specification of the patent thereafter distributed by the Office.

"(h) Any person who has not proceeded in accordance with the provisions of this title shall not be foreclosed or in any way prejudiced with respect to the defense of an infringement suit or affirmative relief under declaratory judgment proceedings, except as provided in chapter 31.

"(i) No person subject to an adverse decision in a proceeding under this chapter shall be foreclosed with respect to asserting comparable grounds in defense of an infringement suit or as a basis for affirmative relief under declaratory judgment proceedings involving the patent of the successful party.

"(j) Judgment adverse to a claim of a patent shall not preclude the filing of an application for reissue in accordance with section 251 of this title but matters already decided in a proceeding under this chapter may not be again considered.

"§ 136. Settlement agreements

"(a) Any agreement or understanding between parties to a proceeding under section 135 or 192 of this title including any collateral agreements referred to therein, made in connection with or in contemplation of the termination of the proceeding shall be in writing and a true copy thereof filed in the Office before the termination of the proceeding as between the said parties to the agreement or understanding. If any party filing the same so requests, the copy shall be kept separate from the file of the proceeding and made available only to Government agencies on written request stating reasons for the request or to any person on a showing of good cause. Failure to file the copy of such agreement or understanding shall render permanently unenforceable such agreement or understanding and any patent of such parties involved in the proceeding, or any patent subsequently issued on any application of such parties so involved. The Commissioner may, however, on a showing of good cause for failure to file within the time prescribed, permit the filing of the agreement or understanding during the six-month period subsequent to the termination of the proceeding as between the parties to the agreement or understanding.

"(b) The Commissioner shall give notice to the parties or their attorneys of record, a reasonable time prior to said termination, of the filing requirement of this section. If the Commissioner gives such notice at a later time, irrespective of the right to file such agreement or understanding within the six-month period on a showing of good cause, the parties may file such agreement or understanding within sixty days of the receipt of such notice.

"(c) Any discretionary action of the Commissioner under this subsection shall be reviewable under chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.

"146. Civil action in case of interference.

"148. Presumption of correctness.

"149. Judicial review of nonfinal decisions.

"§ 141. Appeal to Court of Customs and Patent Appeals

"(a) An applicant or patentee dissatisfied with a decision of the Board of Appeals under Sec. 134, 135, or Chapter 31 may appeal to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, thereby waiving the right to proceed under section 145 of this title.

"(b) The appeal of a party to a priority of invention contest dissatisfied with the decision of the Board on the question of priority may appeal to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, but such appeal shall be dismissed if any adverse party to such interference, within twenty days after the appellant has filed notice of appeal according to section 142 of this title, files notice with the Commissioner that he elects to have all further proceedings conducted as provided in section 146 of this title. Thereupon the appellant shall have thirty days thereafter within which to file a civil action under section 146, in default of which the decision appealed from shall govern the further proceedings in the case.

"§ 142. Notice of appeal

"When an appeal is taken to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, the appellant shall give notice thereof to the Commissioner, and shall file in the Office his reasons of appeal, specifically set forth in writing, within such time after the date of the decision appealed from, not less than sixty days, as the Commissioner appoints.

"§ 143. Proceedings on appeal

"The United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals shall, before hearing such appeal, give notice of the time and place of the hearing to the Commissioner and the parties thereto. The Commissioner shall transmit to the court certified copies of all the necessary original papers and evidence in the case specified by the appellant and any additional papers and evidence specified by the appellee and in an ex parte case the Commissioner shall furnish the court with the grounds of the decision of the Office, in writing, touching all the points involved by the reasons of appeal.

"§ 144. Decision on appeal

"The United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, on petition, shall hear and determine such appeal on the evidence produced before the Office, and the decision shall be confined to the points set forth in the reasons of appeal. Upon its determination the court shall return to the Commissioner a certificate of its proceedings and decision, which shall be entered of record in the Office and govern the further proceedings in the case.

CXX—2595—Part 31

"§ 145. Civil action to obtain patent

"An applicant dissatisfied with the decision of the Board of Appeals may unless appeal has been taken to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, have remedy by civil action against the Commissioner in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia if commenced within such time after such decision, not less than sixty days, as the Commissioner appoints. The court may adjudge that such applicant is entitled to receive a patent for his invention, as specified in any of his claims involved in the decision of the Board of Appeals, as the facts in the case may appear and such adjudication shall authorize the Commissioner to issue such patent on compliance with the requirements of law. All the expenses of the proceedings shall be paid by the applicant.

"§ 146. Civil action in case of interference

"(a) Any party to a priority of invention contest under section 135 of this title dissatisfied with the decision of the Board of Appeals on the question of priority, may have remedy by civil action, if commenced within such time after such decision, not less than sixty days, as the Commissioner appoints or as provided in section 141 of this title, unless he has appealed to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, and such appeal is pending or has been decided. In such suits the record in the Office shall be admitted on motion of either party upon the terms and conditions as to costs, expenses, and the further cross-examination of the witnesses as the court imposes, without prejudice to the right of the parties to take further testimony. The testimony and exhibits of the record in the Office when admitted shall have the same effect as if originally taken and produced in the suit.

"(b) Such suit may be instituted against the party in interest as shown by the records of the Office at the time of the decision complained of, but any party in interest may become a party to the action. If there be adverse parties residing in a plurality of districts not embraced within the same state, or an adverse party residing in a foreign country, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction and may issue summons against the adverse parties directed to the marshal of any district in which any adverse party resides. Summons against adverse parties residing in foreign countries may be served by publication or otherwise as the court directs. The Commissioner shall not be a necessary party but he shall be notified of the filing of the suit by the clerk of the court in which it is filed and shall have the right to intervene. Judgment of the court in favor of the right of an applicant to a patent shall authorize the Commissioner to issue such patent on the filing in the Office of a certified copy of the judgment and on compliance with the requirements of the law.

"§ 148. Presumption of correctness

In any appeal or proceeding under this chapter, the Office decision shall be given a presumption of correctness.

"§ 149. Judicial review of nonfinal decisions

"The Commissioner may be general regulation provide that there shall be judicial review of specified nonfinal decisions of the Office.

"Chapter 14—ISSUE OF PATENT

"Sec.

"151. Issue of patent.

"152. Late payment; effect of reinstatement of patent.

"153. How issued.

"154. Contents and term of patent.

"155. Patents granted on review.

"§ 151. Issue of patent

"(a) If it is determined that an applicant is entitled to a patent under the law, a written notice of allowance of the application shall be given or mailed to the applicant. The notice shall specify a sum constituting the issue fee or a portion thereof, which shall be paid within three months thereafter.

"(b) Upon payment of this sum the patent shall issue, but if payment is not timely made, the application shall be regarded as abandoned. Issuance of the patent shall be subject to the provisions of chapter 31.

"(c) Any remaining balance of the issue fee shall be paid within three months from the sending of a notice thereof and, if not paid, the patent shall lapse at the termination of this three-month period. In calculating the amount of a remaining balance, charges for a page or less may be disregarded.

"(d) If any payment required by this section is not timely made, but is submitted with the fee for delayed payment and sufficient cause is shown for the late payment, it may be accepted by the Commissioner as though no abandonment or lapse had ever occurred.

"§ 152. Late payment; effect of reinstatement of patent

"No patent with respect to which a late payment is accepted shall abridge or affect the right or privilege of any person or his successors in business or title to continue to use, or to sell to others for their use or sale, anything which such person without bad faith made, used, or acquired during the interim period after the date the patent lapsed or became unenforceable for failure to pay such fee, and prior to the reinstatement of the patent. Any such person or his successor may use or sell the specific thing so made, used, or acquired, in the same manner as though the patentee had authorized such use or sale, even though such use or sale by him or his successor would infringe the patent, in the absence of such authorization. A court before which the matter is in question may provide for the continued manufacture, use, or sale of things, to the extent and under such terms as the court deems equitable for the protection of investments made, business commenced, or business for which substantial preparation was made—during such interim period.

"§ 153. How issued

"Patents shall be issued in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the Office, and shall be signed by the Commissioner or have his signature placed thereon, and shall be recorded in the Office.

"§ 154. Contents and term of patent

"(a) Every patent shall contain a grant to the applicant, his heirs or assigns or, as provided in section 111(e) of this title, to the inventor, his heirs or assigns, of the right, during the term of the patent, to exclude others from making, using, or selling the invention throughout the United States, referring to the specification for the particulars thereof. A copy of the specification and drawings shall be annexed to the patent and be a part thereof.

"(b) The term of a patent shall expire twenty years from the date of filing the application in the United States or, if the benefit of the filing date in the United States of a prior application is claimed, from the earliest such prior date claimed. In determining the term of the patent, the date of filing any application in a foreign country which may be claimed by the applicant shall not be taken into consideration.

"(c) The term of a patent whose issuance has been delayed by reason of the application having been ordered kept secret under section 181 of this title shall be extended for a period equal to such delay in issuance of the patent after the notice of allowability referred to in section 183 of this title. The term of a patent shall also be extended for a period equal to the delay incurred due to review under section 151 or 152 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (68 Stat. 934), or under section 305 of the National Aeronautics and Space Act (72 Stat. 435).

"§ 155. Patents granted on review

"An applicant may, after initiating review under sections 141, 145, or 146 of this title, request the issuance of a patent for claims standing allowed in the application. Upon payment of the prescribed fee, issuance of such patent shall occur in accordance with this chapter. As to claims which stand allowed, the patent shall have the force and effect specified in section 154 of this title. Each claim in the application not standing allowed shall be identified as such, and shall not have any force and effect, except as provided in section 257 of this title.

"162. Description, claim.

"163. Grant.

"164. Assistance of Department of Agriculture.

"§ 161. Patents for plants

"(a) Whoever invents or discovers and asexually reproduces any distinct and new variety of plant, including cultivated sports, mutants, hybrids, and newly found seedlings, other than a tuber propagated plant or a plant found in an uncultivated state, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title. (Amended September 3, 1954, 68 Stat. 1190.)

"(b) The provisions of this title relating to patents for inventions shall apply to patents for plants, except as otherwise provided.

"§ 162. Description, claim.

"(a) No plant patent shall be declared invalid for noncompliance with section 12 of this title if the description is as complete as is reasonably possible.

"(b) The claim in the specification shall be in formal terms to the plant shown and described.

"§ 163. Grant.

"In the case of a plant patent the grant shall be of the right to exclude others from asexually reproducing the plant or selling or using the plant so reproduced.

"§ 164. Assistance of Department of Agriculture

"The President may by Executive order direct the Secretary of Agriculture, in accordance with the requests of the Commissioner, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this title with respect to plants (1) to furnish available information of the Department of Agriculture, (2) to conduct through the appropriate bureau or division of the Department research upon special problems, or (3) to detail to the Commissioner officers and employees of the Department.

"Chapter 16.—Designs

"Sec.

"171. Patents for designs.

"172. Right of priority.

"173. Term of design patent.

"§ 171. Patents for designs

"(a) Whoever invents any new, original and ornamental design for an article of manufacture may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

"(b) The provisions of this title relating to patents for inventions shall apply to patents for designs, except as otherwise provided.

"§ 172. Right of priority

"The right of priority provided for by section 119 of this title and the time specified in section 102(b) shall be six months in the case of designs. Applications for design registrations and such registrations in foreign countries shall have the same effect as applications for design patents for the purpose of section 102(b) and 119 of this title.

"§ 173. Term of design patent

"Patents for designs may be granted for the term of three years and six months, or for seven years, or for fourteen years, as the applicant, in his application, elects.

"Chapter 17.—SECURITY OF CERTAIN INVENTIONS AND FILING APPLICATIONS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

"Sec.

"181. Secrecy of certain inventions and withholding of patent.

"182. Forfeiture of the right to a patent for unauthorized disclosure.

"183. Right of compensation.

"184. Filing of application in foreign country.

"185. Patent barred for filing without license.

"186. Penalty.

"187. Nonapplicability to certain persons.

"188. Rules and regulations, delegation of power.

"§ 181. Secrecy of certain inventions and withholding of patent

"(a) Whenever publication or disclosure by the grant of a patent on an invention in which the Government has a property interest might, in the opinion of the head of the interested Government agency, be detrimental to the national security, the Commissioner upon being so notified shall order that the invention be kept secret and shall without publication thereof order withholding of the grant of a patent therefor under the conditions set forth hereinafter.

"(b) Whenever the publication or disclosure of an invention, in which the Government does not have a property interest, might, in the opinion of the Commissioner, be detrimental to the national security, he shall make the application for patent in which such invention is disclosed available for inspection to the Atomic Energy Commission, the Secretary of Defense, and the chief officer of any other department or agency of the Government designated by the President as a defense agency of the United States.

"(c) Each individual to whom the application is disclosed shall sign a dated acknowledgment thereof, which acknowledgment shall be entered in the file of the application. If, in the opinion of the Atomic Energy Commission, the Secretary of Defense, or the chief officer of another department or agency so designated, the publication or disclosure of the invention by the granting of a patent therefor would be detrimental to the national security, the Atomic Energy Commission, the Secretary of a defense department, or such other chief officer shall notify the Commissioner and the Commissioner shall order that the invention be kept secret and shall withhold the grant of a patent for such period as the national interest requires, and notify the applicant thereof. Upon proper showing by the head of the department or agency who caused the secrecy order to be issued that the examination of the application might jeopardize the national interest, the Commissioner shall thereupon maintain the application in a sealed condition and notify the applicant thereof. The owner of an application which has been placed under a secrecy order shall have a right to appeal from the order to the Secretary of Commerce under rules prescribed by him.

"(d) An invention shall not be ordered kept secret and publication or the grant of a patent withheld for a period of more than one year. The Commissioner shall renew the order at the end thereof, or at the end of any renewal period, for additional periods of one year upon notification by the head of the department or the chief officer of the agency who caused the order to be issued that an affirmative determination has been made that the national interest continues so to require. An order is in effect, or issued, during a time when the United States is at war, shall remain in effect for the duration of hostilities and one year following cessation of hostilities. An order in effect, or issued, during a national emergency declared by the President shall remain in effect for the duration of the national emergency and six months thereafter. The Commissioner may rescind any order upon notification by the heads of the departments and the chief officers of the agencies who caused the order to be issued that the publication or disclosure of the invention is no longer deemed detrimental to the national security.

"§ 182. Forfeiture of the right to a patent for unauthorized disclosure

"The right to a patent for the invention disclosed in an application for patent subject to an order made pursuant to section 181 of this title may be held forfeited upon its being established by the Commissioner that in violation of said order the invention has been published or disclosed or that an application for a patent therefor has been filed in a foreign country by the inventor, his successors, assigns, or legal representatives, or anyone in privity with him or them, without the consent of the Commissioner. The forfeiture shall be held to have occurred as of the time of violation. The consent of the Commissioner shall not be given without the concurrence of the heads of the departments and the chief officers of the agencies who caused the order to be issued. A holding of forfeiture shall constitute forfeiture by the applicant, his successors, assigns, or legal representatives, or anyone in privity with him or them, of all claims against the United States based upon such invention.

"§ 183. Right to compensation

"(a) An applicant, his successors, assigns, or legal representatives, whose patent is withheld as herein provided, shall have the right, beginning at the date the applicant is notified that, except for such order, his application is otherwise in condition for allowance, or February 1, 1952, whichever is later, and ending six years after a patent is issued thereon, to apply to the head of any department or agency who caused the order to be issued for compensation for the damage caused by the order of secrecy and/or for the use of the invention by the Government, resulting from his disclosure. The right to compensation for use shall begin on the date of the first use of the invention by the Government. The head of the department or agency is authorized, upon the presentation of a claim, to enter into an agreement with the applicant, his successors, assigns, or legal representatives, in full settlement for the damage and/or use. This settlement agreement shall be conclusive for all purposes notwithstanding any other provision of law to the contrary. If full settlement of the claim cannot be effected, the head of the department or agency may award and pay to such applicant, his successors, assigns, or legal representatives, a sum not exceeding 75 per centum of the sum which the head of the department or agency considers just compensation for the damage and/or use. A claimant may bring suit against the United States in the Court of Claims or in the District Court of the United States for the District in which such claimant is a resident for an amount which when added to the award shall constitute just compensation for the damage and/or use of the invention by the Government.

"(b) The owner of any patent issued upon an application that was subject to a secrecy order issued pursuant to section 181 of this title, who did not apply for compensation as above provided, shall have the right, after the date of issuance of such patent, to bring suit in the Court of Claims for just compensation for the damage caused by reason of the order of secrecy and/or use by the Government of the invention resulting from his disclosure. The right to compensation for use shall begin on the date of the first use of the invention by the Government. In a suit under the provisions of this section the United States may avail itself of all defenses it may plead in an action under section 1498 of title 28. This section shall not confer a right of action on anyone or his successors, assigns, or legal representatives who, while in the full-time employment or service of the United States, discovered, invented, or developed the invention on which the claim is based. A patentee receiving a settlement of his claim for damages caused by reason of an order of secrecy by the Court of Claims shall be required to disclaim the terminal portion of the patent term equal in duration to any extension granted under the provisions of section 154(c) of this title.

"§ 184. Filing of application in foreign country

"(a) Except when authorized by a license obtained from the Commissioner a person shall not file or cause or authorize to be filed in any foreign country prior to six months after filing in the United States an application for patent or inventor's certificate or for the registration of a utility model, industrial design, or model in respect of an invention made in this country. A license shall not be granted with respect to an invention subject to an order issued by the Commissioner pursuant to section 181 of this title without the concurrence of the head of the departments and the chief officers of the agencies who caused the order to be issued. The license may be granted retroactively where an application has been inadvertently filed abroad and the application does not disclose an invention within the scope of section 181 of this title.

"(b) The term 'application' when used in this chapter includes applications and any modifications, amendments, or supplements thereto, or divisions thereof.

"(c) No license shall be required subsequent to the filing of a foreign application for any modifications, amendments, or supplements to that foreign application, or divisions thereof, which do not alter the nature of the invention originally disclosed, which are within the scope of the subject matter originally disclosed, and where the filing of the foreign application originally complied with the provisions of this section, unless the applicant has been notified by the Commissioner that a specific license is required for filing such papers in connection with any application.

"§ 185. Patent barred for filing without license

"Notwithstanding any other provisions of law any person and his successors, assigns, or legal representatives, shall not receive a United States patent for an invention if that person, or his successors, assigns, or legal representatives shall, without procuring the license prescribed in section 184 of this title, have made, or consented to or assisted another's making, application in a foreign country for a patent or inventor's certificate or for the registration of a utility model, industrial design, or model in respect of the invention. A United States patent issued to such person, his successors, assigns, or legal representatives shall be invalid.

"§ 186. Penalty

"Whoever, during the period or periods of time an invention has been ordered to be kept secret and the grant of a patent thereon withheld pursuant to section 181 of this title, shall, with knowledge of such order and without due authorization, willfully publish or disclose or authorize or cause to be published or disclosed the invention, or material information with respect thereto, or whoever, in violation of the provisions of section 184 of this title, shall file or cause or authorize to be filed in any foreign country an application for patent or inventor's certificate or for the registration of a utility model, industrial design, or model in respect of any invention made in the United States, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than two years, or both.

"§ 187. Nonapplicability to certain persons

"The prohibitions and penalties of this chapter shall not apply to any officer or agent of the United States acting within the scope of his authority, nor to any person acting upon his written instructions or permission.

"§ 188. Rules and regulations, delegation of power

"The Atomic Energy Commission, the Secretary of a defense department, the chief officer of any other department or agency of the Government designated by the President as a defense agency of the United States, and the Secretary of Commerce, may separately issue rules and regulations to enable the respective department or agency to carry out the provisions of this chapter, and may delegate any power conferred by this chapter.

"251. Reissue of defective patents.

"252. Effect of reissue.

"253. Disclaimer.

"254. Certificate of correction of Office mistake.

"255. Certificate of correction of applicant's mistake.

"256. Correction of named inventor.

"257. Certificate for change in status of claims.

"§ 251. Reissue of defective patents.

"(a) Whenever any patent is, through error without any deceptive intention, deemed wholly or partly inoperative or invalid, by reason of a defective specification or drawing, or by reason of the patentee claiming more or less than he had a right to claim in the patent or by reason of failure to cite or adequately distinguish previously unexpired prior art, the Commissioner shall, on the surrender of such patent and the payment of the fee required by law, reissue the patent for the invention disclosed in the original patent, and in accordance with a new and amended application, for the unexpired part of the term of the original patent. No new matter shall be introduced into the application for reissue.

"(b) The Commissioner may issue several reissued patents for distinct and separate parts of the thing patented, upon demand of the applicant, and upon payment of the required fee for a reissue for each of such reissued patents.

"(c) The provisions of this title relating to applications for patent shall be applicable to applications for reissue of a patent, except that the oath of the applicant prescribed by section 115 shall not be required if the application does not seek to enlarge the scope of the claims of the original patent.

"(d) No reissued patent shall be granted enlarging the scope of the claims of the original patent unless applied for within one year from the grant of the original patent.

"§ 252. Effect of reissue

"(a) The surrender of the original patent shall take effect upon the issue of the reissued patent, and every reissued patent shall have the same effect and operation in law, on the trial of actions for causes thereafter arising, as if the same had been originally granted in such amended form, but insofar as the claims of the original and reissued patents are identical, such surrender shall not affect any action then pending nor abate any cause of action then existing, and the reissued patent, to the extent that its claims are identical with the original patent, shall constitute a continuation thereof and have effect continuously from the date of the original patent, subject to the provisions of section 152 of this title and subsection (b) of this section.

"(b) No reissued patent shall abridge or affect the right of any person or his successors in business who made, purchased, or used prior to the grant of a reissue anything patented by the reissued patent, to continue the use of, or to sell to others to be used or sold, the specific thing so made, purchased or used, unless the making, using or selling of such thing infringes a valid claim of the reissued patent which was in the original patent. The court before which such matter is in question may provide for the continued manufacture, use or sale of the thing made, purchased or used as specified, or for the manufacture, use or sale of which substantial preparation was made before the grant of the reissue, and it may also provide for the continued practice of any process patented by the reissue, practiced, or for the practice of which substantial preparation was made, prior to the grant of the reissue, to the extent and under such terms as the court deems equitable for the protection of investments made or business commenced before the grant of the reissue.

"§ 253. Disclaimer

"(a) Whenever, without any deceptive intention, a claim of a patent is invalid the remaining claims shall not thereby be rendered invalid. A patentee, whether of the whole or any sectional interest therein, may, on payment of the fee required by law, make disclaimer of any complete claim, stating therein the extent of his interest in such patent. Such disclaimer shall be in writing and recorded in the Office; and it shall thereafter be considered as part of the original patent to the extent of the interest possessed by the disclaimant and by those claiming under him.

"(b) In like manner any patentee or applicant may disclaim or dedicate to the public the entire term, or any terminal part of the term, of the patent granted or to be granted.

"§ 254. Certificate of correction of Office mistake

"Whenever a mistake in a patent, incurred through the fault of the Office, is clearly disclosed by the records of the Office, the Commissioner may issue a certificate of correction stating the fact and nature of such mistake, under seal, without charge, to be recorded in the records of patents. A printed copy thereof shall be attached to each printed copy of the patent, and such certificate shall be considered as part of the original patent. Every such patent, together with such certificate, shall have the same effect and operation in law on the trial of actions for causes thereafter arising as if the same had been originally issued in such corrected form. The Commissioner may issue a corrected patent without charge in lieu of and with like effect as a certificate of correction.

"§ 255. Certificate of correction of applicant's mistake

"Whenever a mistake of a clerical or typographical nature, or of minor character, which was not the fault of the Office, appears in a patent and a showing has been made that such mistake occurred in good faith, the Commissioner may, upon payment of the required fee, issue a certificate of correction, if the correction does not involve such changes in the patent as would constitute new matter or would require re-examination. Such patent, together with the certificate, shall have the same effect and operation in law on the trial of actions for causes thereafter arising as if the same had been originally issued in such corrected form.

"§ 256. Correction of named inventor

"An error in the naming of an inventor in either a sole or joint application for patent, without deceptive intent, shall not affect validity of a patent and may be corrected at any time by the Commissioner in accordance with regulations established by him or upon order of a Federal court before which the matter is called in question. Upon such correction, the Commissioner shall issue a certificate of correction.

"§ 257. Certificate for change in status of claims

"(a) When any claim in a patent is allowed subsequent to the issuance of the patent under section 155 of this title, the Commissioner shall issue a certificate stating the fact, under seal, without charge, to be recorded in the record of the patent and shall publish a notice thereof in the Official Gazette. Such certificate shall be considered as part of the original patent, and a copy of the certificate shall be attached to each copy of the patent thereafter distributed by the Office. Upon the issuance of such certificate, such claim shall constitute a claim of the patent which shall have the force and effect specified in section 154 of this title with respect to actions for causes thereafter arising.

"(b) Upon the termination of proceedings on any patent issued pursuant to section 155 of this title, the Commissioner shall attach a certificate to subsequently distributed copies of the patent and publish in the Official Gazette a notice of the final disposition of all claims in the patent which were not allowed at the time such patent was granted.

"Chapter 26—OWNERSHIP AND ASSIGNMENT

"Sec.

"261. Ownership; assignment.

"262. Joint owners.

"§ 261. Ownership; assignment

"(a) Subject to the provisions of this title, patents shall have the attributes of personal property.

"(b) Applications for patent, patents, or any interest therein, shall be assignable in law by an instrument in writing. The applicant, patentee, or his assigns or legal representatives may in like manner grant and convey an exclusive right under his application for patent, or patents, to the whole or any specified part of the United States.

"(c) A certificate of acknowledgment under the hand and official seal of a person authorized to administer oaths within the United States, or, in a foreign country, of a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States or an officer authorized to administer oaths whose authority is proved by a certificate of a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, shall be prima facie evidence of the execution of an assignment, grant or conveyance of a patent or application for patent.

"(d) An assignment, grant or conveyance shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for a valuable consideration, without notice, unless it is recorded in the Office within three months from its date or prior to the date of such subsequent purchase or mortgage.

"§ 262. Joint owners

"In the absence of any agreement to the contrary, each of the joint owners of a patent may make, use or sell the patented invention without the consent of and without accounting to the other owners.

"Chapter 27—GOVERNMENT INTEREST IN PATENTS

"Sec.

"266. [Repealed.]

"267. Time for taking action in Government applications.

"§ 267. Time for taking action in Government applications

"Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 133 and 151 of this title, the Commissioner may extend the time for taking any action to three years, when an application has become the property of the United States and the head of the appropriate department or agency of the Government has certified to the Commissioner that the invention disclosed therein is important to the armament or defense of the United States.

"Chapter 28—INFRINGEMENT OF PATENTS

"Sec.

"271. Infringement of patent.

"272. Temporary presence in the United States.

"§ 271. Infringement of patent

"(a) Except as otherwise provided in this title, whoever without authority makes, uses or sells any patented invention, within the United States during the term of the patent therefor, infringes the patent.

"(b) Whoever, without authority, imports into the United States a product made in another country by a process patented in the United States shall be liable as an infringer.

"(c) Whoever actively includes infringement of a patent shall be liable as an infringer.

"Whoever sells a component of a patented machine, manufacture, combination or composition, or a material or apparatus for use in practicing a patented process, constituting a material part of the invention, knowing the same to be especially made or especially adapted for use in an infringement of such patent, and not a staple article or commodity of commerce suitable for substantial noninfringing use, shall be liable as a contributory infringer.

"(e) No patent owner otherwise entitled to relief for infringement or contributory infringement of a patent shall be denied relief or deemed guilty of misuse or illegal extension of the patent right by reason of his having done one or more of the following:

(1) derived revenue from acts which if performed by another without his consent would constitute contributory infringement of the patent; (2) licensed or authorized another to perform acts which if performed without his consent would constitute contributory infringement of the patent; (3) sought to enforce his patent rights against infringement or contributory infringement.

"(f) Whenever a licensee under a patent licensing arrangement asserts in appropriate proceedings the invalidity of any patent or of any claim of any patent included in such arrangement:

"(1) The action in which such invalidity is asserted, if then pending in a state court, shall be removed to the district court of the United States for the district embracing the place where such action is pending, and

"(2) The licensor shall, with respect to such patent or to such claim of such patent, have the option of terminating such arrangement: Provided, however, That if any such arrangement is so terminated with respect to less than all of the patents or claims so licensed, and the arrangement itself does not provide for, or the parties thereto are unable, within such time as the court may determine to be reasonable, to agree upon the consideration to be paid for the license under the remaining patents or claims, the court in which the invalidity is asserted shall determine a reasonable consideration to be paid for the patents or claims not terminated: Provided, however, That such termination shall not relieve the licensee of liabilities accrued for the period prior to such termination. Agreement in such a patent licensing arrangement not to contest the validity of any license claim or patent shall neither prevent a licensee from asserting invalidity under this subsection nor serve as the basis for the finding of a misuse or illegal extension of the patent right.

"(g) No assignor of a patent shall directly or indirectly contest the validity of the patent which he has assigned unless he first offers to restore to the owner of the patent, or for his benefit, the consideration paid by such owner for the patent, or an amount determined by the court to equal the value of such payment. Such restoration must be made regardless of the outcome of the contest, and the court shall provide therefor in its judgment or other final determination, if not previously paid. An assignor proceeding under this subsection shall be precluded from asserting any ground for invalidity known or reasonably available to him at the time his assignment of the patent was made.

"§ 272. Temporary presence in the United States

"The use of any invention in any vessel, aircraft or vehicle of any country which affords similar privileges to vessels, aircraft or vehicles of the United States, entering the United States temporarily or accidentally, shall not constitute infringement of any patent, if the invention is used exclusively for the needs of the vessel, aircraft or vehicle and is not sold in or used for the manufacture of anything to be sold in or exported from the United States.

"283. Injunction.

"284. Damages.

"285. Attorney fees.

"286. Time limitation on damages.

"287. Limitation on damages; marking and notice.

"288. Action for infringement of a patent containing an invalid claim.

"289. Additional remedy for infringement of design patent.

"290. Notice of patent suits.

"291. Interfering patents.

"292. False marking.

"293. Nonresident patentee, service and notice.

"294. Arbitration.

"§ 281. Remedy for infringement of patent

"A patentee shall have remedy by civil action for infringement of his patent.

"§ 282. Presumption of validity; defenses

"(a) A patent shall be presumed valid. Each claim of a patent (whether in independent or dependent form) shall be presumed valid independently of the validity of other claims; dependent claims shall be presumed valid even though dependent upon an invalid claim. The burden of establishing invalidity of a patent or any claim thereof shall rest on the party asserting it. A party challenging the validity of a patent under this title has the burden of establishing invalidity of the claimed invention by clear and convincing evidence.

"(b) The following shall be defenses in any action involving the validity or infringement of a patent and shall be pleaded:

"(1) Noninfringement, absence of liability for infringement, or unenforceability.

"(2) Invalidity of the patent or any claim in suit on any ground specified in part II of this title except that based upon prior art cited under provisions of chapter 31, which shall be considered only after said prior art has been considered by the office under the provisions of said chapter as a condition for patentability.

Provided, however, That the validity of a patent may not be questioned solely because of the existence of two or more patents where said patents will expire on the same date as a result of filing on the same date or as a result of a terminal disclaimer pursuant to section 253 of this title, so long as the right to sue for infringement of said patents is maintained in the same legal entity.

"(3) Invalidity of the patent or any claim in suit for failure to comply with any requirement of sections 112 or 251 of this title.

"(4) Any other fact or act made a defense by this title.

"(c) In actions involving the validity or infringement of a patent the party asserting invalidity or noninfringement shall give notice in the pleading or otherwise in writing to the adverse party at least thirty days before the trial, of the country, number, date, and name of the patentee of any patent, the title, date, and page numbers of any publication to be relied upon as anticipation of the patent in suit or, except in actions in the United States Court of Claims, as showing the state of the art, and the name and address of any person who may be relied upon as the prior inventor or as having prior knowledge of or as having previously used or offered for sale the invention of the patent in suit. In the absence of such notice proof of the said matters may not be made at the trial except on such terms as the court requires.

"§ 283. Injunction

"The several courts having jurisdiction of cases under this title may grant injunctions in accordance with the principles of equity to prevent the violation of any right secured by patent, on such terms as the court deems reasonable.

"§ 284. Damages

"(a) Upon finding for the claimant the court shall award the claimant damages adequate to compensate for the infringement but in no event less than a reasonable royalty for the use made of the invention by the infringer, together with interest and costs as fixed by the court.

"(b) When the damages are not found by a jury, the court shall assess them. In either event the court may increase the damages up to three times the amount found or assessed.

"(c) The court may receive expert testimony as an aid to the determination of damages or of what royalty would be reasonable under the circumstances.

"§ 285. Attorney fees

"The court in exceptional cases may award reasonable attorney fees to the prevailing party.

"§ 286. Time limitation on damages

"(a) Except as otherwise provided by law, no recovery shall be had for any infringement committed more than six years prior to the filing of the complaint or counterclaim for infringement in the action.

"(b) In the case of claims against the United States Government for use of a patented invention, the period before bringing suit, up to six years, between the date of receipt of a written claim for compensation by the department or agency of the Government having authority to settle such claim, and the date of mailing by the Government of a notice to the claimant that his claim has been denied shall not be counted as part of the period referred to in the preceding paragraph.

"§ 287. Limitation on damages; marking and notice

"Patentees, and persons making or selling any patented article for or under them, may give notice to the public that the same is patented, either by fixing thereon the word patent or the abbreviation pat. together with the number of the patent, or when, from the character of the article, this cannot be done, by fixing to it, or to the package wherein one or more of them is contained, a label containing a like notice. In the event of failure so to mark, no damages shall be recovered by the patentee in any action for infringement, except on proof that the infringer was notified of the infringement and continued to infringe thereafter, in which event damages may be recovered only for infringement occurring after such notice. Filing of an action for infringement shall constitute such notice.

"§ 288. Action for infringement of a patent containing an invalid claim

"Whenever, without deceptive intention, a claim of a patent is invalid, an action may be maintained for the infringement of a claim of the patent which may be valid.

"§ 289. Additional remedy for infringement of design patent

"(a) Whoever during the term of a patent for a design, without license of the owner, (1) applies the patented design, or any colorable imitation thereof, to any article of manufacture for the purpose of sale, or (2) sells or exposes for sale any article of manufacture to which such design or colorable imitation has been applied shall be liable to the owner to the extent of his total profit, but not less than $250, recoverable in any United States district court having jurisdiction of the parties.

"(b) Nothing in this section shall prevent, lessen, or impeach any other remedy which an owner of an infringed patent has under the provisions of this title, but he shall not twice recover the profit made from the infringement.

"§ 290. Notice of patent suits

"The clerk of a court of the United States, within one month after the filing of an action under this title shall give notice thereof in writing to the Commissioner, setting forth so far as known the names and addresses of the parties, name of the inventor, and the designating number of the patent upon which the action has been brought. If any other patent is subsequently included in the action the clerk of the court shall give like notice thereof. Within one month after the decision is rendered or a judgment issued the clerk of the court shall give notice to the Commissioner. The Commissioner shall, on receipt of such notices, enter the same in the file of such patent.

"§ 291. Priority of invention between patentees

"(a) Whenever there are two patents naming different inventors and claiming the same or substantially the same subject matter, the owner of one of the patents may have relief against the owner of the other by civil action, and the court may adjudge the question of the validity of any of such patents, in whole or in part. A final judgment in such action adverse to a patentee from which no appeal or other review has been or can be taken or had shall constitute cancellation of the claims involved from the patent, and notice thereof shall be endorsed on copies of the patent thereafter distributed by the Patent Office.

"(b) Such suit may be instituted against the party in interest as shown by the records of the Office, but any party in interest may become a party to the action. If there be adverse parties residing in a plurality of districts not embraced within the same state, or an adverse party residing in a foreign country, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction and may issue summons against the adverse parties directed to the marshal of any district in which any adverse party resides. Summons against adverse parties residing in foreign countries may be served by publication or otherwise as the court directs. The Commissioner shall not be made a party, but he shall be notified of the filing of the suit by the clerk of the court in which it is filed and shall have the right to intervene.

"§ 292. False marking

"(a) Whoever, without the consent of the patentee, marks upon, or affixes to, or uses in advertising in connection with anything made, used, or sold by him, the name or any imitation of the name of the patentee, the patent number, or the words 'patent', 'patentee', or the like, with the intent of counterfeiting or imitating the mark of the patentee, or of deceiving the public and inducing them to believe that the thing was made or sold by or with the consent of the patentee; or

"(b) Whoever marks upon, or affixes to, or uses in advertising in connection with any unpatented article, the word 'patent' or any word or number importing that the same is patented, for the purpose of deceiving the public; or

"(c) Whoever marks upon, or affixes to, or uses in advertising in connection with any article, the words 'patent applied for', 'patent pending', or any word importing that an application for patent has been made, when no application for patent has been made, or if made, is not pending, for the purpose of deceiving the public—

Shall be fined not more than $500 for every such offense.

"(d) Any person may sue for the penalty, in which even one-half shall go to the person suing and the other to the use of the United States.

"§ 293. Nonresident patentee; service and notice

"Every patentee not residing in the United States may file in the Office a written designation stating the name and address of a person residing within the United States on whom may be served process or notice of proceedings affecting the patent or rights thereunder. If the person designated cannot be found at the address given in the last designation, or if no person has been designated, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction and summons shall be served by publication or otherwise as the court directs. The court shall have the same jurisdiction to take any action respecting the patent or rights thereunder that it would have if the patentee were personally within the jurisdiction of the court.

"§ 294. Arbitration

"(a) A written provision in any agreement or contract to settle by arbitration any controversy thereafter arising out of such contract or agreement in respect to the infringement of validity of any patent involved in said contract or agreement, or an agreement in writing to settle by arbitration an existing controversy in respect to the infringement or validity of any patent, shall be valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, except for any grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract. Arbitration of such controversies, awards, and confirmation of awards shall be governed by title 9, United States Code. In any such arbitration, the defenses provided for under section 282 of this title shall be considered by the arbitrator.

"(b) The parties to an existing dispute as to patent validity or infringement may, after such dispute has arisen, agree in writing to settle such dispute by arbitration, and such agreement shall be valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, except for any grounds as exist at law or in equity for revocation of any contract.

"(c) Within two months after the award is rendered, the patentee shall give notice thereof in writing to the Commissioner and to the clerk of the district court of the United States for the district and division embracing the place where the arbitration proceeding was conducted. There shall be a separate notice prepared for each patent involved in such proceeding. Such notice shall set forth the names and addresses of the parties, the name of the inventor, and the name of the patent owner, shall designate the number of the patent, shall contain a copy of the award, and shall contain a copy of all submissions to the arbitrator concerning the validity of the patent. The Commissioner shall, upon receipt of such notice, enter the same in the record of the prosecution of such patent.

"(d) Any party to the arbitration proceeding may designate those portions of an award or submission contained in the notice required under subsection (c) of this section that he deems to relate to a trade secret or other confidential research, development, or commercial information belonging to and of substantial value to him. Upon a verified showing of good cause, such designated information shall be kept separate from the file of the patent, and made available only to government agencies on written request to and approval by the Attorney General.

"Chapter 30.—PRESERVATION OF OTHER RIGHTS
"§ 301. Preservation of other rights; non-preemption

"This title shall not be construed to preempt rights or obligations not arising by operation of State or Federal law of contracts, of confidential or proprietary information, of trade secrets, or of unfair competition.

"Chapter 31.—PRIOR ART CITATIONS TO PATENT OFFICE AND REEXAMINATION OF PATENTS

"§ 311. Rules established by Commissioner of Patents

"The Commissioner shall establish rules and regulations for the citation to the Office of prior art patents or publications, pertinent to the validity of patents, and for the reexamination of patents in the light of such prior art.

"§ 312. Citation of art

"Any person may, at any time within the period of enforceability of a patent, cite to the Office prior patent or publications which may have a bearing on the patentability of any claim of the patent, provided that the person citing such prior art identifies in writing the part(s) of the same considered pertinent and the manner of applying the same to at least one claim of the patent. The writing identifying and applying the same shall become a part of the official file of the patent. The identity of the person citing the prior art will be excluded from such file upon his request to remain anonymous.

"§ 313. Request for examination

"Any person may, at any time within the period of enforceability of a patent, request reexamination of the patent as to the patentability of any claim thereof in the light of any prior art cited under the provisions of section 312 of this chapter, by filing in the Office a written request for such reexamination accompanied by a reexamination fee prescribed according to this title and by a statement of the relation of such prior art to the patentability of the claim or claims involved. Unless the requesting person is the patentee, the Commissioner shall promptly send a copy of such request and statement to the owner of the patent appearing from the records of the Office at the time of the filing of the request.

"§ 314. Determination of issue by Commissioner of Patents

"(a) Within ninety days following the filing of a request for reexamination under section 313 of this chapter the Commissioner shall make a determination as to whether a substantial new question of patentability affecting any claim of the patent concerned, not previously considered in examination or reexamination of such claim, is raised by the consideration, with or without any other prior art, of the prior art which has been cited in relation to the patent according to section 312 of this chapter. The Commissioner on his own initiative may make such a determination at any time.

"(b) A record of the Commissioner's determination under paragraph (a) of this section shall be made in the file of the patent, and a copy of it sent promptly to the owner of the patent.

"(c) A determination by the Commissioner pursuant to paragraph (a) of this section that such a new question of patentability is not so raised shall be final and non-appealable.

"§ 315. Reexamination ordered by Commissioner of Patents

"If, in a determination made pursuant to paragraph (a) of section 314, the Commissioner finds that a substantial new question of patentability affecting a claim or claims of the patent is raised by consideration of the patents and publications that have been cited in relation to the patent according to section 312 of this chapter, he shall order a reexamination of the patent for the resolution of the question, and shall proceed to resolve it in accordance with sections 131, 132, 133, and any other pertinent section of this title, as though the claim or claims involved were present in a pending application. The patent owner shall be given a reasonable period, not less than two months, after the filing of the reexamination order within which he may file a statement on such question for consideration in the reexamination. Any reexamination proceeding under this section shall be conducted with special dispatch within the Office.

"§ 316. Response or amendment by patent owner

"The patent owner shall be provided an opportunity in any reexamination proceeding under this chapter to amend any claim of his patent in order to distinguish the claim from prior art cited according to section 312 of this chapter, or in response to a decision adverse to the patentability of the claim, but no amendment enlarging the scope of a claim shall be permitted in a reexamination proceeding under this chapter.

"§ 317. Appeals

"The owner of a patent involved in a reexamination proceeding under this chapter may appeal in accordance with section 134, sections 141-145 or other pertinent section of this title from a final decision in such proceeding adverse to the patentability of any claim, or amended claim, of the patent.

"§ 318. Certificate of patentability; unpatentability and claim cancellation

"When in a reexamination proceeding under this chapter the time for appeal has expired or any appeal proceeding has terminated, the Commissioner shall issue and publish a certificate cancelling any claim of the patent finally determined in such proceeding or on appeal therein to be unpatentable, confirming any claim of the patent so determined to be patentable, and incorporating in the patent any amended claim thereof so determined to be patentable.

"§ 319. Reliance on art in court only after office review

"No patent or (printed) publication may be relied upon as evidence of nonpatentability in a civil action involving an issue of validity or infringement of a patent unless the patent or publication was cited by or to the Office during prosecution of the application for the patent or was submitted for consideration by the Office in accordance with sections 312 and 313 of this chapter and was actually considered in accordance with section 314. The limitation provided by this section shall apply in any civil action in which a pleading presents a claim for infringement or for adjudication of the validity of a patent, upon the basis of the contents of the patent file as it existed on the date of the filing of such pleading, excepting that a party may rely upon a patent or publication cited later, and upon the final determination had on a request for reexamination in the light of such patent or publication, if such patent or publication was cited and such request was filed in the Office within the period of a stay ordered by the court in accordance with section 320 of this chapter.

"§ 320. Stay of court proceedings to permit office review

"(a) Any party to a civil action against whom a pleading presents a claim for infringement or for adjudication of the validity of a patent shall have the right, by motion brought before any responsive pleading, to secure a stay of all proceedings in the action by order of the court for a period, not less than four months, sufficient to enable such party to search for and cite patents or publications considered pertinent to the patent and to request reexamination of the patent in view of such prior art according to sections 312 and 313 of this chapter. If such party files a request for such reexamination in the Office and serves and files a copy of it in the action within the period of the stay provided by such order, the stay shall be extended by further order of the court until at least twenty (20) days after the final determination of the request for reexamination.

"(b) The court, on motion and upon such terms as are just, may at any time stay the proceedings in a civil action in which the validity of a patent is in issue for a period sufficient to enable the moving party to cite to the Office newly discovered additional prior art in the nature of patents or (printed) publications and to secure final determination of a request for reexamination of the patent in the light of such additional prior art, provided the court finds that such additional prior art, in fact, constitutes newly discovered evidence which by due diligence could not have been discovered in time to be cited to and considered by the Office within the period of a stay of such proceedings that was or could have been secured according to subsection (a) of this section.

"§ 321. Dismissal of complaint

"The party or parties whose complaint commencing a civil action presents a claim for infringement or for adjudication of the validity of a patent shall have the right, by notice served upon the other party or parties and filed in the action at any time within the period of a stay ordered by the court pursuant to section 320 of this chapter, to dismiss such complaint without prejudice and without costs to any party.

"§ 351. Definitions.

"§ 351. Definitions

"When used in this part unless the context otherwise indicates—

"(a) The term 'treaty' means the Patent Cooperation Treaty done at Washington, on June 19, 1970, excluding chapter II thereof.

"(b) The term 'Regulations', when capitalized, means the Regulations under the treaty excluding part C thereof, done at Washington on the same date as the treaty. The term 'regulations', when not capitalized, means the regulations established by the Commissioner under this title.

"(c) The term 'international application' means an application filed under the treaty.

"(d) The term 'international application originating in the United States' means an international application filed in the Office when it is acting as a Receiving Office under the treaty, irrespective of whether or not the United States has been designated in that international application.

"(e) The term 'international application designating the United States' means an international application specifying the United States as a country in which a patent is sought, regardless where such international application is filed.

"(f) The term 'Receiving Office' means a national patent office or intergovernmental organization which receives and processes international applications as prescribed by the treaty and the Regulations.

"(g) The term 'International Searching Authority' means a national patent office or intergovernmental organization as appointed under the treaty which processes international applications as prescribed by the treaty and the Regulations.

"(h) The term 'International Bureau' means the international intergovernmental organization which is recognized as the coordinating body under the treaty and the Regulations.

"(i) Terms and expressions not defined in this part are to be taken in the sense indicated by the treaty and the Regulations.

"§ 366. Withdrawn international application.

"§ 367. Actions of other authorities: Review.

"§ 368. Secrecy of certain inventions; filing international applications in foreign countries.

"§ 361. Receiving Office

"(a) The Office shall act as a Receiving Office for international applications filed by nationals or residents of the United States. In accordance with any agreement made between the United States and another country, the Office may also act as a Receiving Office for international applications filed by residents or nationals of such country who are entitled to file international applications.

"(b) The Office shall perform all acts connected with the discharge of duties required of a Receiving Office, including the collection of international fees and their transmittal to the International Bureau.

"(c) International applications filed in the Office shall be in the English language.

"(d) The basic fee portion of the international fee, and the transmittal and search fees prescribed under section 376(a) of this part, shall be paid on filing of an international application. Payment of designation fees may be made on filing and shall be made not later than one year from the priority date of the international application.

"§ 362. International Searching Authority

"The Office may act as an International Searching Authority with respect to international applications in accordance with the terms and conditions of an agreement which may be concluded with the International Bureau.

"§ 363. International application designating the United States: Effect

"An international application designating the United States shall have the effect, from its international filing date under article 11 of the treaty, of a national application for patent regularly filed in the Office.

"§ 364. International stage: Procedure

"(a) International applications shall be processed by the Office when acting as a Receiving Office or International Searching Authority, or both, in accordance with the applicable provisions of the treaty, the Regulations, and this title.

"(b) An applicant's failure to act within prescribed time limits in connection with requirements pertaining to a pending international application may be excused upon a showing satisfactory to the Commissioner of unavoidable delay, to the extent not precluded by the treaty and the Regulations, and provided the conditions imposed by the treaty and the Regulations regarding the excuse of such failure to act are complied with.

"§ 365. Right of priority; benefit of the filing date of a prior application

"(a) In accordance with the conditions and requirements of section 119 of this title, a national application shall be entitled to the right of priority based on a prior filed international application which designated at least one country other than the United States.

"(b) In accordance with the conditions and requirements of the first paragraph of section 119 of this title and the treaty and the Regulations, an international application designating the United States shall be entitled to the right of priority based on a prior foreign application, or a prior international application designating at least one country other than the United States.

"(c) In accordance with the conditions and requirements of section 120 of this title, an international application designating the United States shall be entitled to the benefit of the filing date of a prior national application or a prior international application designating the United States, and a national application shall be entitled to the benefit of the filing date of a prior international application designating the United States. If any claim for the benefit of an earlier filing date is based on a prior international application which designated but did not originate in the United States, the Commissioner may require the filing in the Patent Office of a certified copy of such application together with a translation thereof into the English language, if it was filed in another language.

"§ 366. Withdrawn international application

"Subject to section 367 of this part, if an international application designating the United States is withdrawn or considered withdrawn, either generally or as to the United States, under the conditions of the treaty and the Regulations, before the applicant has complied with the applicable requirements prescribed by section 371(c) of this part, the designation of the United States shall have no effect and shall be considered as not having been made. However, such international application may serve as the basis for a claim of priority under section 365 (a) and (b) of this part, if it designated a country other than the United States.

"§ 367. Actions of other authorities: Review

"(a) Where a Receiving Office other than the Patent and Trademark Office has refused to accord an international filing date to an international application designating the United States or where it has held such application to be withdrawn either generally or as to the United States, the applicant may request review of the matter by the Commissioner, on compliance with the requirements of and within the time limits specified by the treaty and the Regulations. Such review may result in a determination that such application be considered as pending in the national stage.

"(b) The review under subsection (a) of this section, subject to the same requirements and conditions, may also be requested in those instances where an international application designating the United States is considered withdrawn due to a finding by the International Bureau under article 12(3) of the treaty.

"§ 368. Secrecy of certain inventions; filing international applications in foreign countries

"(a) International applications filed in the Office shall be subject to the provisions of chapter 17 of this title.

"(b) In accordance with article 27(8) of the treaty, the filing of an international application in a country other than the United States on the invention made in this country shall be considered to constitute the filing of an application in a foreign country within the meaning of chapter 17 of this title, whether or not the United States is designated in that international application.

"(c) If a license to file in a foreign country is refused or if an international application is ordered to be kept secret and a permit refused, the Office when acting as a Receiving Office or International Searching Authority, or both, may not disclose the contents of such application to anyone not authorized to receive such disclosure.

"§ 371. National stage: Commencement.

"§ 372. National stage: Requirements and procedure.

"§ 373. Improper applicant.

"§ 374. Publication of international application: Effect.

"§ 375. Patent issued on international application: Effect.

"§ 376. Fees.

"§ 371. National stage: Commencement

"(a) Receipt from the International Bureau of copies of international applications with amendments to the claims, if any, and international search reports is required in the case of all international applications designating the United States, except those filed in the Office.

"(b) Subject to subsection (f) of this section, the national stage shall commence with the expiration of the applicable time limit under article 22 (1) or (2) of the treaty, at which time the applicant shall have complied with the applicable requirements specified in subsection (c) of this section.

"(c) The applicant shall file in the Office—

"(1) The national fee prescribed under section 376(a) (4) of this part;

"(2) a copy of the international application, unless not required under subsection (a) of this section or already received from the International Bureau, and a verified translation into the English language of the international application, if it was filed in another language;

"(3) amendments, if any, to the claims in the international application, made under article 19 of the treaty, unless such amendments have been communicated to the Office by the International Bureau, and a translation into the English language if such amendments were made in another language;

"(4) a statement of the inventor (or other person authorized under chapter 11 of this title) complying with the requirements of section 115 of this title and with regulations prescribed for statements of applicants.

"(d) Failure to comply with any of the requirements of paragraph (1) to (3) of subsection (c) of this section, within the time limit provided by article 22 (1) or (2) of the treaty shall result in abandonment of the international application.

"(e) If the international application was signed by or on behalf of the assignee, or other successor in title, the inventor shall have the opportunity to file a ratification within thirty days from commencement of the national stage as provided in subsection (b) of this section. If such ratification is not timely filed, the procedure provided by section 111(d) of this title shall apply.

"(f) After an international application has entered the national stage, no patent may be granted or refused thereon before the expiration of the applicable time limit under article 28 of the treaty, except with the express consent of the applicant. The applicant may present amendments to the specification, claims, and drawings of the application after the national stage has commenced.

"(g) At the express request of the applicant, the national stage of processing may be commenced at any time at which the application is in order for such purpose and the applicable requirements of subsection (c) of this section have been complied with.

"§ 372. National stage: Requirements and procedure

"(a) All questions of substance and, within the scope of the requirements of the treaty and the Regulations, procedure in an international application designating the United States shall be determined as in the case of national applications regularly filed in the Office.

"(b) In case of international applications designating but not originating in, the United States—

"(1) the Commissioner may cause to be reexamined questions relating to form and contents of the application in accordance with the requirements of the treaty and the Regulations;

December 19, 1974

"(2) the Commissioner may cause the question of unity of invention to be reexamined under section 121 of this title, within the scope of the requirements of the treaty and the Regulations.

"(c) Any claim not searched in the international stage in view of a holding, found to be justified by the Commissioner upon review, that the international application did not comply with the requirement for unity of invention under the treaty and the Regulations, shall be considered canceled, unless payment of a special fee is made by the applicant. Such special fee shall be paid with respect to each claim not searched in the international stage and shall be submitted not later than one month after a notice was sent to the applicant informing him that the said holding was deemed to be justified. The payment of the special fee shall not prevent the Commissioner from requiring that the international application be restricted to one of the inventions claimed therein under section 121 of this title, and within the scope of the requirements of the treaty and the Regulations.

"§ 373. Improper applicant

"An international application designating the United States, shall not be accepted by the Office for the national stage if it was filed by anyone not qualified under chapter 11 of this title to be an applicant for the purpose of filing a national application in the United States. Such international applications shall not serve as the basis for the benefits of an earlier filing date under section 120 of this title in a subsequently filed application, but may serve as the basis for a claim of the right of priority under section 119 of this title, if the United States was not the sole country designated in such international application.

"§ 374. Publication of international application: Effect

"The publication under the treaty of an international application designating the United States shall have the same effect under this title as a published national application.

"§ 375. Patent issued on international application: Effect

"(a) A patent may be issued by the Commission based on an international application designating the United States, in accordance with the provisions of this title. Such patent shall have the force and effect of a patent issued on a national application filed under the provisions of chapter 11 of this title.

"(b) Where due to an incorrect translation the scope of a patent granted on an international application designating the United States, which was not originally filed in the English language, exceeds the scope of the international application in its original language, a court of competent jurisdiction may retroactively limit the scope of the patent, by declaring it unenforceable to the extent that it exceeds the scope of the international application in its original language.

"§ 376. Fees

"(a) The required payment of the international fee, which amount is specified in the Regulations, shall be paid in United States currency. The Office may also charge the following fees:

- "(1) A transmittal fee (see section 361(d));
- "(2) A search fee (see section 361(d));
- "(3) A supplemental search fee (to be paid when required);
- "(4) A national fee (see section 371(c));
- "(5) A special fee (to be paid when required; see section 372(c));
- "(6) Such other fee as established by the Commissioner.

"(b) The amounts of fees specified in subsection (a) of this section, except the international fee, shall be prescribed by the Commissioner. He may refund any sum paid by mistake or in excess of the fees so specified, or if required under the treaty and the Regulations. The Commissioner may also refund any part of the search fee, where he determines such refund to be warranted."

"TRANSITIONAL AND SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONS

"Sec. 2. Section 1542 of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 1542. Office decisions

"The Court of Customs and Patent Appeals shall have jurisdiction of appeals from decisions of:

"(1) The Board of Appeals of the Office as to patent applications and patents as provided in chapter 13 of title 35, United States Code.

"(2) The Commissioner of Patents or the Trademark Trial and Appeals Board as to trademark applications and proceedings as provided in section 1071 of title 15, United States Code.

"Sec. 3. If any provision of title 35, Patents, United States Code, as amended by this Act, or any other provision of this Act, is declared unconstitutional or is held invalid, the validity of the remaining provisions shall not be affected.

"Sec. 4 (a) This Act shall take effect on the day one year after enactment. It shall apply to all applications for patent actually filed in the United States on and after this effective date, even though entitled to the benefit of an earlier filing date, and to patents issued on such applications.

"(b) Applications for patent actually filed in the United States before and still pending on the effective date of this Act, and patents issued on such applications, shall be governed by the provisions of title 35, United States Code, in effect immediately prior to the effective date. Part II and part III of this Act shall apply to patents issued on or after the effective date.

"(c) Part III of this Act shall apply to unexpired patents granted or applied for prior to the effective date of the Act except as otherwise provided.

"(d) Section 251 of title 35 as amended by this Act shall apply to applications for reissue filed after the effective date but the conditions for patentability shall be determined under the law applicable to the original patent.

"(e) Assistant Commissioners of patents and examiners-in-chief in office on the effective date of this Act shall continue in office and in accordance with their then existing appointments.

"(f) Subsection (d) of section 112 of title 35 as amended by this Act shall not apply to patents issued, and application filed, prior to the effective date of this Act. No such application shall be held incomplete, and no such patent shall be held invalid, because availability to the public of a deposit of a micro-organism recited therein was conditioned upon issuance of a United States patent reciting a deposit of said micro-organism.

"(g) The amendments made by this Act to title 35, United States Code, shall not affect any rights or liabilities existing under such title as in effect immediately prior to the effective date of this Act.

"(h) All functions performed by the Board of Patent Interferences shall be performed by the Board of Appeals. When performing such functions the Board of Appeals shall constitute a Board of Patent Interferences. Individuals who are members of the Board of Patent Interferences immediately prior to the effective date of this Act shall become examiners-in-chief and members of the Board of Appeals on the effective date of this Act and shall receive compensation at the same rate as provided for members of the Board of Appeals.

"Sec. 5. Nothing in title 35 as amended by this Act shall affect any provision of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, or of the National Aeronautics and Space Act, except that the functions of a Board of Patent Interferences specified in said Acts may be performed by the Board of Appeals as specified in section 7 of title 35 as amended by this Act.

"Sec. 6. Section 308 of the Clean Air Amendments Act of 1970 is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 308. If the Administrator determines that the implementation of the purposes and intent of this Act is being significantly retarded by any section of title 35 of the United States Code he shall, after consultation with the Department of Commerce, recommend to the Congress such modification of title 35, as may be necessary."

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF SENATOR HIRAM L.

FONG

INTRODUCTION

S. 2504 as reported by the Subcommittee on Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights, to the full Judiciary Committee, hereinafter referred to as S. 2504 C.P., purports to improve the U.S. patent system and thereby increase the percentage of valid patents issued.

Unfortunately, as drafted, S. 2504 C.P. would have just the opposite effect.

Instead of moving toward the six major objectives of the President's Commission on the Patent System, S. 2504 C.P. would operate in exactly the opposite direction.

The President's Commission set forth the following, six major objectives for the U.S. patent system:

- "1. To raise the quality and reliability of the U.S. Patent.
- "2. To shorten the period of pendency of a patent application from filing to final disposition by the Patent Office.
- "3. To accelerate the public disclosure of technological advances.
- "4. To reduce the expense of obtaining and litigating a patent.
- "5. To make U.S. patent practice more compatible with that of other major countries, wherever consistent with the objectives of the U.S. patent system.
- "6. To prepare the patent system to cope with the exploding technology foreseeable in the decades ahead."

However, as I shall endeavor to demonstrate in these Individual Views, S. 2504 C.P. would:

- 1. Not accomplish the six goals of the President's Commission on the Patent System;
- 2. Add great cost and insurmountable burdens to the American inventor;
- 3. Invalidate many patents on expensively developed and important inventions;
- 4. Burden both the applicant and the Patent Office with chores and expense beyond what we can reasonably expect governmental and research and development budgets to carry without great loss of incentive to the advancement of science and the useful arts;
- 5. Frustrate small companies to the advantage of larger established ones who through the new opposition proceedings will have the greatest legal tool for harassment ever created to effectively eliminate their competition;
- 6. Exacerbate the problem of inflation which is now our Nation's Number One problem.

I agree and support the six major objectives outlined by the President's Commission established to reform the patent law.

The six amendments I introduced at the Patents, Trademarks and Copyrights Subcommittee level were introduced only after much thought and deliberation on comments from various members of the public.

December 19, 1974

It is gratifying that the Administration has now recognized, generally, that the original bill needed amending.

My amendments were a sincere attempt to help the Administration bill meet some of the objectives outlined by the President's Commission and to engender support for the bill from the inventive community—support that appears to have been totally lacking for the original text of S. 2504. In fact, the voluntary patent inventive community has been almost unanimously opposed to the bill.

Unfortunately, only one and one-half of my six amendments were accepted in the Subcommittee. Thus, the bill as reported to the full Committee is not materially improved over the original bill either in meeting the six goals of the President's Commission or in regard to acceptance or approval by the inventive community. I was pleased, however, to have the support of the Chairman of our Subcommittee, Senator John L. McClellan on five or six of my amendments. He abstained on my amendment to Section 41 on maintenance fees.

Finally, we must not lose sight of two important facts: (a) that the patent system is a voluntary incentive system, and (b) that Congress should fulfill their Constitutional mandate "to promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited times to Authors and Inventors the Exclusive Rights to their respective Writings and Discoveries."

One can readily see that the useful arts will not progress if inventors never disclose or communicate their inventions to the public, but choose to practice them in secrecy or possibly to have their inventions die with them. This secrecy, of course, is the alternative to the patent system which is, and always has been open to the inventive community.

As the United States Government, speaking through the Department of Justice, stated in Keeney Oil v. Bicon:

"The Federal Patent Laws merely offer, and do not compel the exchange of a 17-year monopoly for disclosure of patentable inventions; . . ." (emphasis supplied)

Up to now, most inventors have chosen the patent route—but under the Subcommittee bill, S. 2504 C.P., they could very well choose secrecy.

Why patents are important and should be encouraged

Patents can effectively fight and reduce inflation by increasing our country's productivity through new inventions that allow industry to produce more and better products per unit time, thereby creating more products through greater efficiency and allowing for reduced prices of goods and supplies.

Thus, patents are important because they represent an economical and effective way of fighting inflation with no increase in taxes. By allowing goods to be produced faster and more efficiently (better products in a lesser time) patents permit a reduction of prices while maintaining or decreasing overhead in terms of man-hours and production time. Increased productivity, of course, is most important to our Nation at this time in our history when our total national output of goods and services (Gross National Product—GNP) expressed in real dollars has declined over the past two quarters.

Additionally, patents stimulate competition and allow smaller companies to compete successfully with larger companies. As the experienced and knowledgeable Commissioner of Patents, C. Marshall Dann, recently explained in his June 6, 1974 speech before the FBA-BNA Conference of Patents, Antitrust, and Trade Secrets:

"The patent system provides a spur to competition in research and development . . . Patents can be of great value in the competitive struggle both to small companies and to large ones. To the extent they permit a small company to compete more effectively with larger companies in the same field there is an overall benefit to competition." (emphasis supplied)

However, S. 2504 C.P. as proposed by the Subcommittee would, in my view, inhibit inventors from disclosing their discoveries and thus would stifle competition and technological advances.

1. It would increase the difficulties of applicants, especially the smaller ones, in preparing and prosecuting patent applications.

2. It would increase the complexity of examination procedures necessitating a greatly enlarged Patent Office at the taxpayer's expense.

3. It would make valid patents more difficult to obtain and to enforce because of difficult if not impossible-to-comply-with provisions.

4. It would make the obtaining and enforcement of patents substantially more expensive.

5. It would create a disincentive to making inventions known.

6. It would create a disincentive to the making of inventions at all.

7. It would discourage the establishment of new businesses built on inventions, i.e., discouraging new companies such as Polaroid.

8. It would discourage individual inventors from applying for a patent because of prohibitive cost involving increasingly large patent lawyer's fees and new maintenance fees.

9. It may cause our nation to lose in the technological race.

10. It may cause our nation to lose in the arms race.

While some reform to the patent system is justified, I believe that we might well consider the caveat given to us by the eminent former Chief Judge of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals Judge Eugene Worley, who said in In re Prater and Wet, 162 U.S.P.Q. 541, at page 552 (August 14, 1969):

"Congress, of course, had no way of knowing in 1952 what lay in the test tube then or what would become a reality tomorrow. But it devised a statute—a model of legislative craftsmanship and foresight—broad enough to anticipate and nourish the technological explosion we have witnessed. Our patent system is a delicate balance of interest; it protects the fruits of the extraordinary efforts it demands of inventors compatibly with the public interest. It has largely fostered the favorable climate resulting in the tremendous strides this country has made in reaching the pinnacle in the worldwide competition in the arts and sciences—from atomic energy to antihistamines, computers to catalysts, lasers to lunar landings.

"So it is with no little surprise and concern that one learns of proposed patent 'reforms'. I can appreciate, from my own Congressional experience, the difficulty of enacting legislation acceptable to all concerned. However, after having dealt with the patent statutes, particularly the 1952 Patent Act, for nearly twenty years as a member of this court, I have grave misgivings concerning the desirability or need for any substantive change in a system that has worked so well in following the Constitutional mandate 'to promote the Progress of Science and Useful Arts'."

Therefore, any substantial changes to the present patent system should be undertaken only with great caution and deliberation, after considering and integrating the suggestions from the experts in the field, the members and professionals of the inventive community itself.

Unless a change would clearly and indisputably improve existing patent law, we should retain the law as it is, for it can be shown statistically and by actual court decided cases to be workable and successful.

S. 2930, introduced January 31, 1974, by Senator Buckley, would in my opinion attain the objectives of the President's Commission. S. 2504 C.P. on the other hand would exacerbate our current inflation problem and would fail to meet the objectives of the President's Commission.

THE FONG AMENDMENTS

First amendment (section 3)

Purpose:

The purpose of my first amendment was to insure that the 3 (d) Solicitor and his assistants (who may be numerous) would not cause great dissension and strife in the Patent Office, but rather work harmoniously with the Commissioner of Patents and his assistants. It would be a waste of the taxpayer's money and a loss of efficiency to have two warring factions within the same agency, both working against each other rather than with each other.

Problem:

The language in the bill stated that 3 (d) Solicitor "shall be independent of the Commissioner in carrying out his responsibilities under this title . . .", which means that a subordinate to the Commissioner of Patents would not have to report to, nor coordinate his activities with, that of the Commissioner. It is comparable to allowing a Deputy Attorney General to be independent of the Attorney General.

Solution:

In Subcommittee, I proposed to strike this language from Section 3 of the bill.

Accepted:

I was pleased to have the support of both the Chairman, Senator McClellan, and the ranking Minority member, Senator Scott on this amendment.

Second amendment

Purpose:

The purpose of my second amendment was to insure that all witnesses, especially non-party witnesses who were subpoenaed would be given the right to the full protection of law as now provided by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and not made to travel thousands of miles to answer an extrajudicial administrative subpoena regarding a patent case they had no connection with, nor any interest in, as present language of the bill allows.

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 45, Section (d)(2) and Section (e)(1) provide that:

"the deposition is to be taken . . . only in the county wherein he resides or is employed or transacts his business . . ." and that "A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness at a hearing or trial may be served at any place within the district, or at any place without the district that is within 100 miles of the place of the hearing or trial specified in the subpoena;" (emphasis supplied)

This reasonable restriction provided by our Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which presently is also part of our patent laws (35 U.S.C. 23 and 24) should not be deleted.

Problem:

The language in the bill now allows the Board of Examiners-in-Chief to issue subpoenas to any persons in the United States—regardless of whether he or she is a party to the proceedings, and to compel that party or non-party to proceed to Washington, D.C. regardless of the distance involved, inconveniences, and loss of time to the party or non-party subpoenaed.

If the person located in Hawaii, Alaska, California, or any other distant state cannot make the trip to Washington, he must then hire an attorney in Washington to answer the order from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia "to show cause why the person refusing or failing to comply with such subpoena or order should not be commanded by the court to comply therewith", as provided in Section 23(c) of the S. 2504 C.P., the subpoena enforcement section.

Therefore, if a non-party cannot afford to take time off from work to travel to Washington, the non-party must still pay a Washington attorney to represent him in the United States District Court in D.C. to explain why he could not or should not be made to comply with the subpoena in order not to be charged with contempt of court.

Under present law, a subpoena may be issued to compel witnesses to testify, but testimony is to be taken only in the area of the witnesses' residence. Present law also guarantees to each witness subpoenaed all the protection embodied by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the concomitant protection of an impartial Federal judge as against an administrative non-judge person.

Since non-parties and their documents or other information can be subpoenaed, courts should decide the rights of a person to comply or not to comply with a subpoena, rather than an administrative officer purporting to read the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The person, especially the non-party called or subpoenaed, should have the unequalled right to recourse to the court in his own jurisdiction by a motion to quash or alter etc., pursuant to Rule 45 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

No Federal court requires one to travel from Hawaii to Washington to question the reasonableness of a subpoena.

Solution:

My solution was to substitute present Sections 23 and 24 of 35 U.S.C. Patents for Sections 23 and 24 of the bill, or in other words to retain present law. One may issue all the subpoenas he desires under present law (Section 24 of 35 U.S.C.) and obtain all the information desired in the district court of the witnesses' home state.

Rejected:

Although my amendment to substitute present law of 35 U.S.C. 23, 24 was rejected three to two, I was pleased to have the support of the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights, Senator McClellan.

Third amendment (section 41)

Purpose:

The purpose of my third amendment was to reduce a newly created handicap proposed by S. 2504 to be put on the American inventor, a handicap that had never existed before in our Nation's history—that of maintenance fees.

S. 2504 C.P. would have charged the American inventor with a first maintenance fee of at least $500 on or before the seventh year of his patent, a second maintenance fee of at least $1,000 on or before the tenth year of his patent, and a third maintenance fee of at least $1,500 on or before the thirteenth year of his patent.

In Subcommittee, I proposed an amendment to reduce the minimum total maintenance fee from $3,000 to $2,000 (7th year, $300; 10th year, $800; and 13th year, $1,100). This amendment would have particularly eased the burden on the small inventor and the small business. As many are aware, in most instances, patents are the only means that small business have in competing with the giants of industry.

Problem:

There has never been maintenance fees in the United States. There are no maintenance fees under present law. Once an inventor pays his patent attorney the fees for the prosecution of his application and pays the fees charged by the Patent Office and his patent issues, he has his patent free and clear for 17 years. He has responded to the incentive of the Patent System and has disclosed his invention to the public.

That would no longer be the case under S. 2504 C.P., as reported by the Subcommittee. The small inventor will now have to pay at least $3,000, just to keep his patent alive for its full term. The words "at least" are most important since the proposed maintenance fees have no upper limit, but rise as the cost of running the Patent Office rises. According to Section 41, fees, including maintenance fees, are supposed to pay approximately 50% of the cost of running the Patent Office. The "at least" language would permit increases in the already high maintenance fees.

This change, together with the other financial burdens that S. 2504 C.P. would impose on inventors, will discourage many small inventors from inventing, or once having invented, it will discourage them from disclosing their inventions to the public, denying the public the use of what could be a needed advancement in medicine, science, or engineering.

Inventors are creators. Inventors take nothing from the public; they add to the public. Perhaps they should not be charged at all for filing patent applications, but should be paid for doing so.

At a time when our nation's economy is floundering, and our Gross National Product, adjusted to remove the impact of inflation, has been declining, I question the wisdom of adding this heavy handicap to our nation's inventors. At a time when our real Gross National Product has fallen 5.8% and we have a negative export/import balance, it appears to be an inappropriate time to possibly de-stimulate our economy. (see April 19, 1974 Washington Post article entitled "GNP Falls 5.8%; Inflation Rate Rises to 10.8%")

(a) Major Competitors Have Much Lower Maintenance Fees:

One can see how large this handicap would be when we compare the maintenance fees in S. 2504 C. P. to those presently in force in the countries of our competitors, i.e.:

Japan's maintenance fee.....	$370
Great Britain's maintenance fee.....	$898
France's maintenance fee.....	$808
Proposed U.S. maintenance fee (or more than).....	$3,000
Germany (but much lower for first 7 years).....	$3,326

Germany's fees while high, are very low for the first seven years, i.e., $187.20, compared to our proposed $500 fee due the seventh year of the patent's life.

(b) High Maintenance Fees Possibly Unconstitutional:

It is also arguable that extremely high maintenance fees are possibly unconstitutional. Congress has been mandated (Article I, Sec. 8, Cl. 8):

"To promote the Progress of Science and the useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Rights to their respective Writings and Discoveries;" (emphasis supplied)

There is no indication in our Constitution that the government should charge any more than nominal administration fees.

The power to tax is the power to destroy. In this case, the tax (maintenance fees) payable by the patentee could also result in the destruction of valuable patents of small inventors. It is therefore not surprising that those countries who have maintenance fees have a very small number of private individual inventors as distinguished from corporate inventors when compared to the United States. According to a recent study:

Patents Issued to Individuals
Country:	Rather than Corporate Inventors
United States.....	25%
United Kingdom.....	5%
West Germany.....	5%

Therefore, it would seem that if one were to support the small inventor, one would have to support either the removal of maintenance fees, proposed in S. 2504, i.e., support present law, or institute low maintenance fees limited to reasonable administrative cost.

The above percentages seem to establish at least a prima facie case that the present United States patent system encourages individual inventors more than the patent systems of the United Kingdom and West Germany. This appears to be a positive attribute of our current patent system and one that should not be destroyed.

(c) Argument that Maintenance Fees Are Needed To Make the Patent Office Self-Supporting May Be Moot:

Many of the inventive community argue that the taxes received by the Federal government from royalties paid to inventors and the taxes received by the government from the private sale of products covered by patents far outweigh the cost of running the Patent Office, now estimated at about $77 million per year.

Indeed, it was said as early as in the 1950's that the tax on the royalties which are received in the electronics industry alone, through patent license and other arrangements, just about equals the cost of operation of the Patent Office. Therefore, the Patent Office could be looked upon as already a self-sustaining operation in the sense that it earns for the government taxes which already exceed the cost of operating the Patent Office.

We may want to ask ourselves, how can we expect our nation to compete successfully with others while bearing such a handicap? Do we have enough of a handicap now with our present inflation and with our present real decline in productivity and negative import/export balance, or do we want more?

Solution:

The solution to this precedent-creating handicap is either to eliminate the maintenance fees entirely or to reduce them considerably so that they would be more in line with that of our competitors.

Since there was such strong support in Subcommittee for the maintenance fees as provided in S. 2504, it appeared hopeless to delete them entirely. Therefore, I introduced an amendment at the Subcommittee level to reduce the maintenance fees by one-third, bringing the maintenance fees down to a total of $2,000 on the basis that this would have been a reasonable compromise.

Rejected:

This amendment was rejected by a three to one vote, with the Chairman of the Subcommittee, Senator McClellan, abstaining.

Fourth amendment (section 112)

Purpose:

The purpose of my fourth amendment was to make Section 112 reasonable to comply with. As S. 2504 C.P. stands, it makes compliance actually impossible.

Since Section 282(b) (3) makes any "failure to comply with any requirement of Sections 112, 115, 131, or 251" grounds for invalidity of a patent, it is very important that these sections demand only what can reasonably and practically be expected of the American inventor.

Problem:

(a) Tell Everything You Know:

Section 112 of S. 2504 C.P. would command the American inventor to have his patent attorney write down in the patent application everything the inventor knows regarding the invention and everything the inventor knows or contemplates in making or using the invention, and if he misses one fact, his patent will be held invalid under new Section 282(b) (3) mentioned above.

At $50-$75 per hour to the patent attorney who must maintain his offices and staff, this will create another costly burden for the American inventor—one that S. 2504 C. P. makes no provision for escaping—but rather adds woe upon misery by adding to the inventor's cost additional attorney's fees on top of the $3,000 in maintenance fees.

The question is how many American inventors can afford this type of cost, and how many inventions will be lost to the public for good because of the extreme high cost involved in obtaining a "protectable" patent?

Problem:

(b) Predict the Future:

Section 112 also adds a requirement to the law that never existed before, that is probably impossible to comply with, and may substantially change present case law.

Section 112(a) (1) (B) requires the applicant to predict at the time he files his application, all the novel or unexpected properties or results which he will use in the future to defend his patent, if his patent is ever attacked for invalidity. This of course is impossible in many cases, especially in chemical cases, where commercial success is almost never achieved or known until after the patent application is filed, since F.D.A. clearances may not be granted till several years after the application has been filed.

The full benefit which the disclosed invention bestows on the public may not be appreciated until long after the application has been filed.

Section 112(a) (1) (B) requires an applicant to look into a crystal ball, and if his crystal ball is cloudy, he runs the risk of later losing his patent. How can anyone reasonably be expected to predict the future 17 to 19 years hence, in this era of technological and scientific explosion?

Many patents are attacked on the basis of being "obvious" under Section 103 of 35 U.S.C., whereby the owner of the patent must prove that his invention was "unobvious". One of the ways of proving "unobviousness" has always been commercial success, yet this most often occurs long after the application has been filed, e.g., F.D.A. clearances obtained, or after other events.

As stated by the United States Supreme Court in Graham v. John Deere Co. of Kansas City, 148 U.S.P.Q. at page 467:

"Such secondary consideration as commercial success, long felt but unsolved needs, failure of others, etc., might be utilized to give light to the circumstances surrounding the origin of the subject matter sought to be patented. As indicia of obviousness or nonobviousness, these inquiries may have relevancy." (emphasis supplied)

If however, as in many cases, commercial success is never known until years after the application is filed, it is impossible for that applicant to know at the time he files his application whether his invention will be a commercial success. Yet under Section 112 as now written in S. 2504 C.P., he must know his commercial success at the time he files his application for patent or forever be barred from using that test later to show that his invention was non-obvious.

A further case in point is In re Meng and Driessen, 181 U.S.P.Q., where at page 96 it states:

"Under Section 103, evidence of what occurred after the invention may have a probative value equal to or greater than evidence of what went before. Though indicated as 'secondary' considerations in Graham, such factors are second only in time." (emphasis supplied)

Section 112 of S. 2504 C. P. would prevent an inventor from using any "evidence of what occurred after the invention" since he is unaware of such evidence at the time he files his application for patent.

(c) Superfluous and Irrelevant Information required could double the cost to the individual inventor and to the Patent Office.

Superfluous, irrelevant, and unnecessary extra information requirements under Section 112 create at least a "doubling" cost effect to both the small inventor as well as to the Patent Office.

The inventor's cost is doubled since he still has to pay his patent attorney $50-$75 an hour to write down the extraneous information in the application, i.e., all the inventor knows regarding the invention and all the inventor knows or contemplates regarding the use of his invention.

The cost to the Patent Office and to the American taxpayers is doubled since it will take Patent Office personnel at least twice as long to read and digest a patent application which must at least be twice as long to comply with the bill, i.e., the application must not only include everything that is pertinent and relevant, it must also include everything the inventor knows regardless of its relevancy, or be rejected later as an invalid patent under Section 282(b) (3). Thus on discovery, a party or even the government under Section 298, could find some fact, relevant or not—significant or not—and argue that the applicant did not tell all.

(d) Britain and Italy have complained about Section 112.

I am informed by the Department of State that Britain and Italy have complained to the United States regarding the impossible-to-comply-with disclosure provision of S. 2504, especially Section 112.

Under the Patent Cooperation Treaty, ratified by Congress in 1972, they have to comply with United States Patent Law in order for the United States to give them credit and protection for their inventions in our country. However, as now written, S. 2504 C. P. provisions are onerous, burdensome, and unfair to applicants—from the United States and from abroad.

(e) Other possibly irrelevant requirements:

S. 2504 C.P. requires a patent applicant to state what is known "to be conventional or old" to the inventor, to any person he assigns his invention, and to the applicant. Any failure to do so or any inadvertent omission would result in loss of the patent issued to the inventor.

What is "old" can be entirely irrelevant. What we should be concerned with is the closest prior art, i.e., publications, patent, journal articles, etc., to determine if the invention is "obvious" under Title 35, Section 103 of present law, or is statutorily barred under Section 102.

Also, regarding "best mode or modes"—there can only be one best mode—one best means by which an invention is supposed to be used. Two or more best modes are self-contradictory, yet S. 2504 C.P. requires the inventor to describe all the "best mode or modes", or subsequently lose his patent.

At the other end of the spectrum, an invention such as a new herbicide, may be applied to crops in more than one hundred different ways, i.e., in slurries, in water-soluble sprays, in powders, in pellets, in water-insoluble sprays, and all at varying strengths.

S. 2504 C.P. would cause the inventor to list ad nauseam all the hundreds of different ways with varying strengths and different ways that a herbicide could be applied in order to assure that a court would not subsequently cancel his patent because he unintentionally forgot one mode that some court might interpret as a "best mode".

The unnecessary extra time this would take the inventor and the patent attorney to describe these multitudinous means would tremendously increase the attorney's fees to the inventor and thus discourage the American inventor from disclosing his invention to the public.

Solution:

(a) Require all that is relevant and material to the facts at issue

All that is necessary to determine whether there is a valid invention is that there be a reasonable disclosure by the inventor which is relevant and material, the substance of which he is presently aware regarding his invention—not everything he knows regarding his invention or about the art to which it relates.

As a witness on a witness stand is never required to tell "all he knows" in a trial, but rather only what is relevant and material to the facts at issue, a patent application should only be required to contain that information which is relevant and material to determine whether or not there is present a valid invention—no more and no less.

The test is two-fold: (1) Is the basic concept disclosed, and (2) Is it so documented that those in the art will be able to carry out that concept?

(b) Language in Section 112 appears to be an easy method of guaranteeing all relevant and material information is disclosed by asking for everything, and of course will be extremely costly to the individual inventor, the Patent Office, and the taxpayer.

It is of course possible to guarantee, at an unjustified high cost, that everything relevant and material will be disclosed by asking the inventor to tell everything he knows concerning the invention.

This may be the easy way out in terms of drafting an airtight provision, but it does not take into account or consider the limited budget of most individual inventors, the high cost of patent attorneys, the waste of the taxpayer's money to support the extra personnel needed at the Patent Office to read all the extraneous material, nor the disincentive created in the inventor toward ever disclosing his invention to the public in the first place. As S. 2504 C. P. is written, one must of course tell everything he knows or lose his patent once he receives it, since it will be held invalid for non-compliance with Section 282(b) (3), above mentioned.

(c) Pertinent parts of my amendments to Section 112 are as follows:

(Underlined words are added and bracketed words are deleted.) (a) (1) The specification shall at the time the application is filed contain a written description—

(A) of the subject matter sought to be patented; and

(B) of the novel or unexpected superior properties or results [and the old but superior properties or results] on which the applicant will rely in seeking [or upholding] the grant of the patent.

(c) (1) With respect to the particular invention, [The specification shall state what is known to the inventor, any person to whom he is under any obligation to assign the application, and applicant, or any of them, to be conventional or old.] [It] it shall conclude with one or more, etc.

Rejected:

This amendment was rejected by a 3 to 2 vote, and again I was pleased to have the support of the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Patents, Trademarks and Copyrights, Senator McClellan.

Fifth amendment (section 115)

Purpose:

The purpose of this amendment was to remove the impossible-to-comply-with requirements presently in Section 115 which would breed invalidity rather than create more valid patents.

Problem:

As presently worded in S. 2504 C. P., Section 115 also breeds invalid patents since it requires the inventor, the applicant, the prospective assignee, the attorney, and the agent to tell, "all . . . they . . . know" and additionally anything "tending to" or "that would tend . . . to" affect the issuance of the patent. If he or any of the above persons accidentally misses anything, his patent will subsequently be held invalid under Section 282(b) (3).

December 19, 1974

Even if perfect compliance is honestly sought by all parties mentioned above, Section 15 might still be impossible to meet since it is tantamount to having to prove a negative. An infringer should always be able to find the "one fact" that a person forgot to include or overlooked.

Solution:

What should be required is that the inventor and everyone in privity with him tell everything that is relevant and material to the facts to issue, i.e., anything which they are aware of after reasonable inquiry that would directly concern the denial or granting of the patent to the inventor.

Amendment:

The major change I proposed in Subcommittee to Section 115 (a) (3) was as follows (new words italic and deleted words bracketed):

(3) The duty of disclosure includes an obligation to furnish the Office with information becoming available on reasonable inquiry which [tending to] contradicts any representation made to the Office on behalf of the applicant and which [or that would tend] adversely [to] affects the issuance of the patent to the applicant, whether or not there exists further information which would in fact overcome the effect of the undisclosed information.

Rejected:

This amendment was rejected by a 3 to 2 vote in the Subcommittee, and again I was pleased to have the affirmative support of the Chairman of the Subcommittee of Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights, Senator McClellan.

Sixth amendment (section 135)

Problem:

Section 135 on Opposition Proceedings is: (a) too expensive, (b) open to costly delays, and (c) allows for the harassment of smaller companies by larger ones.

As presently worded in S. 2504 C.P., Section 135, would defeat at least three of the six goals established by the President's Commission on the Patent System, i.e. (a) to shorten the period of pendency of a patent application from filing to final disposition by the Patent Office, (b) to reduce the expense of obtaining and litigating a patent, and (c) to make U.S. patent practice more compatible with that of other major countries, wherever consistent with the objectives of the U.S. patent system.

(a) Section 135 would broaden period of pendency:

Rather than shorten the period of pendency of a patent application, Section 135 would lengthen the period of pendency. As an eminent patent attorney, Mr. Tom Arnold, stated in his April 25, 1974 speech before the New Jersey Patent Law Association when presented with the Jefferson Medal for contribution to the Patent System.

"... unlimited oppositions commonly cause a delay in obtaining issue of patents which delays patent enforcement for years and reduces the patent owner's value."

The patent, if any is obtained, will have cost inordinate expense to the patent applicant.

Testimony at a recent American Patent Law Association meeting by Mr. Andy Kline of the law firm of Synnesvedt & Lechner of Philadelphia, indicated that in just one of his patent applications in Japan, he encountered 147 separate oppositions, which of course required him to write 147 answering briefs—considerably increasing both the pendency time and lawyer's fees involved.

(b) Section 135 would increase rather than reduce the expense of obtaining a patent.

As Mr. Tom Arnold said in his acceptance speech mentioned above, "Oppositions can raise the costs of getting a patent beyond the level of an applicant's financial capacity for commitment..." (Emphasis supplied)

What would the fee be at $50-$75 an hour to write 147 answering briefs to 147 separate oppositions on a complicated invention in which the specification alone might be 50 pages long, and the application might contain 100 separate claims, as some chemical applications do? Would an independent inventor be able to borrow enough money just to pay his patent attorney to answer each opposition at a time that he had no patent yet, and therefore no collateral to use to borrow money from a bank or other financial institution? Many opposition proceedings run over $10,000, and the small inventor with no collateral, i.e., no patent yet, will possibly just give up.

Mr. Arnold indicated one German company reportedly opposes all German applications for patents in its art, and reports that by doing so, 50% of its would-be competitors immediately give up by dropping their patent application—and therefore are effectively eliminated from competition. They are destroyed by the high cost of obtaining a patent before they ever start.

(c) U.S. Patent practice may be made more incompatible rather than more compatible, with other countries under Section 135

I am advised that under the new European Patent System mentioned in the recent June 24, 1974, Wall Street Journal article entitled, "Multinational Firms Find Patent Battles Consume Time, Money", that because of the harsh experiences with opposition proceedings in terms of costly delays, harassment of smaller companies by larger ones, and the great expense involved, the new European Patent System has eliminated the opposition proceedings.

While our pendency for patents now normally takes 18 to 24 months without opposition proceedings, France's pendency for patents with their opposition proceedings takes 72 months according to this Wall Street Journal article.

Under the new European Patent Convention, instead of filing for patents in a dozen different countries, they need only file at an office set up in Munich, which will then grant or deny a "European patent" good throughout most of Europe—through the new European Patent System Convention that has just decided to eliminate opposition proceedings.

(d) The brand-new-in-the-law opposition proceedings now proposed under Section 135 invite competitors to live off the fruits of another's labor, toil, and inventive genius.

Under Section 135 of S. 2504, an inventor's competitor need only to sit back and wait until there is full disclosure of the invention (this occurs when an application for patent is published as allowable under the bill) and oppose under Section 135 (c) (1) delaying the issuance of the patent for possibly many years.

In the meantime, the competitor can copy, market, and stockpile the new invention to his heart's content—the only risk being that IF and WHEN the patent ever issues, the competitor may be liable, upon a successful lawsuit by the inventor, for "reasonable royalties".

On the other hand, if the opposition proceeding is post-patent issuance, as in S. 2930 Buckley (and under the Fong Amendment), then there is the power of injunction.

Without this Power of Injunction, the competitor is considerably less likely to invest time, money, and energy to build a plant to conduct research in that field—but rather would just sit back and copy the inventions of others—robbing them of the benefits of their creativity.

Clearly, if the only risk of copying another's invention is a reasonable royalty, then Section 135 as now in the bill would amount to an unfair, unconsented-to compulsory license of the invention, at least until a patent has been issued—if ever.

Amendment:

Because of the strong support in the Subcommittee for opposition proceedings my amendment did not eliminate opposition proceedings, but tried to make them more reasonable, less time consuming, and fair to the inventor.

My amendment would have still allowed the public to present all the prior art to the Patent Office and later, after the issuance of the patent, would have allowed an adversary proceeding.

This would allow all relevant and material information to be brought to the attention of the Patent Office with the least delay, but still would give adequate protection to the inventor while his patent undergoes opposition proceedings.

Under my amendment to section 135, the opposition proceeding would still be allowed, but it would be allowed after the patent has issued, so that the inventor could protect his invention while his patent undergoes opposition proceedings. Since one cannot get an injunction to protect his invention without a patent, it is imperative that a patent be issued first so that an inventor can protect himself during the long drawn-out opposition proceedings. Otherwise an outsider could stockpile the invention and flood the market tying up all prospective customers before the inventor ever gets his patent.

Thus, my amendment would still have provided the public with an opportunity to get all the "prior art" to the Patent Office, and still allowed the expensive and long-drawn-out, adversary proceeding—but only after the inventor was protected, i.e., after he had received his patent. This would have achieved two main goals: (1) Making more valid patents, but at a lower cost, and (2) protecting the inventor, by getting the patent to him sooner so that he could protect his invention while the opposition proceedings were being deliberated. Disclosure of the claimed invention would occur at the same time as in the Administration bill.

Rejected:

While this amendment was rejected on a 3 to 2 vote again at the Subcommittee level, I was again pleased to have the support of the Chairman of the Subcommittee of Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights, Senator McClellan.

Conclusion:

Because almost no one outside the government appears to support S. 2504 C.P. as a whole, because, as I have shown, S. 2504 C.P. has serious and fundamental defects, and because the patent system is crucial to the future technological and economic progress of the Nation, Congress should not act on such wide-ranging "reform" legislation without the benefit of thorough public hearings.

Hearings on such a complex measure would help the Judiciary Committee and the Senate avoid pitfalls which I believe are inherent in S. 2504 C.P.

I have listed some of the provisions which directly defeat the six goals of the President's Commission of the Patent System, but there are many others. Many other provisions make questionable changes in both procedural as well as substantive aspects of the Patent Law.

Among sections, not herein dealt with specifically, but which need attention notably are 28, 102, 123 (which overrules Sears v. Gottschalk, 178 U.S.P.Q. 33, decided April 26, 1973), 131, 132, 182(d), 191-194, 271(e), 298, (299 withdrawn), and 301.

Without belaboring the issues further, I believe hearings would assist the full Judiciary Committee in remedying the serious substantive and procedural defects of S. 2504 C.P.

I have no doubt of the sincere and honest efforts of the legislative staff and other members of the Subcommittee. But as the complexity and ramifications of the provisions of this bill are profound, I believe that more input from the experts in the field, including the leading members of the professional societies in the inventive community must be obtained.

December 19, 1974

As S. 2504 C.P. now stands:

(1) It will not accomplish its stated objectives, i.e., the six goals of the President's Commission on the Patent System;

(2) It will add great cost and insurmountable burdens to the American inventor.

(3) It will invalidate many patents on expensively developed and important inventions;

(4) It will burden both the applicant and the Patent Office with chores and expense beyond what we can reasonably expect government and research and development budgets to carry without great loss of incentive to the advancement of science and the useful arts;

(5) It will frustrate small companies to the advantage of larger established ones who through the new opposition proceedings will have the greatest legal tool for harassment ever created to effectively eliminate their competition.

(6) It will exacerbate the problem of inflation which is now our Nation's number one problem.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF SENATOR JOHN L. MCCLELLAN

I voted to report S. 2504 from the Patents Subcommittee to permit the full Committee on the Judiciary to determine its disposition. This legislation introduces some long-needed and beneficial innovations in the American Patent System. It also introduces concepts and procedures which fail to promote the progress of the useful arts. In my judgment our patent system will be weakened by the enactment of patchwork legislation, which is confused in purpose, and deficient in execution.

This is not routine legislation. The Committee is dealing with an institution as old as the nation itself—an institution in which no basic statutory changes have been made since the Act of 1836.

S. 2504 was introduced on October 1, 1973—many of its important provisions were not contained in predecessor patent revision bills. The Administration urged the Subcommittee to immediately report the bill, as introduced. I met with the Secretary of Commerce and informed him that I could not agree to his request since I believed the legislation should be reviewed by all interested parties. I then learned that the judicial provisions of the legislation were drafted without any consultation with the Federal courts, or coordination with the Commission on Revision of the Federal Court Appellate System, which is considering the entire subject of patent appellate litigation.

Although the legislation has international implications, it appears that the Department of State likewise did not participate in its preparation. As Chairman of the Subcommittee I have received representations on behalf of several foreign governments that certain sections of S. 2504 are contrary to the objectives of the Patent Cooperation Treaty and of our international obligations. On December 20, 1973, I requested an early report from the Secretary of State. I have yet to receive a reply.

It is customary and useful that programs for the general revision or codification of titles of the United States Code to be undertaken with the assistance of the Nation's leading experts, including the appropriate segments of the organized bar. The bar was not consulted in the drafting of S. 2504. Some may regard this exclusion as a recommendation for this legislation. A somewhat different judgment is likely to be expressed in the future by those inventors, small business firms, and other patent owners who will suffer from the extensive and protracted litigation that is certain to result from this prolix legislation. Months after its introduction there still remains considerable uncertainty as to the intent of various sections of this legislation with respect to existing case law.

The Administration initially estimated that S. 2504 would add 5 million dollars a year to the budget of the Patent Office. It was apparent to me from a review of its provisions that this price tag was grossly inaccurate. The Secretary of Commerce subsequently furnished a detailed report on the budgetary and personnel implications of S. 2504. The Secretary advised that the initial additional costs would range from 20 to 31 million dollars and require from 1045 to 1565 additional Patent Office personnel. The bill as reported by the Subcommittee adds additional functions and costs to the Patent Office operation.

A particular concern to me has been the exclusion of the Commissioner of Patents from an effective role in the formulation and development of this legislation. On February 5, 1974, during the hearing on the nomination of Curtis Marshall Dann to be Commissioner of Patents, I requested the nominee to review S. 2504 and to give the Subcommittee the benefit of his independent counsel on this legislation. Mr. Dann assured me that he would. When it appeared subsequently that he was being prevented from doing so, I urged the President to authorize the Commissioner "to directly make known to the Subcommittee his comments on S. 2501 and proposed modifications". This request was denied.

I recognize that effective management of the executive branch is facilitated by a uniform Administration position on pending legislation. It is significant, however, that the Administration has permitted another agency of the executive branch to maintain a position on patent legislation independent and contrary to that of the Administration. Yet the Congress is being denied the counsel of the Commissioner of Patents on the most comprehensive patent legislation in almost 150 years.

When the Subcommittee commenced the markup of this legislation, it was presented with hastily drafted substitutes for many of the important sections of the bill. It now appears that yet another revision is to be proposed in the full Committee. This is not sound legislative procedure for the consideration of one of the most intricate titles of the United States Code.

S. 2504 fails to promote—in fact, will retard—the objectives of patent law revision set forth in the Report of the President's Commission on the Patent System. It discards beneficial provisions of predecessor bills and substitutes new concepts that will create endless uncertainty and delay. It will encourage greater reliance on trade secrets to the detriment of the public. It will significantly add to the costs of those who utilize the patent system, and to those of the Government, while conferring limited benefits.

By Mr. KENNEDY:

S. 4260. A bill to require Federal departments and agencies to act in accord with a national policy of free and open competition in the economy. Referred to the Committee on Government Operations.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill which reaffirms by specific measures our general and often stated faith in competition as the guiding economic policy of the United States. This policy, which is as old as the Republic, has often been threatened in the past by the evils of private monopoly on the one hand or Government cartelization on the other. It is threatened by both today. We have witnessed these threats to our national economic policy as our largest industries have become increasingly concentrated and as our Federal regulatory agencies have sanctioned—intentionally and inadvertently—anti-competitive practices among the oligopolies and monopolies they are chartered to regulate in the public interest.

Mr. President, I do not suggest that the unsatisfactory condition of our economy will be remedied by any one act of the Congress. But the series of actions which will be needed to remedy our present situation should surely proceed from a coherent vision of our free enterprise system—a vision we have not yet abandoned. The bill I am introducing today aims in part to demonstrate that our will is equal to our vision: It is designed to check and reverse governmental processes which promote anticompetitive practices in direct or implicit contradiction of our fundamental national economic policy.

It is obvious, Mr. President, that an unexecuted policy is no policy at all. This bill requires that our policy favoring competition be, in fact, executed wherever that policy should apply. The importance of enacting this principle into law becomes evident as soon as we realize that our commitment to competition is not merely a matter of intellectual cant: it is a matter which affects, daily and deeply, the lives of all Americans.

In theory, an effective competitive system provides the consumer with the widest range and highest quality of goods at the lowest prices; more efficient operation of business; higher productivity; the information consumers need to make intelligent purchasing choices; and an improved allocation of resources. There can be little doubt that the times require that we do all we can to insure that this theory is translated into fact by appropriate measures of Government.

The consequences of not doing so literally involve costs the public cannot afford. Monopolization and anticompetitive practices tend to produce business inefficiency and exploitation of the public, higher prices, fewer market choices, lower quality goods and services—in short, all of the evils which arise when the benefits of free enterprise are denied by unchecked aggregation of market power and restrained competition.

While our devotion to competition as the best means of advancing our economic well being at the least cost to our personal liberties is a paramount doctrine to which most can subscribe, it has certainly not been a dogma blindly applied. In some exceptional industry settings—the so-called natural monopolies—the Government has chosen regulated monopoly as a more appropriate economic form for protection of the public interest. But even where that has been our choice, as in the case of the regulated utilities, or in transportation or in electronic communication, the intent has never been to suspend completely the operation of competition as a goad to better economic performance.

In theory at least, air and motor and rail carriers, for example, will compete among and between each other. Even in these settings, therefore, the burden must be on those who would adopt governmental measures inhibiting or lessening competition to demonstrate how such a departure from a policy of competition will in each case actually serve the larger public interest. In essence—and this is reflected in the bill I am introducing today, Mr. President—this means that to the extent possible the spirit of the antitrust laws now enforced by the Federal Trade Commission and the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice must become a substantive part of the administrative law of every agency whose mandate is related to the economic well-being of our country.

Promoters of our Nation's economic goals must be the direct and explicit concern of every department and agency of Government whose actions can substantially advance or retard achievement of these goals. Every segment of our National Government directly concerned with economic matters must become expert in advancing our national economic policy of full and vigorous competition.

Our regulatory agencies were originally created by Congress to protect the public against anticompetitive practices and to combat a growing trend toward monopoly in certain key industries. The ICC, which subsequently served as a model for Government regulation, was set up in 1887 to curb the monopolistic practices in the railroad industry, at that time dominated by a handful of giant firms. The so-called independent regulatory commissions followed the ICC into existence.

In addition to restraining anticompetitive tendencies within the industry regulated, Federal economic regulation has several additional goals, often the fostering of one or another economic sector.

Because there would arise some occasions where these additional goals could not be achieved consistent with strict observance of antitrust principles, agencies were considered to be the embodiment of the public interest and given the power to exempt regulated actions from the normal operation of the antitrust laws. The public—and the Justice Department—were often thereby foreclosed from challenging agency approved activities on antitrust grounds.

It is now apparent that the regulatory agencies, by and large, are not fulfilling many of their responsibilities consistent with our basic belief in the advantages of a competitive economy. Some have spoken of the decline and fall of the public utility concept of regulation. Regulatory agencies are often found stifling or restricting competition rather than fostering it. Rather than serving the public, regulatory agencies have become the servants of the industries they are supposed to regulate—they often appear to be far more concerned about the profits of the corporations they regulate than the pocketbooks of the consumers they are supposed to serve.

The conclusions reached by two Presidential task forces and by the President's Council on Economic Advisers are instructive here. The task force appointed by President Johnson reported in 1968 that:

In the regulated sector of the economy, the bias of policy and its enforcement is overwhelmingly against competition.

The task force that advised President Nixon concluded a year later that:

The regulatory commissions are largely out of control. . . . The commissions should have the merits of competition impressed upon them. Competition is not a matter of all or none, and the fact of regulation should not exclude competition.

And the 1970 report of the Council of Economic Advisers found that:

Regulation has too often resulted in protection of the status quo. . . . Change of any kind becomes hard to justify and even harder to allow when some affected group can claim immediate harm, whereas the potential beneficiaries are widely diffused and usually not represented. Yet innovation and adaptation are the dynamics of economic progress.

There is no clear safeguard against these dangers, but more reliance on economic incentives and market mechanisms in regulated industries would be a step forward. . . . Industries have been more progressive when the agencies have endeavored to confine regulation to a necessary minimum and have otherwise fostered competition.

Several courts have documented the increasing tendency of the regulatory agencies to ignore or minimize competitive considerations. For example, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit observed in Thill Securities Corp. v. New York Stock Exchange, 433 F. 2d 264, 273 (7th Cir. 1970), that:

The history of the United States regulatory agencies in general seems usually to record an ever growing absence of the spirit required for vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws. Rather, it seems to demonstrate that shortly following the establishment of administrative procedures the regulatory agency usually becomes dominated by the industry which it was created to regulate.

Congressional hearings have also focused on numerous instances where regulatory agencies have encouraged anticompetitive practices rather than curbing them. The Subcommittee on Administrative Practice and Procedure, which I chair, recently held 2 days of hearings on the Civil Aeronautics Board's issuance of guidelines for increased international charter air fares. The CAB first authorized closed discussions among charter airline carriers to agree on a minimum rate floor. Testimony at our hearings established that the Department of Transportation actively encouraged these efforts. These discussions, and the attempted agreement, would plainly have been illegal under the antitrust laws had the CAB not approved them ahead of time.

Several witnesses testified that the CAB's action was taken without regard to the needs of the traveling public, or of the smaller supplemental air carriers, but solely to bolster the revenue of some of the larger air carriers. The Justice Department's Antitrust Division testified that it regarded the CAB action as seriously inflationary and contrary to the policies of the antitrust laws. Yet this agency action is typical of CAB rulings over the years, which have suppressed almost all forms of competition in the airline industry without bringing to the consumer improved service or lower prices. Similar examples abound in the case of the motor carrier, railroad, and power industries.

The Federal Communications Commission has also shown itself unresponsive to the problems inherent in media concentration. Although the courts have clearly recognized the obligation of the FCC to consider the antitrust implications of granting broadcast license renewals, the Commission refuses both to apply antitrust standards in individual renewal proceedings and to complete action in rulemaking proceedings designed to set general criteria for consideration of cross- and multiple-ownership at renewal time.

Nor is the problem confined to the independent regulatory commissions. Banking, agriculture, and housing agencies should be included. One example where one of the old line executive departments has acted to promote concentration rather than dissipate it involves the procedures followed by the Department of the Interior in leasing Federal lands for oil and gas development. These procedures not only allow, but favor, joint ventures by large oil companies and negotiated rather than competitive bidding. Tracts too large for small companies to develop, and bonus money requirements too great for any but the largest companies, combine to shut smaller companies out of competing for these important leases and to further entrench control of our valuable national resources in the hands of a few giants.

The list is endless. Federal departments and agencies, armed with powers to control entry into markets, regulate rates, restrict business practices, and lease public resources or allocate private ones, have operated to stifle rather than to promote competition.

Regulation has also often served to subsidize the inefficient. It has forced the consumer to pay billions of dollars more annually than he should. It has exacerbated the energy crisis and our present shortage of vital raw materials. Indeed, it has been a major "hidden cost" behind our inflation—a cost perhaps less visible or less tangible than others, but a cost which must be eliminated nonetheless.

Most recently, President Ford has recognized the need for Federal agencies to consider the effect of their actions on prices and has proposed that officials compile an "inflationary impact statement" to accompany major Federal actions affecting inflation. All too frequently the inflationary impact of Federal action arises not directly, but indirectly, through the restriction or reduction of competitive forces in the marketplace which ordinarily tend to keep prices down. As Deputy Assistant Attorney General Keith Clearwaters observed last month:

Unfortunately, too often regulation as administered by an agency may be designed to shelter and protect individual firms from competition. This may make for better profit margins of individual firms in the short run, but those profit margins come out of the consumer's pocketbook. I am certain that if the individual man on the street knew what was going on here in Washington almost every day in the halls of the regulatory agencies to stop new entry into the market, to encourage price-fixing cartels of carriers which drive up rates, to slow down or completely impede new technology developed by one carrier so that others more sluggish in the industry remain comfortable, that man in the street would be demanding legislative change now.

Just what form should that legislative change take? Certainly in many areas we will want to eliminate regulation completely. The motor carrier industry might be a candidate here. In other areas we will want to maintain some regulatory framework but to repeal antitrust exemptions that accompany regulatory actions. The international airline cartel could be a case in point. Where we do decide to leave regulation intact—with or without specific reference to antitrust immunities—we should insure that agencies are sensitive and responsive to antitrust principles as they carry out their statutory functions. That is the purpose, Mr. President, of the bill I am introducing today.

My bill does not represent the first effort to effectuate a national policy throughout all agency decisionmaking activities, despite the centralization of authority to enforce that policy in specific agencies.

Both the Civil Rights Division and the Equal Opportunity Commission are charged with enforcing Federal laws relating to equal employment opportunities, but nonetheless Executive Order 11246 imposes on all executive agencies the responsibility to carry out basic equal employment policies.

Likewise, even with the Environmental Protection Agency and the Council on Environment Quality, the President through Executive order and then Congress through the National Environmental Policy Act required all agencies to take the environmental impact of their proposed activities into consideration and to file a formal public statement thereon prior to taking action.

Similarly with energy conservation and inflation, although specific Federal agencies have specific mandates to fulfill, it has been made clear that all Federal agencies and officials must act in concert with a national goal of energy conservation and a common effort to fight inflation.

My bill elevates competition to these same heights as a pervasive national policy objective. First, the bill firmly states the national objectives to foster free and open competition in the national economy, to limit and prevent anticompetitive practices and concentrated markets, and to require Government agencies to give substantial weight to the impact of their actions on competition in the marketplace.

The bill would require the head of each Federal department and agency to file a detailed competitive impact statement with any proposal for legislation and for any other major action significantly affecting competition in the fields of energy, natural resources, communications, and computers, finance, transportation, agriculture, ferrous and non-ferrous metals, and chemicals and drugs.

The competitive impact statement would include an assessment of any adverse impact on competition of the proposed action, possible alternatives to the proposed action, and the economic, environmental, or social justification for the action.

Prior to issuing any such statement, the department or agency would be authorized to solicit the views of the Department of Justice on the competitive impact of the proposed action. Copies of the statement and of any comments or views would be required to be made available to the public.

The bill would also direct each department and agency to adopt and utilize in-house expertise in antitrust matters and to develop procedures to insure that the promotion of competition will be fully considered and evaluated in decisionmaking.

The bill would require all Federal departments and agencies to administer and interpret laws, policies and regulations to serve the policies of the bill. It would also prohibit any department or agency from taking any action that would violate the policies of the antitrust laws or of the bill in key industries unless such action was necessary to accomplish a statutory objective or requirement of that department or agency.

The Federal Trade Commission would be required to issue an annual report on the state of competition in the major economic markets enumerated in the bill. And finally, the bill would provide for Federal court jurisdiction over claims arising out of any report or statement which was made or which was required under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. President, I fully recognize that the legislation I am proposing today may be viewed by some as encumbering an already complex and slow administrative process with another layer of paperwork. That was the basic criticism of the National Environmental Policy Act, and it may be that some agency processes have been slowed by its operation. But just last week the Council on Environmental Quality issued its 1974 annual report, which observes that:

In large part NEPA has succeeded in its objective of incorporating an environmental perspective into the decisionmaking process of Federal agencies.

I for one am not willing to say that we should turn back the clock and be prepared to sacrifice the quality of our environment to administrative efficiency. And I believe that the same principle should obtain for competition.

There may well be alternative approaches to making Government agencies more responsive to the demands of our modern economy for increased, rather than decreased, competition. Perhaps each agency's organic statute should be rewritten, one by one, with a reordering of decisionmaking standards that elevates competition to a higher priority of consideration. Perhaps regulation must be eliminated completely from many sectors of our economy. Perhaps full or partial public ownership in certain cases where "yardstick" regulation would be helpful is the route to take. But for now I am proposing that we inject competition as the driving force in our free enterprise system, wherever regulation has been superimposed.

I hope to solicit reactions and responses to this proposal over the next month, so that next session this legislation might be clarified and refined for reintroduction. I expect to work actively next year as a member of the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly to bring about changes necessary to redirect and intensify our governmental energies toward the objectives of a free and competitive economy.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

S. 3182

At the request of Mr. McCLELLAN, the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) and the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) were added as cosponsors of S. 3182, a bill to prohibit the banning of lead shot for hunting.

S. 4121

At the request of Mr. McCLELLAN, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) was added as a cosponsor of S. 4121, the Rice Act of 1974.

S. 4196

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABOUR-EZZ) and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) were added as cosponsors of S. 4196, a bill to provide public financing of primary and general election campaigns for Senate and House of Representatives.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 448

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS), the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE), the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABOUR-EZZ), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. METZENBAUM), the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 448, relating to further arms control measures.

SENATE RESOLUTION 451

At the request of Mr. HUMPHREY, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 451, a resolution disapproving the proposed deferral of $50 million under section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED FOR PRINTING

STANDBY ENERGY EMERGENCY AUTHORITY—S. 3267

AMENDMENT NO. 2096

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

SENATOR RANDOLPH OFFERS AMENDMENT TO S. 3267 REFLECTING SPECIAL NEEDS OF THE HANDICAPPED FOR GASOLINE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, there are many American citizens who would suffer extraordinary hardships should an end-use rationing system be instituted. These are persons who because of disease, injury, age, congenital malfunction, or other permanent incapacity or disability would be unable without special assistance to use mass transportation systems; in other words, they are handicapped.

December 19, 1974

The average American consumer has the options of driving a car, joining a carpool, riding a bicycle, or using a taxi, a bus, a train, or the subway—or walking. These choices often are not available to a handicapped individual.

Our mass transit systems are usually inaccessible to the disabled due to a need to navigate steps or other architectural barriers. Thus our handicapped citizens are often relegated to the private automobile as the only means of transportation available. In order to get to and from one's job, the market, and medical and other necessary services, a handicapped person must use a private car.

This problem is further compounded when we face the realization that individuals with physical disabilities also must find accessible housing. As a consequence they often are forced to live in areas which may be far from their place of employment or the location of shops. Mr. President, rationing during World War II did not create undue problems for physically disabled persons, partly because of exemption provisions provided for them.

Since then major national programs have been instituted to enable our handicapped citizens to participate more fully in our society by encouraging equal opportunity for education and for employment in all those services which benefit the entire population. As a consequence, they are more reliant than ever before on the private car. Unless the Congress assures special priority is given in gas rationing systems and energy conservation plans employing transportation controls to this segment of our population, we will indeed subject them to an unfair burden and take a step backward.

I am pleased to introduce an amendment to S. 3267 which I believe ameliorates this situation. My amendment does several things: First, it would define the terms "handicapped person" and "eligible person."

Second, it would provide for special consideration for the need of the handicapped and other eligible persons—such as the parent or guardian of a handicapped person—in the event of gas rationing.

Third, it would provide for special arrangements to be made for those who would not personally pick up coupons because of architectural barriers.

Fourth, it would provide that the amount of fuel over and above the total number of gallons allotted to other private users be decided on an individual basis.

Fifth, it would require the Federal Energy Administration to consult with the Veterans' Administration and the Social Security Administration to decide who is eligible or handicapped.

Sixth, it would mandate that all machinery to administer this program be ready to move on the first day a rationing plan takes effect so that no handicapped person or parents of a handicapped person would have to wait for his eligibility status to be approved.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this amendment appear in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 2096

On page 6, between lines 16 and 17, to amend section 102 by inserting the following new subsections:

"(6) The term 'handicapped person' means any individual who, by reason of disease, injury, age, congenital malfunction or other permanent incapacity or disability, is unable without special facilities, planning or design to utilize mass transportation vehicles, facilities and services and who has a substantial, permanent impediment to mobility.

"(7) The term 'eligible person' means any handicapped person (who may or may not have a driver's license) or the parent or guardian of a handicapped person who must transport that person to and from special services."

On page 6, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following new paragraph and renumber paragraphs 102(h) (2) through (6) as paragraphs 102(h) (3) through (7):

"(2) In promulgating the rule under paragraph (1) of this subsection the President shall give priority consideration to the needs of the handicapped and other eligible persons, including the need for special arrangements for handicapped persons who because of architectural barriers would be unable to obtain evidence of their rights under paragraph (1) under standard procedures or arrangements.

"In determining the eligibility of 'handicapped person' and 'eligible person' the President shall consult with the Social Security Administration, the Veterans' Administration, and the Federal Energy Administration: Provided further, That the administrative procedures to meet the needs of the handicapped shall be established in advance of and take effect on the effective date of the rule promulgated pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection."

On page 9, between lines 7 and 8, insert the following new clause and renumber clause 104(a) (1) (B) as clause 104(a) (1) (C):

"(B) In promulgating regulations pursuant to this section the Administrator shall give priority consideration to the needs of handicapped persons."

Section 3 of the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973 (P.L. 93-159) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(8) The term 'handicapped person' means any individual who, by reason of disease, injury, age, congenital malfunction or other permanent incapacity or disability, is unable without special facilities, planning or design to utilize mass transportation vehicles, facilities and services and who has a substantial, permanent impediment to mobility.

"(9) The term 'eligible person' means any handicapped person (who may or may not have a driver's license) or the parent or guardian of a handicapped person who must transport that person to and from special services."

ADDITIONAL COSPONSOR OF AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENTS NOS. 2054 AND 2055

At the request of Mr. HATHAWAY, the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE) was added as a cosponsor of amendments

Nos. 2054 and 2055, proposed to the bill (H.R. 10710), the Trade Reform Act of 1974.

RECESS FOR 15 MINUTES

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess for 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and, at 6:02 p.m., the Senate took a recess for 15 minutes.

The Senate reassembled at 6:17 p.m., when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. McGovern).

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE RESOLUTION 469—THE USE OF THE DANIEL WEBSTER DESK

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 469) to make available to the senior Senator from New Hampshire, during his or her term of office, the use of the desk located in the Senate Chamber commonly referred to as the "Daniel Webster desk."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, for a considerable number of years, whoever was the senior Senator from New Hampshire has occupied the so-called Daniel Webster desk which is before me here. At one time, I think, Senator Bridges took it over, then being the senior Senator. There was some discussion about it, and the Senator from Massachusetts was very gracious and yielded to the Senator from New Hampshire, although Daniel Webster technically represented the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in the Senate.

He was born, reared, and educated in New Hampshire at Phillips Exeter Academy and Dartmouth College, was admitted to the bar and practiced law in New Hampshire, argued the famous Dartmouth College case, came to the House of Representatives from New Hampshire, and then later—in those days membership in either branch of Congress was not a full-time occupation, they being in session 2 or 3 months of the year—he moved his law practice to Boston, and later became a U.S. Senator from Massachusetts.

The Sergeant at Arms was a little reluctant to arbitrarily move this desk across the aisle, because it has a long list of names in the bottom drawer, and quite obviously it has been on this side of the aisle for many years, sometimes in the possession of a Senator from New Hampshire and sometimes of others. But for the last 35 years it has been consistently used by the Senator from New Hampshire. Of course, I am sad over the fact that it may be that New Hampshire will have two Democratic Senators next year, but I think it proper that the desk be occupied by my distinguished colleague from New Hampshire (Mr. McIntyre), who will be the senior Senator after next week.

December 19, 1974

I have cleared this with both the majority and minority leaders, and taken it up with a member of the Rules Committee, and I thought it would be right and proper, in view of the fact that the Sergeant at Arms did not want to take the responsibility of assigning the desk and moving it across the aisle, to have a Senate resolution which could be reviewed at some time in the future if necessary, that would, for coming sessions, unless otherwise ordered, see to it that this desk was used, if he applied for it, by the new senior Senator from New Hampshire, my friend and colleague Senator McIntyre, with whom I have had such a deep personal friendship and worked together so happily, comfortably, and pleasantly for 12 years, should have the desk, and I am particularly anxious that he have it, as I leave the Chamber.

If no one else desires to speak, I ask unanimous consent that, without reference to a committee, the resolution may be immediately voted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That during the Ninety-Fourth Congress and each Congress thereafter, the desk located within the Senate Chamber and commonly referred to as the "Daniel Webster Desk" shall, at the request of the senior Senator from the State of New Hampshire, be assigned to such Senator for use in carrying out his or her Senatorial duties during that Senator's term of office.

CERTAIN BENEFITS TO MEMBERS OF THE COAST GUARD RESERVE

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 2149. I understand this has been cleared on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGovern) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2149) to amend title 10, United States Code, to provide certain benefits to members of the Coast Guard Reserve, and for other purposes, as follows:

Line 3, page 1, strike out "680", and insert: "684".

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MARITIME AUTHORIZATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 13296, and ask for its immediate consideration. I understand this has been cleared on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGovern). The report will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 13296) to authorize appropriations for the fiscal year 1975 for certain maritime programs of the Department of Commerce, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by all the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the Congressional Record of today.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CONFIRMATION OF THE ROCKEFELLER NOMINATION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, it is my understanding having just talked with the Speaker of the House of Representatives, that the House is not expected to complete its vote on the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Rockefeller until about 8:30 p.m. tonight. The swearing-in ceremony will not follow in the Senate, if that is the case, before 10 o'clock tonight, I say for the information of Senators.

RECESS UNTIL 7 P.M.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that other conference reports may be coming in momentarily, and the Senate will act upon them. Meanwhile, I move that the Senate stand in recess for 30 minutes, until the hour of 7 p.m. today.

The motion was agreed to; and at 6:30 p.m. the Senate recessed until 7 p.m., whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. ALLEN).

ORDER OF BUSINESS THIS EVENING

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, we are simply waiting on the other body.

We have been trying to get the conference report papers on some of the measures that have been acted on in conference, and I have reference to measures on which the House is entitled to act first. If the Senate could secure the papers, the Senate could act first. So the Senate is just waiting on the other body to send over conference reports or conference report papers.

The Senate could complete its work tonight and adjourn sine die, if the Senate could secure the papers on certain measures.

I am informed that the President has signed the Nixon tapes measure. I called the White House, and I have been told that the President has signed that measure. So insofar as that measure is concerned, the matter is settled. Tomorrow would have been the 10th day, and the Senate would have remained in session tomorrow on that one item alone. But that item is not keeping the Senate here.

The other body, of course, is debating the nomination of Mr. Rockefeller at this point. The latest word I have had from the Speaker was that the House is not expected to complete its vote on that nomination until about 8:30 p.m. today.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the distinguished leader have any information in reference to the possibility of securing papers relating to certain conference reports, so that he can make a prediction as to whether or not we will have any votes between now and the swearing in of the Vice President?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. It is my intention to move very soon to recess the Senate until 8 o'clock tonight, so that Senators will have an opportunity to have dinner. There will be no votes before 8 o'clock. It is possible that by that time we may have some papers on some conference reports. I understand that we may have a conference report ready to call up soon, but I do not think there will be a rollcall vote on this one.

I spoke to the Speaker early this morning and again this evening with reference to the conference report papers on the trade bill and other measures that are under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the House Ways and Means Committee. I was told that there was not an inclination, as of then, on the part of the House to relinquish those papers. The House is entitled to act first on those measures; but Senator LONG, when he came into the Chamber for the last rollcall vote, said that he would go back to try again. So it is possible that the House would let us have the papers, and the Senate could complete its work. But the latest word I had was that the House was not inclined to let the papers come over.

I wanted Senators to know that we are simply waiting on the other body with respect to conference reports, and that is all that is keeping us here.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE AMENDMENTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on S. 2994, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL). The report will be stated by title. The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2994) a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to assure the development of a national health policy and of effective State health regulatory programs and area health planning programs, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of today).

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am particularly pleased to report that the conferees met and agreed upon what I believe to be an excellent bill. This legislation will authorize the establishment of local and State agencies for the development of comprehensive health plans under national guidelines to be developed by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. This legislation authorizes the creation of health systems agencies, which will encompass the entire United States. In addition, it provides funds for the implementation of plans developed by the agencies, and the continuation of meritorious health development projects currently being funded under existing authorities, such as the regional medical programs. It also provides for continuation of Federal assistance for the construction of outpatient facilities with an emphasis on medically underserved areas and modernization of existing inpatient facilities. The special project grant program is earmarked to assist urban hospitals in meeting life safety and accreditation standards.

The amount of $1.13 billion is authorized for a 3-year period. Although this authorization is somewhat higher than the Senate bill which went into conference, I believe the additional expenditures are justified. They are due primarily to increased authority for continuation of the construction program and the creation of five centers for health planning, to be in operation by June 1976. In addition, an experimental State-operated program of health service rate regulation under Federal guidelines is included in this legislation.

The most compelling reason for our immediate action on S. 2994 rests with the strong potential for enactment of some form of national health insurance in the near future. In all of the hearings that have been held on national health insurance and through the volumes of material that have been written on the subject, considerable stress has been given to benefit packages and the financial mechanisms for supporting such a program. Such a focus has been appropriate, since they are major elements in any program. However, a major outgrowth of this stress has been an increasing concern for physical and human resources. Specifically, will there be enough resources, appropriate to the needs, and distributed in a manner so as to effectively meet the demand that will be generated through a national health insurance program?

This concern leads into the question of planning and the need for an effective planning base if we are to successfully implement national health insurance. Up to this point, adequate attention has not been given to this very real question. However, we can change that situation today within the context of this bill. Quite frankly, S. 2994 gives us the capacity to implement a comprehensive planning base throughout the United States. Even more important, though, is that this can be done with a time interval that provides an opportunity to plan for national health insurance.

What exactly does this bill do as far as the planning for national health insurance is concerned?

First of all, it will support the creation of a system of regional health planning agencies throughout the country. This is contrasted with the existing situation under the comprehensive health planning program where only 75 percent of the population is covered by an areawide health planning agency. The areas currently not covered are largely rural, but under S. 2994 they would now have the opportunity to participate in regional health planning.

Second, the bill would provide the financial resources necessary to employ both the number and types of staff necessary to tackle the planning issues posed by national health insurance. Under S. 2994 regional health planning agencies have a minimum professional staff of 10 compared with the average of 4 under existing comprehensive health planning program.

Third, S. 2994 targets the planning activities on the personal service needs of the population and the manpower and facilities necessary to meet the needs.

Finally, the bill fosters the creation of regional decisionmaking bodies encompassing providers, consumers, educators, payors, and local elected officials who in conjunction with appropriately educated professional staff can make planning and resource allocation recommendations which will go a long way toward insuring an effective implementation of a national health insurance program on a local level.

There is a second important reason for the Senate to move positively on this bill today. The concepts expressed in S. 2994 have been under discussion for a number of years. We are aware that the administration over 1½ years ago proposed the termination of regional medical programs and Hill-Burton. The Congress responded by calling for a simple 1-year extension of the existing programs, with the expressed intent of studying the programs under consideration. I believe that this was a sound move on the part of the Congress. While this action permitted us to carry out this essential review, it also had an adverse effect on the programs themselves. The 1-year extension was a signal to many that the Congress was going to make some significant changes in the near future. This lack of stability made it difficult for many programs to maintain and/or hire the high-quality personnel necessary to carry out program responsibilities. In other cases, it was hard to get communities to develop quality proposals which were responsive to community needs since the future support of such efforts was clearly uncertain.

The study the Congress authorized has been completed. We have heard from many people and have incorporated their ideas into our own analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of the existing programs. The end result is a bill which significantly enhances our ability to deal with planning, implementation, and construction in a coordinated and effective fashion.

The time for action is now and there is no reason to delay the implementation of the concepts expressed in S. 2994. To do so would mean that the Senate would be avoiding its responsibility and obligation to insure that programs are enacted which will benefit the total population. Furthermore, nonaction by the Senate will only perpetuate the uncertainty and instability that now faces 56 State comprehensive health planning agencies, 218 areawide comprehensive health planning agencies, 53 regional medical programs, 56 State Hill-Burton agencies, 17 experimental health services delivery systems, and their respective constituencies.

A third rationale for immediate action is linked to the authority for development activities. As is well known, the regional medical programs have served as a vehicle for the development of a number of initiatives both on State and regional level. While many of the activities were consistent with community needs, a large number of the projects were research projects tied to the interests of medical school faculty. This bill gives us the capacity to benefit from the strengths of the regional medical programs experience by supporting developmental projects which are responsive to the priorities set forth in a regional agency's short-term priorities plan. More importantly though this provision will allow communities to positively attack resource deficiencies that they all face in some form. Of even greater significance though is that the authority gives real meaning and substance to the planning that will be taking place. In many parts of the country, under the existing comprehensive health planning program, planning agencies have been frustrated by their inability to get their planning priorities implemented in a viable format. There has been no mandated link between the planning under comprehensive health planning and the development under regional medical programs. S. 2994 rectifies this very condition.

Furthermore, if we think back to the earlier discussion about the ties between national health insurance and planning and resource needs, we see the real promise this provision holds.

Another reason for an immediate decision on this bill rests on the question of need for facilities and services. For a number of years this country has wrestled with the problem of how to get facilities and services into areas where they are needed. To a large extent, we have been successful, as witnessed by the Hill-Burton program. Increasingly, though, our successes have been turning into failures as we have seen beds and services added in communities where there was already an adequate supply. Various estimates have placed the number of excess beds currently operating or projected to be operating in the near future throughout the United States as between 67,000 and 110,000. Estimates of the projected unnecessary cost of supporting those beds based on an average cost of $20,000 range up to $2 billion annually.

Many States have taken steps to rectify this condition by passing certificate of need laws. To date, 24 States have passed such legislation which requires providers to secure certificates of approval prior to carrying out modernization or new construction projects.

The Congress supported the actions of the 24 States through the Social Security Amendments of 1972. Specifically, the Congress, by adding section 1122 to the Social Security Act, legislatively expressed the conviction that public funds through medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs should not be used to support unnecessary capital expenditures. The Congress made this a voluntary program and to date the chief executives of 40 States and territories have signed agreements with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to implement this program.

Those States participating in the section 1122 program have been doing so for about a year and in that period about 2,000 actions have been completed with a denial rate of about 5 percent. These disapprovals are estimated to have a dollar value of $200 million.

Today, every State, except for Texas and West Virginia, has either a certificate of need or a section 1122 program. However, there is general consensus that State certificate of need programs are the basic component in a program to control unnecessary capital expenditures. This bill gives strength and substance to this feeling by requiring all States to enact a certificate of need program. In turn, States will be provided with the financial resources to operate such a program. Financial support is also available for those States that want to participate in the section 1122 program.

Another feature of this part of the bill deals with the necessity of existing facilities and services. To date, all of our attention is addressed to new construction and little time is spent on duplicative facilities and services that operate at low occupancies.

When one considers the $2 billion cost of maintaining excess hospital beds in a 1-year period, the cost to the public over a 10- to 20- to 30-year period becomes overwhelming. This bill would permit planning agencies to review existing facilities and services in the context of total community needs.

Mr. President, I believe the passage of this legislation is a major accomplishment by the Congress in the health field, and I strongly urge Senate acceptance of the conference committee report. This legislation will, I believe, come to be recognized as a milestone in a preparation of the health care system in the United States for national health insurance, which I believe will be passed by the 94th Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report and the accompanying statement of managers be printed in the RECORD at this time.

Mr. President, this measure was passed overwhelmingly in the Senate probably 5 to 6 weeks ago. I can report that it has an authorization which actually will be lower than the appropriated funds for this year. It deals with the planning agencies in the respective States. It has the strong support of Members on both sides of the aisle. It is a measure which I think commends itself to trying to insure that we will get efficient and effective programing in the future.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. President, today the Senate is considering the conference committee report on S. 2994, the National Health Planning and Development and Health Facilities Assistance Act of 1974. This is a complex bill, which I believe will be of great assistance to our national health planning effort, and which deserves the support of this body.

I am particularly interested in the process of health planning, because my own State of Rhode Island has long been a national leader in developing and testing out the components of systematic health planning.

Of particular interest in this legislation before us today is a section, which developed as a direct result of testimony on behalf of my State. Rhode Island is the only State in the Nation, to the best of my knowledge, that has no county or municipal health institutions or departments, but rather which provides for the planning and regulation of all health activities on a statewide basis, directed by the State unified administrative structure. For example, our State health department is responsible for conducting certificate of need review for all of the health facilities and programs in the State. It also has statewide roles in prospective budgeting, reviewing mandatory long- and short-range plans from all health facilities, conducting health care data analysis, environmental planning and regulation, and licensure of health facilities and health manpower training resources. All of these activities are carried out on a statewide basis, and each institution or facility in the State is accountable to the State health department.

I wish to stress today that health planning in Rhode Island is accomplished with the assistance and full participation of several private nonprofit corporations.

There is no question in my mind that Rhode Island's progress to this point could not have been achieved without the innovative and active participation in the planning and development process by these corporations, and, equally, that there remains a real role for private nonprofit corporations in the future of Rhode Island's health planning system development.

Three private entities currently provide the bulk of assistance and participation in our health planning process. First among these is the Health Planning Council, Inc. HPC is an important and integral part of the current Rhode Island health planning network. It embraces both health service providers, notably the State's hospitals and private health insurance system, and health care consumers. Its performance in the past, and its close advisory relationship with the State's administrations since it was formed, have provided the basis for its affirmative role in health planning in Rhode Island today. Others are RIHSEC, the Rhode Island Health Sciences Education Council, which conducts studies and makes recommendations to the State on health manpower training courses and facilities, and SEARCH, Rhode Island Health Services Research, Inc., which was the first statewide health data collection and analysis agency in the Nation, and which provides the State's health decisionmakers with a great deal of their data collection and analysis support today.

Section 1435 of this legislation provides for the continuation of innovative and effective health planning in my State. It requires any State which has no county or municipal public health institutions, and which has been maintaining a health planning system which substantially complies with the purposes of this bill, to be exempted from the organizational regulations of this legislation, if that State's Governor so requests. In this way, the legislation recognizes the efforts being conducted in Rhode Island and provides that such a laudable effort shall not be swept away by blanket Federal regulations, nor superseded by a federally imposed mandatory parallel planning system. Further, and this was my clear intent when I offered the language which has been incorporated into section 1435, this legislation recognizes the outstanding efforts being conducted by the private, nonprofit corporations engaged in health planning in Rhode Island, and its intention is to encourage the continued participation in, and development of, the joint venture in health planning which is a Rhode Island tradition. Of course, I expect that Rhode Island will continue to innovate in this field. I have always believed that Rhode Island could become a model health care State, owing to its compactness and numerically small population. An integral part of being a model is the maintenance of a tolerance for innovation, and I am sure that this legislation, since it clears the way for continued joint participation by existing public and private entities, will allow and encourage the efforts to make Rhode Island a model health services State.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Is this a bill that has anything to do with the Hill-Burton program?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is correct, yes.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator explain what it does?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, I will.

The formula for the Hill-Burton program in the Senate-passed bill divided the moneys which were authorized. That was a total of $125 million annually, to be divided by allocating half to project grants and half to formula grants. Also, the formula provides for a minimum that would have been made available to any of the States. It would have provided a minimum of $1 million.

December 19, 1974

If half of the $125 million were allocated to projects and half to formula grants, $50 million of that would be allocated to the States to fulfill the minimum allocation. $62.5 million would be available for formula grants. That would leave only $12.5 million which would have been applied under a formula grant. This was not a significant figure, but nonetheless that is the amount.

The Senate bill would have provided a project grant program that would have been administered by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, with primary emphasis on modernization and outpatient facilities.

Mr. CURTIS. What does that mean from the standpoint of the practical operation of the Hill-Burton program?

Mr. KENNEDY. I am not quite sure I understand the question.

Mr. CURTIS. Does it make any basic changes in the operation of the Hill-Burton program?

Mr. KENNEDY. It means that we will be using the resources and funding that will be appropriated under this measure to build needed health facilities in areas where there is the need, in rural communities as well as in urban areas. But we will not perpetuate the existing situation. At the present time, there are between 70 and 100,000 hospital beds in this country which are unnecessary and require the American consumer to spend approximately $2 billion a year to keep in operation.

It is because of this factor that the Administration attempted to work with us and with the House in the development of a formula which would meet our requirements and our responsibilities to rural communities, but would target available funds toward modernization with emphasis upon outpatient clinics and upon ambulatory care, given the rather limited amounts.

I indicate to my colleague that there is a heavy stress, based upon information that has been made available to us, that this is the way most effectively to carry on the tradition of Hill-Burton, which targeted the resources into building hospitals in many rural communities. Now it is necessary to build outpatient clinics and ambulatory services, and to modernize some of those facilities. That is what those particular resources are meant to do.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Jonathan Steinberg be granted the privilege of the floor for the remainder of the evening.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, did the Senator say during the remainder of the evening?

Mr. CRANSTON. I said during the remainder of the evening, because I want to be sure he is on the floor at any time I want to bring up the arthritis bill.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The Senator is not speaking of the swearing-in ceremony?

Mr. CRANSTON. No.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I have no objection.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE AMENDMENTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2994) to amend the Public Health Service Act to assure the development of a national health policy and of effective State health regulatory programs and area health planning programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, is there any way in which we can ascertain whether we can get this measure passed quickly? I had understood there was no objection to it on either side.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, the conference report was signed by all the conferees on the part of both the House and the Senate, and I had no understanding that there were any problems. But perhaps some Senator has given notice since.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I was unaware that this conference report was about to be called up. I was trying to get some information, but was unable to do so at this hour of the night.

This is a measure that I believe a great many of the hospital authorities in my State feel is adverse to them, and they have certain objections to it.

Therefore, if I am overruled and it is brought up, I shall oppose the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I understand that we are dealing with health manpower; is that correct?

Mr. JAVITS. No, it is not. This is the health planning bill.

Mr. DOMINICK. This is planning?

Mr. JAVITS. That is right, the hospitals and planning bill. The manpower bill is in conference, and as a matter of fact they are waiting for us right now to continue the conference.

This involves the problems of the public hospitals, modernization and so on.

Mr. KENNEDY. This is the Comprehensive Health Planning Act.

Mr. DOMINICK. The health planning bill, as I understand it, included in the conference report, apparently gives some problems to Senator CURTIS and others. I frankly do not know what is going on.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I state frankly that while I would much prefer to vote on this tomorrow, I certainly have no desire to delay the matter tomorrow with any extended debate. But I am in need of some information that is not obtainable tonight, and I would very much prefer to see this matter go over.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, as far as I am concerned, I am not interested in going over until tomorrow for anything. I may be forced to because of matters that are beyond the control of the Senate. We are waiting on some conference reports from the House of Representatives.

The Senator is within his rights to say what he has said, but I am not in favor of its going over until tomorrow. If the Senator wants a rollcall vote on that, he is certainly entitled to ask for it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, may I ask the acting majority leader whether or not this conference report has been acted upon by the House of Representatives?

Mr. KENNEDY. No, it has not. They expect to get to it this evening, as a matter of fact.

The Senate passed this measure probably 7 weeks ago. The House passed it about 6 days ago. So we have had Senate action on it.

We have waited for the House to respond. We have worked out what is a perfectly reasonable compromise, an adjustment between the House and Senate positions. All the conferees on both sides signed it, and it took us probably 5 or 6 hours. There were some important differences, but those were worked out and adjusted in accordance with the usual rules.

The bill passed overwhelmingly in the Senate, and we are prepared, at least I am, to work with our colleagues, to respond to questions, or to go through the report. I can elaborate in more detail on the differences and the things that were adjusted or worked out, if that is the desire of my colleagues. We are glad to proceed in any way Senators would like.

I am not sure how the Senator from Nebraska voted on it the first time. I believe he may have voted in opposition to it. But nonetheless, we are prepared to move ahead with it this evening. It is an important bill. The administration recognizes its importance, and has worked with the committee in working out some of our concerns. It is a needed bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Go ahead. I got my information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, to clarify one or two technical matters in the bill, I would like to address a question to the chairman, the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY). Under section 1512 (b) (3) of the report, a Health Systems Agency, which is a public regional planning body or unit of general local government, shall in addition to its governing body, have a separate governing body for health planning. It is my understanding that the governing body for health planning of such a public body or unit of local government would be appointed and subject to removal by the governing body of the Health Systems Agency?

December 19, 1974

Mr. KENNEDY. That is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. It is my understanding that the governing body for health planning would be subject to the laws and regulations of the Health Systems Agency.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is also correct.

Mr. JAVITS. Furthermore, am I correct in my understanding that in carrying out the responsibilities prescribed in subparagraph b(3) (B) of section 1512, the governing body for health planning would be subject to the rules and rulings of the Health Systems Agency and that the health system plans developed pursuant to section 1513 and annual implementation plan would be submitted to the Health Systems Agency for approval?

Mr. KENNEDY. This is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I sat in on a considerable amount of this conference. One of the big things dealt with in the conference which was a matter of very considerable moment to public hospitals, which are really municipal hospitals, was the question of modernization, which is terribly urgent.

The conferees restricted very considerably what was permitted to be done, so that it now permits only modernization which results from imminent hazards in respect of the structure which is to be modernized.

Even with that limitation, a limitation of 22 percent was imposed on moneys appropriated under that particular part of the bill which could be devoted to this purpose. This was again another limitation on a limitation, making it even more difficult for this very essential activity to take place.

Mr. President, anyone who has a big city in his State—and we all do—and has had any personal opportunity to visit the municipal or public hospitals must be as depressed as I am about their condition. Really, there is, on the whole, a very, very serious deficiency in the whole hospital system of the country.

While we must be content with the provisions made by this bill, I would hope very much that the respective committees concerned in the exercise of their legislative oversight would look into the condition of the municipal hospitals and so-called public hospitals, and if it is found that this provision contained in the conference report is inadequate—and I deeply feel it very likely to be inadequate, considering its restrictions—that an effort will be made here to help with it on the Federal level.

I did wish to call to the attention of the Senate the very serious conditions which face those of us who represent States with big cities in this particular regard, and the very sharply limited effort to health which is contained in this bill.

I do not denigrate it or express any feeling that it should be rejected, because of that. There is a lot in this bill that is very sound and very good. But it simply presents a serious problem to which we will need to address ourselves, and to which we do not address ourselves adequately in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report (putting the question).

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL ARTHRITIS ACT OF 1974

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 2854.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2854) to amend the Public Health Service Act to expand the authority of the National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Diseases in order to advance a national attack on arthritis as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "National Arthritis Act of 1974".

FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The Congress makes the following findings—

(1) Arthritis and related musculoskeletal diseases constitute major health problems in the United States in that they afflict more than twenty million Americans and are the greatest single cause of chronic pain and disability.

(2) The complications of arthritis lead to many other serious health problems and other severe physical disabilities in persons of all ages with the disease, particularly children and adolescents.

(3) The annual cost of arthritis to the national economy in 1970, from medical care expenses and lost wages, was $9,200,000,000, and number of workdays lost in that year totaled over 14,500,000.

(4) Uncontrolled arthritis significantly decreases the quality of life and has a major negative economic, social, and psychological impact on the families of its victims and society generally.

(5) Athletic and other types of joint injuries involving trauma can lead to arthritis.

(6) The development of advanced methods of diagnosis and treatment of arthritis and quality trained health professionals in arthritis deserves the highest national priority.

(7) There is a critical shortage of medical facilities and properly trained health professionals and allied health professionals in the United States for arthritis research, prevention, treatment, care, and rehabilitation programs.

(8) The citizens of the United States should have a full understanding of the nature of the human, social, and economic impact of arthritis and should be encouraged to seek early diagnosis and treatment to prevent or mitigate physical disability resulting from arthritis.

(9) There is great potential for making major advances against arthritis in the National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Diseases, in concert with other Institutes of the National Institutes of Health.

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON ARTHRITIS; ARTHRITIS PLAN

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary"), after consulting with the Director of the National Institutes of Health, shall, within sixty days of the date of the enactment of this section, establish a National Commission on Arthritis and Related Musculoskeletal Diseases (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Commission").

(b) The Commission shall be composed of eighteen members as follows:

(1) Six members appointed by the Secretary who are scientists, physicians, or other health professionals not in the employment of the Federal Government, who represent the various specialties and disciplines involving arthritis and related musculoskeletal diseases (hereinafter in this section collectively referred to as "arthritis"), and of whom at least two are practicing clinical rheumatologists, at least one is an orthopedic surgeon, and at least one is an allied health professional.

(2) Four members appointed by the Secretary from the general public, of whom at least two suffer from arthritis.

(3) One member appointed by the Secretary, from members of the National Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Disease Advisory Council, whose primary interest is in the field of rheumatology.

(4) The Director of the National Institutes of Health or his designee, the Director of the National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Diseases or his designee, the Directors, or their designees, of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases and the National Institute of General Medical Science, the Associate Director for Arthritis and Related Musculoskeletal Diseases of such Institute, and the chief medical officer of the Veterans' Administration and the Secretary of Defense or their designees, each of whom shall serve as ex officio, nonvoting members.

(c) The members of the Commission shall select a chairman from among their own number. The Commission shall first meet on a date specified by the Secretary, not later than 30 days after the Commission is established, and thereafter shall meet at the call of the Chairman of the Commission (but not less often than three times).

(d) The Director of the National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Diseases shall—

(1) designate a member of the staff of such Institute to act as Executive Secretary of the Commission, and

(2) provide the Commission with such full-time professional and clerical staff, such information, and the services of such consultants as may be necessary to assist it in carrying out effectively its function under this section.

(e) Members of the Commission who are officers or employees of the Federal Government shall serve as members of the Commission without compensation in addition to that received in their regular public employment. Members of the Commission who are not officers or employees of the Federal Government shall each receive the daily equivalent of the rate in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule for each day (including traveltime) they are engaged in the performance of their duties as members of the Commission. All members, while so serving away from their homes or regular places of business, may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as such expenses are authorized by section 5703, title 5, United States Code, for persons in the Government service employed intermittently.

(f) The Commission shall survey Federal, State, and local health programs and activities relating to arthritis and assess the adequacy, technical soundness, and coordination of such programs and activities. All Federal departments and agencies administering health programs and activities relating to arthritis shall provide such cooperation and assistance relating to such programs and activities as is reasonably necessary for the Commission to make such survey and assessment.

(g) The Commission shall formulate a long-range plan (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Arthritis Plan") with specific recommendations for the use and organization of national resources to combat arthritis. The Arthritis Plan shall be based on a survey investigating the incidence and prevalence of arthritis and its economic and social consequences, and on an evaluation of scientific information respecting and the national resources capable of dealing with arthritis. The Arthritis Plan shall include a comprehensive program for the National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Diseases (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Institute") and plans for Federal, State, and local programs, which program and programs shall, as appropriate, provide for—

(1) investigation into the epidemiology, etiology, and prevention and control of arthritis, including the social, environmental, behavioral, nutritional, and biological control of arthritis;

(2) studies and research into the basic biological processes and mechanisms involved with arthritis, including abnormalities of the immune, musculoskeletal, cardiovascular, gastrointestinal, urogenital, pulmonary, and nervous systems, the skin, and the eyes;

(3) research into the development, trial and evaluation of techniques, orthopedic and other surgical procedures, and drugs (including drugs intended for use by children) used in the diagnosis, early detection, treatment, prevention, and control of arthritis;

(4) programs that will apply scientific and technological methodologies and processes involving biological, physical, and engineering sciences to deal with all facets of arthritis, including traumatic arthritis;

(5) programs for the conduct and direction of field studies, large-scale testing, evaluation, and demonstration of preventive, diagnostic, therapeutic, rehabilitative, and control approaches to arthritis, including studies of the effectiveness and use of home care programs, mobile care units, community rehabilitation facilities, and other appropriate community public health and social services;

(6) studies of the feasibility of, and possible benefits accruing from, the organization and training of teams of health and allied health professionals in the treatment and rehabilitation of individuals who suffer from arthritis;

(7) programs to evaluate available resources for the rehabilitation of individuals who suffer from arthritis;

(8) programs to develop new and improved methods of screening and referral for arthritis, and particularly for the early detection of arthritis;

(9) programs to establish standards and criteria for measurement of the severity and rehabilitative potential of disabilities resulting from arthritis;

(10) programs to develop a uniform descriptive vocabulary for use in basic and clinical research and a standardized clinical patient data set for arthritis to standardize collection, storage, and retrieval of research and treatment data in order to facilitate collaborative and comparative studies of large patient populations;

(11) programs to establish a system for the collection, analysis, and dissemination of data useful in the screening, prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of arthritis, including the establishment of a national data storage bank to collect, catalog, and store, and facilitate retrieval and dissemination of information as to the practical application of research and other activities pertaining to arthritis;

(12) programs for the education (including continuing education programs and development of new techniques and curricula) of scientists, bioengineers, physicians engaged in general practice, the practice of family medicine, or other primary care specialties, surgeons, including orthopedic surgeons, and other health and allied health professionals and educators in the fields and specialties requisite to screening, early detection, diagnosis, treatment, and prevention of arthritis and rehabilitation of individuals who suffer from arthritis;

(13) programs for public education and counseling relating to arthritis, including public information campaigns on current developments in diagnostic and treatment procedures and programs to discourage the promotion and use of unapproved and ineffective diagnostic, preventive, treatment, and control methods and unapproved and ineffective drugs and devices;

(14) a program for the acceleration of international cooperation in and exchange of knowledge on research, screening, early detection, diagnosis, treatment, prevention, and control of arthritis; and

(15) coordination of the research programs relevant to arthritis of other Institutes of the National Institutes of Health, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and other Federal and non-Federal entities.

(h) The Commission may hold such hearings, take such testimony, and sit at such time and places as it deems advisable.

(1) The Commission shall prepare for each of the Institutes of the National Institutes of Health whose activities are to be affected by the Arthritis Plan estimates of necessary expenditures to carry out each such Institute's part of the comprehensive program included in the Plan. The estimates shall be prepared for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and for each of the next two fiscal years.

(2) Within five days after the Budget is transmitted by the President to Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and for each of the next two fiscal years, the Secretary shall transmit to the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate, the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare of the Senate, and the Committee on Commerce and Health of the United States House of Representatives an estimate of the amounts requested for arthritis research by each of the Institutes for which estimates were prepared under paragraph (1) and a comparison of such amounts with such estimates.

(j) (1) The Commission shall publish and transmit directly to the Congress (without prior administrative approval or review by the Office of Management and Budget or any other Federal department or agency) the Arthritis Plan within two hundred and ten days after the date on which funds are first appropriated for the Commission.

(2) The Commission shall cease to exist on the thirtieth day following the date of the submission of the Arthritis Plan pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(k) There are authorized to be appropriated, without fiscal year limitation, to carry out the purposes of this section $2,000,000.

ARTHRITIS COORDINATING COMMITTEE, DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS, AND COMPREHENSIVE ARTHRITIS CENTERS

SEC. 4. Part D of title IV of the Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"ARTHRITIS COORDINATING COMMITTEE

"SEC. 437. (a) In order to improve coordination of all activities in the National Institutes of Health, in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and in other departments and agencies of the Federal Government relating to Federal health programs and activities relating to arthritis, the Secretary shall establish an Arthritis Coordinating Committee to be composed of representatives of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (including the Food and Drug Administration) and of the Veterans' Administration, the Department of Defense, and other Federal departments and agencies involved in research, health services, or rehabilitation programs affecting arthritis. This committee shall include the Directors (or their designated representatives) of each of the Institutes of the National Institutes of Health involved in arthritis related research. The Committee shall be chaired by the Associate Director established pursuant to section 434(e) and shall prepare a report not later than sixty days after the end of each fiscal year as possible, for the Secretary detailing the work of the committee in seeking to improve coordination of departmental and interdepartmental activities relating to arthritis during the preceding fiscal year. Such report shall include—

"(1) a description of the work of the committee in coordinating the research activities of the National Institutes of Health relating to arthritis during the preceding year, and

"(2) a description of the work of the committee in promoting the coordination of Federal health programs and activities relating to arthritis to assure the adequacy of such programs and to provide for the adequate coordination of such programs and activities.

"(b) The Committee shall meet at the call of the chairman, but not less often than four times a year.

"ARTHRITIS SCREENING, DETECTION, PREVENTION, AND REFERRAL DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS; AND DATA BANK

"SEC. 438. (a) The Secretary, acting through the Assistant Secretary for Health, may make grants to public and nonprofit entities to establish and support projects for the development and demonstration of methods for arthritis, screening, detection, prevention, and referral, and for the dissemination of these methods to health and allied health professions. Activities under such projects shall be coordinated with (1) Federal, State local, and regional health agencies, (2) centers assisted under section 439, and (3) the data bank under subsection (c).

"(b) Projects under this section shall include programs which—

"(1) emphasize the development and demonstration of new and improved methods of screening and early detection, referral, and diagnosis of individuals with a risk of developing arthritis, asymptomatic arthritis, or symptomatic arthritis;

"(2) emphasize the development and demonstration of new and improved methods for patient referral from local hospitals and physicians to appropriate centers for early diagnosis and treatment;

"(3) emphasize the development and demonstration of new and improved methods of standardizing patient data and recordkeeping; and

"(4) emphasize the development and demonstration of new and improved methods of dissemination of knowledge about the projects and methods referred to in the preceding paragraphs of this subsection to health and allied health professionals.

December 19, 1974

"(c) (1) As soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this section the Secretary, through the Assistant Secretary for Health, shall establish the Arthritis Screening and Detection Data Bank for the collection, storage, analysis, retrieval, and dissemination of data useful in screening, prevention, and early detection involving patient populations with asymptomatic and symptomatic types of arthritis, including where possible, data involving general populations for the purpose of detection of individuals with a risk of developing arthritis.

"(2) The Secretary shall provide for standardization of patient data and recordkeeping for the collection, storage, analysis, retrieval, and dissemination of such data in cooperation with projects under this section and centers assisted under section 439, and other persons engaged in arthritis programs.

"(d) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $2,000,000 for fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $3,000,000 for fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $4,000,000 for fiscal year ending June 30, 1977.

"COMPREHENSIVE ARTHRITIS CENTERS

"SEC. 439. (a) The Secretary, acting through the Assistant Secretary for Health may, after consultation with the National Advisory Council established under section 434(a) and consistent with the Arthritis Plan developed pursuant to the National Arthritis Act of 1974, provide for the development, modernization, and operation (including staffing and other operating costs such as the costs of patient care required for research) of centers for arthritis research, screening, detection, diagnosis, prevention, control, and treatment, for education related to arthritis, and for rehabilitation of individuals who suffer from arthritis. For purposes of this section, the term "modernization" means the alteration, remodeling, improvement, expansion, and repair of existing buildings and the provision of equipment for such buildings to the extent necessary to make them suitable for use as centers described in the preceding sentence.

"(b) Each center assisted under this section shall—

"(1) (A) use the facilities of a single institution or a consortium of cooperating institutions, and (B) meet such qualifications as may be prescribed by the Secretary; and

"(2) conduct—

"(A) basic and clinical research into the cause, diagnosis, early detection, prevention, control, and treatment of arthritis, including research into implantable biomaterials and biomechanical and other orthopedic procedures and in the development of other diagnostic and treatment methods;

"(B) training programs for physicians and other health and allied professionals in current methods of diagnosis, screening and early detection, prevention, control, and treatment of arthritis;

"(C) information and continuing education programs for physicians and other health and allied health professionals who provide care for patients with arthritis; and

"(D) programs for the dissemination of information—

"(i) on the importance of early detection of arthritis, of seeking prompt treatment, and of following an appropriate regimen; and

"(ii) to discourage the promotion and use of unapproved and ineffective diagnostic, preventive, treatment, and control methods and unapproved and ineffective drugs and devices.

"(c) Each center assisted under this section may conduct programs to—

"(1) develop new and improved methods of screening and early detection, referral, and diagnosis of individuals with a risk of developing arthritis, asymptomatic arthritis, or symptomatic arthritis;

"(2) disseminate the results of research, screening, and other activities, and develop means of standardizing patient data and recordkeeping; and

"(3) develop community consultative services to facilitate the referral of patients to centers for treatment.

"(e) The Secretary shall, insofar as practicable, provide for an equitable geographical distribution of centers assisted under this section. The Secretary shall give appropriate consideration to the need for centers especially suited to meeting the needs of children affected by arthritis.

"(f) The Secretary shall evaluate on an annual basis the activities of centers receiving support under this section and shall report to the appropriate committees of Congress the results of his evaluations not later than four months after the end of each fiscal year.

"(g) No center may receive more than three grants under this section.

"(h) For purposes of this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $11,000,000 for fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, $13,000,000 for fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and $15,000,000 for fiscal year ending June 30, 1977. Not less than 20 per centum of the funds appropriated for each fiscal year under this shall be used for the purposes of establishing new centers."

ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR, ANNUAL REPORT, RESEARCH FUNDING, ADVISORY COUNCIL

SEC. 5. (a) Section 434 of the Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(e) There is established within the Institute the position of Associate Director for Arthritis and Related Musculoskeletal Diseases (hereinafter in this part referred to as the "Associate Director"), who shall report directly to the Director of such Institute and who, under the supervision of the Director of such Institute, shall be responsible for programs regarding arthritis and related musculoskeletal diseases (hereinafter in this part collectively referred to as "arthritis") within such Institute.

"(f) The Director of the Institute shall, as soon as practicable, but not later than sixty days, after the end of each fiscal year, prepare, in consultation with the National Advisory Council, and submit to the President and to the Congress a report. Such report shall include (1) a proposal for the Institute's activities under the Arthritis Plan formulated under the National Arthritis Act of 1974 and activities under other provisions of law during the next five years, with an estimate for such additional staff positions and appropriations as may be required to pursue such activities, and (2) a program evaluation section, wherein the activities and accomplishments of the Institute during the preceding fiscal year shall be measured against the Director's proposal for that year for activities under the Arthritis Plan."

"(b) Section 431 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(c) Of the sums appropriated for any fiscal year under this Act for the National Institutes of Health, not less than $500,000 shall be obligated for basic and clinical orthopedic research conducted within the National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Diseases which relates to the methods of preventing, controlling and treating arthritis and related musculoskeletal diseases, including research in implantable biomaterials and biomechanical and other orthopedic procedures and research in the development of new and improved orthopedic treatment methods."

(c) Section 434(b) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Advisory Council shall review applications made to the Director for grants for research projects related to arthritis and related musculoskeletal diseases and shall recommend to the Director for approval those applications and contracts which the Council determines will best carry out the purposes of this part. The Advisory Council shall also review and evaluate the arthritis programs under this part and shall recommend to the Director such changes in the administration of such programs as it determines are necessary."

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am going to yield to the distinguished Senator from California who has been the sponsor, prime sponsor, of this legislation, and has been tireless in his pursuit of the objectives of this bill, in seeing not only that the hearings were held, and who chaired the hearings, but he has played an extremely important role in seeing to its successful conclusion.

This reaches an issue which is a health hazard to millions of Americans. It is of prime concern to senior citizens and to their children, and all those who care about good and decent health and who have seen the problems, the tragedy, of those afflicted with arthritis.

I think all Americans who are so interested, owe a very great debt of gratitude to the distinguished Senator from California.

NATIONAL ARTHRITIS ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts very much for his wonderful cooperation on this measure. Without his help, this measure would not have gone through the Senate and would not now be back for final passage—I am deeply grateful to him for his cooperation and his leadership.

I believe that virtually every Senator on the floor is a cosponsor of this measure. We had 76 sponsors in all in the Senate.

Mr. President, I believe the Senate should accept S. 2854, the National Arthritis Act, with the House amendment. However, there are a number of clarifying and perfecting amendments, and three amendments of a more substantive nature, which I believe are essential to insure that congressional intent is clear and to insure that the programs authorized by the legislation can be administered effectively. I do not wish to delay enactment of this measure and, for that reason, I am not at this time offering them to S. 2854 as passed by the House. Instead, I will offer them in a concurrent resolution which I hope the Senate adopts today. I have assurances from Members in the House that they will make every effort to take up the concurrent resolution before we adjourn and pass it so that the National Arthritis Act when enacted, will reflect these changes.

Mr. President, this matter of the concurrent resolution has been cleared on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. President, I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that I be recognized in order to submit and call up this concurrent resolution immediately after the Senate concurs in the House amendment to S. 2854.

December 19, 1974

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GENERAL PURPOSE OF THE NATIONAL ARTHRITIS ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, the bill before us today offers a means of developing a concerted attack against a disease which is, unfortunately, too familiar to too many of us. It is estimated that some 50 million Americans have some form of arthritis. It is known that 20 million Americans suffer from arthritis severe enough that they seek a physician's help.

Arthritis afflicts all ages and all income levels—although it hits hardest those with low income. It also strikes women twice as frequently as men. Over one-third of retired persons, and over 10 percent of those working suffer from arthritis.

But arthritis also takes its toll among the very young. Some quarter of a million children suffer from juvenile rheumatoid arthritis, the most devastating form of arthritis.

Mr. President, despite the prevalence of this disease, it is little understood. We do not now have the capability to cure it, nor do we know how to prevent it. This is because we do not know what causes it.

The toll of arthritis in human suffering and pain is great. In economic terms the cost to the Nation in medical bills and lost wages is estimated at $9.2 billion.

The proportions of the impact of arthritis on the Nation's health, social, and economic programs are sufficient to require a planned strategy to counter this disease.

S. 2854 presents a means of developing this strategy.

Mr. President, I would like to re-emphasize my total agreement with the statement made by Congressman PAUL ROGERS, chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Health and the Environment of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce yesterday when the National Arthritis Act was adopted in the House, in which he pointed out that the programs authorized by S. 2854 are in addition to and supplementary to programs currently being carried on under the authorities of the Public Health Service Act.

The programs and authorization levels proposed by S. 2854 are new programs and new appropriations authorizations requiring additional Federal financial support and are not intended to replace or reduce the current arthritis programs carried on in HEW under section 301, or under title IV, part D, or under other authorities of the Public Health Service Act. The programs proposed by this bill are intended to supplement the existing HEW programs in NIH. It is necessary to continue our existing arthritis program and to carry out these new programs at their authorization levels. Otherwise, we cannot expect to effectively combat arthritis.

The original arthritis bill I introduced in the Senate with Senator Javits and Senator Williams included an appropriations authorization of a total of $75.5 million over a 3-year period, and the original bill introduced in the House called for a total of over $80 million for the attack on arthritis over a 3-year period. The bill as passed by the House and currently before the Senate reduced this amount to $50 million over a 3-year period in an effort to limit expenditures, consistent with congressional desire to keep the budget within reasonable bounds. I believe if the amounts authorized in S. 2854 are appropriated we can have an effective program. I will be recommending to the Appropriations Committee that these amounts be appropriated in the appropriate fiscal year 1975 supplemental appropriations act and in the appropriations acts for both succeeding fiscal years.

The special needs of children who suffer from arthritis was vividly brought to the attention of the committee members in both Houses. To emphasize Congressional concern with the devastating effects of arthritis on children the bill directs the secretary to give appropriate consideration to the need for centers especially suited to meeting the needs of children affected by arthritis. In addition, the arthritis plan developed by the Commission must provide for research into drugs intended for use by children.

The House has added a new provision with which I fully concur which requires the establishment of an intramural orthopedic program within the National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Diseases. This is vitally important to the 13 million persons afflicted with osteoarthritis and the 5 million persons crippled by rheumatoid arthritis, since orthopedic procedures are now considered as one of the best means of treatment being developed by current day research.

Presently, the institute has no orthopedic program to provide leadership in this area.

This situation will be corrected by this provision.

DISCUSSION—LONG-RANGE ARTHRITIS PLAN

Mr. President, S. 2854 provides for the establishment of a Commission to develop a long-range plan to combat arthritis and makes certain minor organizational refinements to the administration of HEW programs in order to place appropriate emphasis on research in arthritis and to insure that there is coordination among all programs related to arthritis so that each can benefit from the breakthroughs of the other.

A report developed 2 years ago by a prestigious group of rheumatologists, orthopedic surgeons, and other leaders in the medical profession, developed a list of major research goals in the study of arthritis and related diseases.

These goals were:

Determination of whether a viral agent is the cause of arthritis and, if so, its identification;

Clarification of the involvement of the immune system in the development of rheumatoid arthritis;

Identification of the mechanisms of inflammation, the early manifestation of most forms of arthritis;

Improvement of techniques for replacement of hips and other joints; and Statistical surveys of arthritis incidence.

Achievement of these goals would help us find the causes and the cures of arthritis, Mr. President.

Mr. President, in addition, another major target of research is effective treatment of arthritis. Because there is no successful form of treatment, many arthritis sufferers become victims of false cures, quack remedies, and exploitation by the unscrupulous.

EFFORTS TO PREVENT QUACK ARTHRITIS CURES

The bill would require the establishment of regular public information programs to disseminate information on the status of diagnostic and treatment procedures in order to discourage the promotion of such "quack" remedies. It also encourages the dissemination of information on unapproved and ineffective diagnostic and treatment methods and ineffective drugs or devices.

One way in which this information could be disseminated is through doctors' offices. The average patient has full faith in his doctor and if the doctor warns him of the danger of ineffective "cures" the patient will be much less receptive to trying something new without talking it over with his doctor. A pamphlet placed in the primary-care physician's office waiting room would carry with it the weight of the doctor's approval, and could dissuade the patient from experimenting with unapproved "cures."

When the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, Senator WILLIAMS, was chairman of the Subcommittee on Frauds and Misrepresentations Affecting the Elderly, of the Committee on Aging, that subcommittee conducted intensive hearings on frauds against the elderly. One of the findings of these hearings was that there are a large number of frauds perpetrated against the aging citizen who suffers from arthritis. The provisions in S. 2854 reflect the commitment which we share with the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) to provide protection to arthritis victims. The distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) also has a keen interest in this problem and, during the hearings on S. 2854, suggested the broad outlines of the language pertaining to this protection which has been accepted and is included in the bill.

ARTHRITIS SCREENING, EARLY DETECTION, PREVENTION, AND CONTROL PROGRAMS

Mr. President, the proposed National Arthritis Act also provides for the establishment of arthritis screening, early detection, prevention and control programs, which, consistent with the arthritis plan, can be provided through State, local, and other public or private nonprofit agencies. I believe the establishment of these programs directed at improved diagnostic and treatment techniques is crucial since early detection of arthritis can save years of pain and disability.

COMPREHENSIVE ARTHRITIS CENTERS

The legislation would also authorize support for ongoing arthritis centers and for the establishment, again consistent with the arthritis plan, of comprehensive arthritis centers to provide an opportunity for intensive, interdisciplinary basic and clinical research in arthritis. These centers would also offer a unique opportunity for training in, and demonstration of, screening, advanced diagnostic prevention, treatment, and control programs for arthritis.

December 19, 1974

The Arthritis Foundation in its report entitled "Professional Manpower in Rheumatology" states:

Most physicians who care for rheumatic disease patients are not specifically trained for the task. . . . Specialists in rheumatology treat only 3.1 percent of those afflicted with rheumatic disease. Other specialists and primary-care physicians see about seven million rheumatic disease patients—yet more than 70 percent of these physicians have little or no formal education in the complexities of distinguishing among various rheumatic diseases and instituting appropriate modern modes of treatment.

Mr. President, the centers proposed by S. 2854 could serve as a locale for continuing education programs for primary-care physicians who are the normal entry point into the health care system for the symptoms of the various forms of arthritis sufferers. Better knowledge of arthritis can mean great savings in time lost in applying early treatment of the disease, and in early detection of the more severe forms of arthritis which require the care of a specialist.

These centers can also provide opportunities for interdisciplinary training in the treatment of arthritis patients and, through such training, the more efficient utilization of the skills of the specialist, the nurse, the physical therapist, and health support personnel in long term treatment and rehabilitation programs.

Treatment of arthritis cannot be confined only to the patient, but because of the pervasive nature of the disease in its pronounced stages, counseling must be provided to the family as well. The successful treatment of arthritis results from a joint enterprise of family, patient, and health care personnel. It can best be fostered by an organized, interdisciplinary program such as that which would be created by S. 2854.

DATA BANK

The bill also provides for the establishment of an arthritis screening and detection data bank, and for the dissemination of the data collected and processed in cooperation with the centers and programs developed under the authorities of S. 2854 or through other appropriate means. Testimony presented to the Senate committee by Dr. Evelyn Hess of the University of Cincinnati, was very convincing as to the need for an organized system for data collection and dissemination on all aspects of arthritis. Existence of such a system would add substantially to the dissemination of information on new treatment methods, as well as the body of epidemiologic information.

I would like to express my gratitude for the cooperation which has been given by House Commerce Committee Harley Staggers and Congressman PAUL ROGERS in our joint efforts to work out a bill which would be acceptable to both Houses. Their kindness and responsiveness has been invaluable in our discussions, and has enabled us to come to a satisfactory agreement.

I would also like again to express my thanks to the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), the distinguished

CXX—2596—Part 31

Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) and, of course the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) for the leadership and dedication they have devoted to the deliberations on the National Activities Act. Their assistance has been invaluable and accounts in large measure for the fact that today we are ready to send the bill to the President for signature.

I believe we are ready to vote on the motion to concur in the House amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move that we concur in the House amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, is this the House amendment on the conference report?

Mr. CRANSTON. This is the House amendment to the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to concur in the House amendment to S. 2854. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS addressed the Chair.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California obtained a unanimous-consent agreement to be recognized for the purpose of bringing up a resolution immediately following the adoption of that motion.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to concur in the House amendments to the Senate-passed National Arthritis Act (S. 2854).

The House amendments are, in essence, technical and conforming amendments which adopt all of the provisions of the Senate-passed bill.

Since I joined with Senators CRANSTON and WILLIAMS in introducing this legislation, it has been cosponsored by 75 Senators evidencing the deep public concern about this crippling disease. During hearings, all witnesses, with the exception of those from the administration, joined in urging prompt passage.

Arthritis is a major health problem in the United States. An estimated 20 million Americans suffer from arthritis severe enough that they seek a physician's help. Arthritis affects all age groups, from the youngest to the most senior. For example, an estimated 75,000 Americans under the age of 17 are afflicted. However, senior citizens are hit hardest. At least half of those over the age of 65 have evidence of arthritis, and 700,000 have a moderate to severe form of the disease.

This bill reflects a deep concern that the Federal Government has not been providing adequate leadership in research, screening, detection and control programs and the development of necessary educational programs with respect to arthritis. I believe this legislation will assure that the Federal Government launches an effective all-out attack on this painful and crippling disease.

I am pleased that the House amendments accept the provision in the Senate passed bill which I authored with respect to "quackery"—the serious problem of unapproved and ineffective alleged arthritis cures. The Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, of which I am ranking minority member, learned during the course of hearings on this measure that $435 million is spent each year on such quackery and this amount would appear to be merely the "tip of the iceberg" according to the experts. I believe this is a financial waste, but even more important, ineffective and potentially harmful remedies can exacerbate arthritis or cause increased and unnecessary disabilities, and even death.

The provision I authored provides for programs for the dissemination of information to the general public to discourage the promotion and use of unapproved and ineffective diagnostic, preventive, treatment and control methods and unapproved and ineffective drugs and devices. In addition, the National Commission on Arthritis is directed to develop a long-range plan which shall include programs of this type. It is our hope that a vigorous program of public information will go far to alleviate the problem of quackery.

Also, I believe that organized medicine must become a leader in speaking out about the problem of quackery. The responsibility to protect the public must not be left to public officials who do not have the medical expertise to evaluate alleged "cures".

I urge my colleagues to support the National Arthritis Act, as amended, and allow us to advance a national attack on arthritis.

I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON).

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 127—AUTHORIZING THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE TO MAKE TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS IN THE ENROLLMENT OF THE BILL (S. 2854)

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution cosponsored by Senators KENNEDY, WILLIAMS, SCHWEIKER, and JAVITS, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HASKELL). The clerk will state the concurrent resolution.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the resolution be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The concurrent resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make the following corrections in the enrollment of the bill, S. 2854, to expand the authority of the National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Diseases in order to advance a national attack on arthritis:

On page 1, line 5, insert "(hereinafter in this Act collectively referred to as 'arthritis')" after "diseases".

On page 2, line 5, insert a comma and "including $2,500,000,000 in medical expenses," after "$9,200,000,000".

On page 3, between lines 7 and 8, insert the following new subsection:

(b) It is therefore the purpose of this Act to establish—

(1) a long-range plan—

(A) to expand and coordinate the national research, treatment, and control effort against arthritis;

(B) to advance educational activities for patients, professional and allied health personnel, and the public which will alert the citizens of the United States to the early indications of arthritis; and

(C) to emphasize the significance of early detection and proper control of these diseases and of the complications which may evolve from them;

(2) centers for arthritis screening, detection, diagnosis, prevention, control, treatment, education, rehabilitation, and research and training programs; and

(3) programs to develop new and improved methods of arthritis screening, detection, prevention, and referral and to establish a central arthritis screening and detection data bank.

On page 4, lines 17 and 18, strike out "chief medical officer" and insert in lieu thereof "Chief Medical Director".

On page 11, lines 12 and 13, strike out "on which funds are first appropriated for the Commission," and insert in lieu thereof "of the first meeting of the Commission, as prescribed in section 3(c) of this Act."

On page 11, line 19, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500,000."

On page 11, line 20, strike out "DEMONSTRATION" after "COMMITTEE."

On page 13, line 12, strike out "DEMONSTRATION" after "REFERRAL."

On page 13, line 19, insert "the" after "to."

On page 13, line 23, insert "established" after "bank".

On page 15, line 13, strike out "$2,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500,000"; and on line 14, strike out "$3,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,000,000."

On page 15, line 24, insert "new and existing" after "of".

On page 17, lines 19 and 22, strike out the comma and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon.

On page 18, line 13, strike out "$11,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000,000"; on line 14, strike out "$13,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$16,000,000"; and on line 15, strike out "$15,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$18,000,000."

On page 20, line 5, strike out "and related musculoskeletal diseases" after "arthritis". One page 20, lines 12 and 13, strike out "and related musculoskeletal diseases" after "arthritis" on line 12.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, just to give a brief explanation, the majority of the amendments included in the concurrent resolution, Mr. President, are of a purely technical, clarifying, and perfecting nature. At this time, I would like to briefly explain the three amendments of a more substantive nature. The first would correct an oversight in the drafting of the bill in the House, where in the findings section, it is not stated that the term "arthritis and related musculoskeletal diseases" should thereafter be referred to as "arthritis," making clear that in the findings and in the work of the Commission and in the mission given the Commission to develop an arthritis plan, attention should be given to arthritis and related musculoskeletal diseases.

The second amendment would change the date of submission of the arthritis plan by the Commission to 210 days after the first meeting of the Commission, rather than 210 days after funds are first appropriated for the Commission. I believe this is an important change and would avoid any undue delay in the submission of the plan which might result from appropriations acts being out of sequence with the Commission's calendar or work page.

The third amendment would reallocate the appropriations authorizations so that authorizations for fiscal year 1975, which now has only 6 remaining months, would be reduced, and the 2 succeeding years authorizations would be commensurately increased. The increases are explained as follows:

Authorization	Fiscal year—
	1975	1976	1977
1. Commission on Arthritis and Musculoskeletal Diseases (sec. 3(k)):
House amendment.....	2.0	(to remain available until expended)
Senate bill.....	5	5
Senate amendment.....	1.5	(to remain available until expended)
2. Screening projects and data bank (see 438(d) of PHS Act):
House amendment.....	2	3	4
Senate bill.....	5	10	15
Senate amendment.....	1.5	4	4
3. Comprehensive Arthritis Centers (sec. 439(h) of PHS Act):
House amendment.....	11	13	15
Senate bill.....	10	15	20
Senate amendment.....	5	16	18
Note: 3-year grand total:
House amendment.....			$50.0
Senate bill.....			75.5
Senate amendment.....			50.0

The net consequence, Mr. President, is no increase, of course, in the total sums that are authorized.

Mr. President, I ask that we now act on the concurrent resolution if no one else wishes to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the will of the Senate?

RECESS FOR 10 MINUTES

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess for 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to, and at 7:40 p.m., the Senate recessed until 7:50 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. HASKELL).

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS TODAY

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I am going to move shortly to recess the Senate until 10 p.m.

I have been informed by the Sergeant at Arms of the other body that the House will expect to complete its voting on the nomination of Mr. Rockefeller by about 5 or 10 minutes after 8 o'clock, which is very soon.

I have also been told by the Sergeant at Arms of this body that approximately 2 hours will be needed to prepare this Chamber for the visit of the President of the United States and the soon-to-be Vice President of the United States. I will soon move to recess until 10 p.m. I would think that the swearing-in ceremony would require 30 to 45 minutes—hopefully, less than 30 minutes. But after that ceremony, the Senate will resume its session.

It is still possible that the Senate could adjourn sine die this evening. Otherwise, I would not say that we should come back into session tonight. We will come back into session and see where we go from there.

I also want to notify Senators that there will be at least the proposal made, once we get back into session, that the Senate proceed to act on two measures, without any amendments thereto.

One measure would be H.R. 11796, an act to provide for the duty-free entry of a 3.60-meter telescope and associated articles for the use of the Canada-France-Hawaii telescope project at Mauna Kea, Hawaii.

The other measure would be H.R. 8214, an act to modify the tax treatment of members of the Armed Forces of the United States and civilian employees who are prisoners of war or missing in action, and for other purposes.

I would like all Senators to be notified that, immediately when the Senate goes back into session, the proposal will be made to dispose of those two matters, without any amendments beyond the two matters themselves. So Senators are so alerted.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, will the acting majority leader yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think the Senate will be interested in knowing that the other body has confirmed the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President by a vote of 287 to 128, with one voting "present."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I believe that Mr. Long asked first. I yield to him, and I ask unanimous consent that I retain my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, permit me to explain that it would be unfortunate, and I think it would reflect badly upon the Senate and Congress, if Congress adjourned without passing this prisoners-of-war bill. The prisoners of war have been held hostage long enough.

Senators will recall that we initially reported out the prisoners-of-war bill with some amendments on other subjects which we thought would correct some inequities. That became the subject of other amendments added on the floor, until the bill became so burdened with amendments that the bill was recommended.

At that time we had about a dozen amendments on the bill. Subsequently it was again reported out with some amendments and it has looked as if others would be added. However, I am now told by the acting chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee that they are not going to go to conference on any more bills and that if we want any bill signed by the President, we had better send it to the President directly, without amendment, because they are not going to consider any Senate amendments and they are not going to go to conference.

So that the prisoners of war and wives and families of prisoners of war and those missing in action who have been treated unfairly by the tax law will receive the treatment to which they are entitled, we should agree to this bill. We should not deny this treatment because we continue to fight other items on which the Senate and the House are not able to agree.

I think we should liberate that bill and let those people receive the consideration that the President of the United States and both committees and both Houses believe they should have.

I know that Senators would like to offer their amendments on some other bill; and I will not object to a Senator calling up some other revenue bill. I should make it clear, however, that any House-passed revenue bill which gains an amendment here is not going to become law in this Congress, for the simple reason that the House is not going to consider any more amendments. They have been in session with us for almost the last 24 hours, and they are through considering Senate amendments.

Incidentally, when the conference report on the trade bill and other measures come up, I think everybody will be pleased to see that the House took about 90 percent of all the Senate amendments sent to them on those three measures.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, if the majority leader can assure this Senator that H.R. 8214 can be brought up without any amendment and to strike the 12 committee amendments, I would not raise objection.

But, Mr. President, this is already a beautiful Christmas tree.

For example, the fourth committee amendment extends to distilled spirits brought into the United States from Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands the same abatement or refund provisions in the case of loss or destruction that are presently applicable to imported or domestic spirits.

All 12 amendments are of that type. They have nothing to do with veterans. They have nothing to do with prisoners of war. They have nothing to do with MIA.

I want to see a bill passed that will give the relief that the President has promised these people and that we have promised them.

Also, if H.R. 11796 is called up, which is a bill that should have been passed, in my opinion, long, long ago—it is a cooperative measure with the Government of Canada, whereby they are willing to put up $20 million to help build this much-needed telescope on Mauna Kea, Hawaii—we have no time limit asked by Mr. BUCKLEY, Mr. FONG, Mr. BEALL, Mr. McCLURE, and they all have amendments. Now, again, if the leader can assure me that this bill will be brought up with no other amendments, I shall not object. Otherwise, I am going to object. I will stay here all night, if necessary, to see that nothing happens to these bills.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I was merely indicating to Senators that once the swearing-in ceremony is completed and the Senate resumes its session, all Senators will be presented with this proposal. I was not attempting to get a unanimous-consent agreement at this time, because I think all Senators should be here to hear the proposal. Then they can make a judgment on it.

They are so alerted at this time, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess—before I say this, Senators should be in their seats at 9:45 p.m. this evening.

I move that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 10 o'clock tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The motion was agreed to, and at 8:11 p.m., the Senate recessed until 10 p.m., whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the President pro tempore.

CEREMONY ON ADMINISTRATION OF OATH OF OFFICE TO NELSON A. ROCKEFELLER AS VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate was called to order by the President pro tempore, the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

The secretary for the majority (Mr. J. Stanley Kimmitt) announced that he was directed by the House to inform the Senate that the House had adopted House Resolution 1511, confirming the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller, of the State of New York, to be Vice President of the United States.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair be authorized to appoint a committee to escort the President of the United States and the Vice-President-designate of the United States into the Senate Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair appoints the following Senators as a committee to escort the President of the United States and the Vice-President-designate of the United States into the Senate Chamber: the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD), the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HUGH SCOTT), the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK), the Senators from New York (Mr. JAVITS and Mr. BUCKLEY), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), and the Senator from Utah (Mr. MOSS).

The Secretary for the majority announced the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the joint bipartisan leadership.

[Applause.]

Thereupon, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ALBERT), the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO), the gentleman from California (Mr. McFALL), the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. O'NEILL), the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODES), the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON), and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HUTCHINSON) entered the Chamber and were seated in the well of the Chamber.

[Applause, Members and guests rising.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Gentlemen, you are welcome to the Senate.

The secretary for the majority announced the Chief Justice of the United States, Warren E. Burger.

The Chief Justice entered the Chamber and took the seat provided for him to the right of the rostrum.

[Applause, Members and guests rising.]

The secretary for the majority announced the President of the United States.

The President of the United States entered the Chamber and stood at the clerk's desk.

[Applause, Members and guests rising.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair now appoints the Chief Justice of the United States to administer the oath in my behalf to the Vice President of the United States.

The Chief Justice approached the Vice President's desk.

The secretary for the majority announced the Vice-President-designate of the United States.

[Applause, Members and guests rising.]

The Vice President stood at the Vice President's desk, where the oath prescribed by law was administered to the Vice President by the Chief Justice of the United States, and the Vice President subscribed to the oath in the official oath book.

[Applause, Members and guests rising.]

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Vice President of the United States be permitted to address the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, President pro tempore EASTLAND, Mr. Chief Justice, Your Excellencies, the members of the Diplomatic Corps, distinguished guests and fellow Americans:

As I stand before you, I feel a great sense of humility. I feel a great sense of gratitude for the privilege of serving the country I love.

I feel a deep sense of gratitude to President Ford, to the Congress of the United

December 19, 1974

States, and to the people of America; to the President for his trust and confidence and the opportunity he has given me to serve this great Nation in working with him—a man for whom I have profound respect, admiration, and warmth of affection; a man of integrity, sincerity, openness, dedication; a man bearing the lonely burdens of the Presidency with deep human understanding and total devotion to his country.

And my admiration to the First Lady, Betty Ford, and her great warmth and her courage. And, if you will forgive me for a personal note, my love and admiration to my own gallant wife, Happy.

I feel deeply grateful to the committees and the Members of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives for their confirmation of my nomination.

Among the many reasons I look forward with pride and with keen anticipation to serving the Senate as its Presiding Officer is the fact that my mother's father, my grandfather, Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, represented the great State of Rhode Island in this very Chamber for 31 years, after serving for 3 years in the House of Representatives.

The thoroughness with which the Congress exercised its responsibilities on behalf of the American people under the 25th amendment has been another dramatic evidence of the enduring strength and vitality of our Constitution and our unique American system.

I have learned a great deal from this experience of the past 4 months, and I have come out of it with an even greater respect for the Congress of the United States, a more profound appreciation of the collective wisdom of the American people as expressed through the Congress, and a deeper understanding of the breadth of the responsibility to the people of this great, free land that falls upon those of us in positions of public trust.

I deeply appreciate the investigation work of all those in Government agencies involved in the investigation and preparation of material for the congressional committees.

I admire and respect the vigilant coverage of the free American press, radio, and television through which the people of America were so well informed.

I would like to thank all of those citizens who participated directly in the process by expressing themselves to their representatives in the Senate and in the House, and to those who sent words of encouragement to Happy and to me.

And, finally, especially to you, Mr. Chief Justice, my thanks for your administering the oath and symbolizing, as you do, the rule of law by which this great Republic functions.

This is a period in which our country faces tremendous difficulties and unprecedented problems, both at home and abroad—problems that affect every section of our country and every family in America. But there is nothing wrong with America that Americans cannot right.

[Applause, Members and guests rising.] I pledge myself to the fullest limit of my capacity to work with you, Mr. President, and the Congress in the great task of building the strength of America to meet the grave new problems which we confront as a nation and as a people.

I thank you.

[Applause, Members and guests rising.]

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, Mr. Vice President, Mr. Speaker, Mr. President of the Senate pro tempore, at this historic moment in the existence of this distinguished body, I offer congratulations to the Vice President of the United States.

And on behalf of our majority leader and my other colleagues in the Senate of the United States, I welcome the Vice President as the Presiding Officer of this body.

There was a time in the history of this Republic when the Vice President's role as President of the Senate was perhaps the highest responsibility of the office. But that is no longer true. In today's world, the office of Vice President of the United States has assumed an importance and a significance with which it was not formerly associated. As the stature of the Vice Presidency has increased, so have the responsibilities.

Therefore, Mr. Vice President, we wish you well as you prepare to take your place in the administration and the conduct of the Nation's affairs, and I repeat the welcome of this body to you as President of the Senate of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, Mr. Vice President, Mr. President pro tempore, Mr. Chief Justice, Members of the House of Representatives, Mr. Speaker, and Members:

I have a great privilege at this point. I would like to say, first, that I congratulate the Vice President upon his opportunity to serve, and to serve with the President and the Congress of the United States. Such a privilege is rare and is one to be earned. I am certain that we are all going to benefit and rejoice in this new move and advance along our constitutional paths. The 25th amendment has worked, and we are all very proud to have had a part in it.

Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the distinguished acting majority leader, I submit a resolution. I ask that it be read, and I will then ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The Assistant Secretary of the Senate (Mr. Darrell St. Claire) read as follows:

Mr. SCOTT, for himself and Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, submit the following resolution:

S. RES. 470
To congratulate Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller

Whereas the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States was submitted to the Congress for confirmation on August 20, 1974; and

Whereas Nelson A. Rockefeller has today taken the oath of office as the 41st Vice President of the United States: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That the Senate congratulates the Vice President on assuming his new duties and wishes him well during his term of office.

SEC. 2. That an engrossed copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Vice President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, I renew my request for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to. [Applause, Members and guests rising.]

(The Vice President assumed the chair.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will come to order, please.

[Laughter.]

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia.

I know him very well, too.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

[Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary of the Senate proceeded to call the roll.

At 10:26 p.m., the President and the Vice President, accompanied by the committee of escort, retired from the Chamber of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK). The Senate will please come to order.

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have three measures which have been cleared on both sides of the aisle and they can be passed without debate.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 14461.

JUDITH E. STERLING

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), I submit a report from the Committee on the Judiciary on H.R. 14461 and I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows: H.R. 14461, an act for the relief of Judith E. Sterling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

December 19, 1974

AN ACT TO DIRECT THE ADMINISTRATOR OF GENERAL SERVICES TO RELEASE CERTAIN CONDITIONS WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY CONVEYED TO THE STATE OF ARKANSAS BY THE UNITED STATES, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), I submit a report from the Committee on Commerce on H.R. 1820, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1820) to direct the Administrator of General Services to release certain conditions with respect to certain real property conveyed to the State of Arkansas by the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTRICAL ENERGY AND NATURAL GAS CONSERVATION ACT OF 1974

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), I submit a report from the Committee on Commerce, S. 2532, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 2532, a bill to amend the Federal Power Act to promote conservation, reduce wastage, and attain greater efficiency in the generation of electrical energy, and for other purposes, with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this Act shall be cited as the "Electrical Energy and Natural Gas Conservation Act of 1974".

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. (a) FINDINGS.—The Congress hereby finds and declares that—

(1) An abundance of low-cost electrical energy and natural gas has helped produce the present high standard of living in the United States.

(2) Continued availability of electrical energy and natural gas, and minimization of power failures, brownouts, and gas shortages is essential to the future of the economy and the public welfare of the Nation.

(3) Such continued availability is jeopardized today by inefficiency and profligate usage of electrical energy and natural gas.

(b) PURPOSES.—It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to—

(1) declare that henceforth it shall be the policy of the Nation to reduce wastage and maximize efficiency in the generation, transmission, distribution, and use of electricity, and natural gas in order to conserve scarce energy resources and minimize the impact on the environment;

(2) direct the Federal Power Commission to study better ways and more efficient methods of electric power generation and electrical energy and natural gas conservation, particularly the impact of rate structures on energy consumption.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. As used in this Act—

(1) "Commission" means the Federal Power Commission.

(2) "Promotional practices" means any practice undertaken or consideration offered or granted by an electric public utility or natural gas company or its affiliate to any person for the purpose, express or implied, of inducing such person to select or use the service or additional service of such public utility or natural gas company, or to select or install any appliance or equipment to use such service.

STUDIES AND INVESTIGATIONS

SEC. 4. (a) INVESTIGATIONS.—In order to secure information necessary or appropriate as a basis for legislative recommendations, the Commission shall obtain and maintain, so far as practicable, complete and current information regarding—

(1) the ownership, operation, management, and control of all significant facilities for generation, transmission, distribution, and sale of electrical energy and natural gas, however produced, in the United States;

(2) the capacity and output of each such facility and the relationship between the two;

(3) the costs of generation, transmission, and distribution at each such facility;

(4) the rates, charges, rate structures, accounts, practices, classifications and contracts regarding the sale of electrical energy and natural gas to residential, rural, commercial, and industrial consumers and other purchasers by suppliers of electrical energy or natural gas;

(5) methods of more efficient generation, distribution, and conservation of electrical energy and natural gas;

(6) shortages of capital funds, relative to other sectors of the economy, which would restrict necessary expansion, as well as ways in which capital needs could be reduced;

(7) the relation of any and all such facts to the development of navigation, industry, commerce, environmental quality, and national security; and

(8) the extent and kind of promotional practices engaged in by private and public suppliers of electrical energy and natural gas.

In making such investigations, the Commission is authorized and directed to consult with the Federal Energy Administration so as to avoid duplication of effort. The Commission shall report to Congress on July 1, 1975, and on July 1 of each year thereafter, the results of investigations made and information obtained under this section. Such reports shall be submitted to Congress without any prior submission, review, or clearance by any other agency or officer of the United States.

(b) STUDY.—The Commission, in consultation with the Bonneville Power Administration, the Tennessee Valley Authority, any other instrumentality of the Federal Government which produces or sells electrical energy or natural gas, and appropriate State agencies and commissions, shall conduct a study of the impact of rate structures on the efficiency of generation and on the consumption and conservation of electrical energy and natural gas. Such study shall evaluate all relevant factors, including but not limited to—

(1) an identification of subsidies and other incentives which promote inefficient generation or production or unnecessary or wasteful energy consumption;

(2) an indication of how various rate structures and methods of pricing might affect the efficiency of generation, production, or consumption within the regions studied. Such methods shall include fuel cost adjustments, marginal cost pricing, and other pricing methods which may encourage increased efficiency of generation or production, or decreased consumption of electrical energy and natural gas;

(3) an analysis of the rate structure within each region studied, including its effect on design and use of less efficient power and gas generation, production, transmission, or distribution equipment;

(4) an indication of whether metering or other measures might be improved or instituted to inform purchasers of electric energy or natural gas of their costs and peak demand responsibilities;

(5) an estimate of the impact various rate changes might have on regional consumption and efficiency of generation or production;

(6) an analysis of the impact of various structures on the need for capital acquisition, as well as the impact of demand changes on capital needs;

(7) An analysis of the efficiency in various uses of electricity and natural gas, relative to each other as well as to other potential energy sources;

(8) recommendations for legislative, executive, and administrative actions in furtherance of the national policy declared in this Act.

Not more than six months after the date of the enactment of this subsection, an interim report on the results of such study shall be prepared and submitted to the Congress. Upon completion of such study, not to exceed three years from the date of enactment of this Act, a final report detailing the results of such study shall be prepared and submitted to Congress. Such reports shall be submitted to Congress without any prior submission, review, or clearance by any other agency or officer of the United States.

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

SEC. 5. (a) GENERAL.—The Commission, in consultation with the Federal Energy Administration and other appropriate Federal instrumentalities, and State public utility commissions, is authorized and directed to develop and implement demonstration projects to assist the Commission in furthering the purposes of this Act, and for other electrical energy and natural gas conservation purposes. Such demonstration projects shall include but not be limited to projects designed to—

(1) test the effect of consumption, generation, and production of electrical energy and natural gas of various rate structures;

(2) test the impact of various incentives and arrangements to facilitate consumer acquisition of advanced energy conservation devices and technology;

(3) determine the feasibility of tie-in arrangements between utilities and private generating facilities so as to maximize the efficient utilization of energy.

(b) CHARACTERISTICS.—Such demonstration projects shall be conducted so as to insure a representative sample of different generation and consumption characteristics, including but not limited to—

December 19, 1974

- (1) the composition of the utility customer population according to rate class and annual average electricity or gas use;
- (2) the annual contribution to total output of electricity made by hydroelectric, nuclear, coal, natural gas and oil-based generating capacity;
- (3) population and population density of the utility service area and other demographic variables;
- (4) characteristics of the transmission and distribution system;
- (5) climatic conditions;
- (6) financial base including debt-equity ratio and anticipated capital expenditures.

(c) GRANTS.—The Commission is authorized to make such grants and contracts with any Federal or State agency, regulatory body, laboratory, university, nonprofit organization, industrial organization, public or private agency, institution, organization, corporation, partnership, or individual as are necessary to carry out and evaluate demonstration projects in furtherance of the purposes of this section. Each grant under this section shall be made in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, and in no event shall such grant result in duplicate Federal funding of any demonstration project. Each application for a grant shall be made in writing in such form with such content and other submissions as the Commission shall require.

(d) RECORDS, AUDIT, AND EXAMINATION.—Each recipient of financial assistance under this section shall keep such records as the Commission shall prescribe, including records which fully disclose the amount and disposition by such recipient of the proceeds of such assistance, the total cost of the project or undertaking in connection with which such assistance was given or used, the amount of that portion of the cost of the project or undertaking supplied by other sources, and such other records as will facilitate an effective audit. The Commission and the Comptroller General of the United States, or any of their duly authorized representatives shall, until the expiration of 3 years after completion of any project undertaken pursuant to this section, have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of such receipts which in the opinion of the Commission or the Comptroller General may be related or pertinent to such project.

APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZATION

Sec. 6. There are authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year in which this title is enacted such sums as are necessary to carry out this title, not to exceed $2,000,000 for fiscal 1975, $1,000,000 for fiscal 1976, and $1,000,000 for fiscal 1977.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

—The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to promote conservation, reduce wastage, and attain greater efficiency in the generation, transmission, and distribution of electrical energy and natural gas, encourage improved financial stability of public utilities and natural gas companies, and for other purposes."

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Arkansas (Mr. McCLELLAN) be recognized to call up the urgent supplemental conference report, and I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation thereon of not to exceed 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1975, CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to House Joint Resolution 1180, making urgent supplemental appropriations and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the House Joint Resolution 1180, making urgent supplemental appropriations, having met have agreed that the two Houses have been unable to agree.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. McCLORE. Mr. President, yesterday I was privileged to testify before the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor to urge funding for title III of the Emergency Jobs and Unemployment Assistance Act. It was essential, I believe, that money for this program be included in the urgent supplemental, House Joint Resolution 1180, the conference report we are now considering.

I am pleased that the conference committee has recommended $125 million for title III. While this is only a quarter of the $500 million authorization, I believe the sum provided will allow the program to get underway quickly without waiting for the Congress to return. It will give us an opportunity to determine what can effectively be done under this program to meet our employment needs.

As I stated before the Appropriations Subcommittee, I believe that this program offers communities and individuals a meaningful alternative to public service jobs and unemployment compensation. This program is a constructive proposal providing additional assistance—flexible assistance—in the most efficient and effective way.

I thank the Senators for their consideration of this program. I urge the Senate to agree to the additional recommendation for this worthwhile program.

Senator DOMENICI, a cosponsor of the jobs opportunities program, appeared with me at the subcommittee hearing chaired by the distinguished Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON). Senator MONTROYA, who joined us in support of the program and is a member of Labor Appropriations Subcommittee, also was present.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I urge approval of the conference report.

The total amount of the bill recommended by the conferees is the same as passed originally by the House, $4,824,873,000, which is $1,500,000 below the budget estimates presented to Congress by the President.

I move that the conference report be agreed to by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to. Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on House Joint Resolution 1180.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1180) making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert:

CHAPTER V. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION JOB OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAM

For Job Opportunities Program assistance as authorized by title III of the Emergency Jobs and Unemployment Assistance Act of 1974, $125,000,000, to be derived by transfer from funds appropriated in this Act to the Department of Labor under the heading "Temporary Employment Assistance", to remain available until December 31, 1975: Provided, That this appropriation shall become available only upon enactment into law of H.R. 16596 or similar legislation by the Ninety-third Congress.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, as members will recall, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate recommended, and the Senate passed an amendment to the urgent supplemental appropriations bill earlier today to provide $250,000,000 to initiate a new job opportunities program as authorized by title III of the Emergency Job and Unemployment Assistance Act of 1974. This was the only amendment to the bill and was the subject matter of the conference between the two Houses.

After much discussion, the conferees agreed to report the amendment in disagreement with an amendment to the amendment of the Senate which provides $125,000,000 instead of $250,000,000 and that the funds would be derived by transfer from funds appropriated in this act for the Department of Labor temporary employment assistance appropriation. This was the best that could be done under the circumstances and this agreement does provide funds to initiate the program at a level of half of the amount the Senate approved.

It should be noted that the House bill did not provide any funds for this new program. It was further agreed by the conferees that further consideration will be given to this matter with the convening of the 94th Congress in January.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I just wanted to be sure

December 19, 1974

we understood what has happened to the billion dollars which was in the supplemental for public service jobs.

I understand from the chairman, Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, as I understand it, the conferees decided to—

Mr. PASTORE. Will the Senator please use the microphone?

Mr. JAVITS. The conferees decided to take the billion dollars, but took $125 million out of it to be devoted to the purposes of title 3 of the bill, as we passed it, which yet remains to be signed by the President, which is the so-called EDA title, and may I just ask for confirmation?

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. That is correct.

Also, there is provided in the bill in respect of other problems of unemployment for the necessary resources to back up what we are providing in the bill which was passed here just yesterday for unemployment compensation.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct. There is no change whatsoever other than the matter we have just discussed.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank my colleague very much.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I might answer at this time, too, that the continuing resolution was accepted by the House and, therefore, there will be no conference report on it.

Mr. President, unless there are any questions or further discussion desired, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, it had been our hope that the Senate would be in a position to adjourn sine die tonight.

We were waiting on word from the White House that the President had signed the Nixon tapes measure. He has signed the Nixon tapes measure.

We were waiting on conference reports from the other body, or the papers on such conference reports on measures on which the House is entitled to act first.

We have received one of the conference reports. We were unable to secure the papers on other conference reports. Therefore, the Senate will be forced to meet tomorrow.

I want to thank all Members of the Senate for the splendid cooperation and understanding that they have shown the joint leadership in these last hectic days.

The Senate has made tremendous progress and had it not been for the fact that we could not act on the conference reports that are awaiting action first in the House, we would have adjourned sine die tonight.

Now, I have been assured by the majority leader of the other body that the House will come in tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock and that by 3 o'clock in the afternoon, if we can possibly—if we can possibly—adjourn sine die, both Houses will be prepared to adjourn sine die by 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. I hope we can beat that, but anyhow, that is the best I can say for tonight.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9 A.M. TOMORROW

Now, I would ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the Senate when it completes its business today stand in adjournment until the hour of 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Now, Mr. President, before the Senate recessed a little earlier this afternoon, the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance asked if it might be possible to call up H.R. 8214, an act to modify the tax treatment of members of the Armed Forces of the United States and civilian employees who are prisoners of war who are missing in action, and enact that measure without amendments thereto.

Also, if it might be possible to call up H.R. 11796, which Senators will see on their calendar, which is order No. 1282, an act to provide for the duty-free entry of a 3.60-meter telescope and associated articles for the use of the Canada-France-Hawaii telescope project, without amendment.

Now, several Senators had written to Mr. MANSFIELD with copies of the letters to me asking that they be notified before any action was taken to call up the prisoners of war measure.

I explained my situation to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee and he agreed that I should proceed as I am doing now, that following the ceremony we would again resume our session, at which time I would explain to all Senators the situation and I would ask unanimous consent if the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) could be permitted to call up first H.R. 8214 and get it enacted without amendment and then follow that next with H.R. 11796 without amendment, and proceed to act thereon.

I know that the Senator from Louisiana will want to discuss these two measures and explain them and say whatever he wishes, but I will ask unanimous consent at this time so that the request will be pending, that the distinguished Senator from Louisiana be permitted to call up H.R. 8214 and that it be enacted with whatever debate is wanted, without amendment, and that it be followed by H.R. 11796 under the same condition.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Reserving the right to objection—

Mr. LONG. Prior to the time the Senator makes his request, I would like to make a general statement for the benefit of Senators.

We have on this calendar the so-called prisoner-of-war bill. It has been recommended by the President of the United States. It passed the House of Representatives. It has been recommended by the Finance Committee. I have yet to hear one whisper of opposition to anything provided in the so-called prisoner-of-war portion of this bill.

This is to relieve prisoners of war, the surviving spouses, and the unfortunate families of those who are missing in action, and those who died as a result of wounds received on the battlefield in Vietnam, of some of the unintended tax consequences that could not be foreseen when that war broke out.

This bill should have been passed 2 years ago. But the Senate Finance Committee recommended a number of amendments and sought to accommodate the Members of this body who wanted to find a revenue bill where they could have their amendments considered.

So someone said, when it came to the floor with quite a few amendments, that it was a Christmas tree bill.

We thought that all 12 of the amendments that were on the bill at that time were good ones and the Senate agreed to 11 out of 12 of them. At that point, one of the Members of this body decided, "If you are going to put those amendments on the bill, you ought to put something on there which represents tax relief for the rank and file." Also a tax reform amendment was added to it.

Often that sent the bill back to the committee to see what could be done about it.

We brought the bill back, and, with a much smaller number of amendments. They were called riders. The basic bill had more merit than all the riders put together. So then we bring the bill back out again, and in trying to accommodate the Senators, we show up with six meritorious amendments. Again, the bill is a better horse than the riders.

Now, however, we are on notice. We have met with the House in the last few days in conference on three bills. We had well over 400 Senate amendments on the trade bill. It seems to me that they yielded to us on about 400 amendments and we yielded on 25 amendments. We have a 95-percent success record, I report to the Senators, on the amendments of the Senate in that bill.

We also took a tax bill to conference which had a limited number of amendments because it was considered under a germaneness rule. The Senators will recall offered their amendments but only those germane to the committee amendments were considered. The House conferees took all of our amendments except two on that bill.

We also took a social services bill to them and they yielded on almost everything except the Long amendment on that one—my amendment—on which I think they should have yielded, by the way.

Now they are telling us, "We have considered enough bills and enough amendments. We are through. We quit. We are going home. Do not send anything over here you expect any action on. Do not change a comma to a semicolon on any more bills. If you do, they will not become law. If you have something that we sent you and you want to send it to the White House, go ahead. That is all right with us. We could not stop you if we wanted to. But if you want to amend it, forget about it. It will not become law."

In this kind of a situation it would reflect very badly on the Senate if we disregard the recommendation of the President of the United States, both this President and the previous President, as to the treatment of the prisoners of war and their families and the families of those who died in Vietnam. It would be most improper if we denied those who were hospitalized for a long period of time following injury in that war the relief that the President, the House of Representatives and the Senate Finance Committee believe to be appropriate.

Mr. President, I would pray that I would have the opportunity to offer every Senator the chance to offer his amendment on this bill, or some other bill, with the assurance that it would be considered. I regret to say that is beyond my control. We could go through the motions, but we cannot achieve it.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Reserving the right to object, and we discussed this before we went into recess, I do not think any Member of the Senate will object to the passage of the basic bill which, by the way, was reported to the calendar on July 8.

Here it is the final night, and we are just getting to it.

What I am objecting to is the 12 committee amendments that, I believe, have nothing to do with tax relief for veterans.

For example, the fourth committee amendment extends to distilled spirits brought into the United States from Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands the same abatement or refund provisions in the case of loss or destruction that are presently applicable to imported or domestic spirits.

The first committee amendment is intended to make it clear that cooperative arrangements formed by educational organizations and certain organizations supporting educational organizations for the collective investment of their funds are to be exempt from Federal income taxation.

Mr. President, if the chairman is willing to stand on the floor and state—

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will come to order.

Mr. GOLDWATER (continuing). That he will not call for the inclusion of these 12 committee amendments, I have no objections at all. But if we are going to try to ram these 12 Christmas tree ornaments down our throats I am going to stand here and object, and if the Senator makes a motion, I can talk until past 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the amendments the distinguished Senator from Arizona is referring to are amendments on the first version of the prisoner of war bill. Many of them are now law. In any event I now propose to move that we disagree to all Senate amendments, even those to correct a grammatical error—that we disagree to all of them—and simply send the bill to the White House the way the House sent it to us. We can perfect the law in this area next year. Not to send the bill to the President in my judgment, would be a great misfortune. I do not think any Senator in this body could defend such a vote. I do not think you could defend an objection among your constituents if you denied those widows and those men who were hospitalized—shot to pieces in Vietnam—the thoughtful consideration recommended by both committees, by the House of Representatives and the President, merely because you were holding out to try to put your rider on the bill.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I cannot defend before my constituents the sixth committee amendment which repeals the tax and other regulatory provisions on filled cheese in the Internal Revenue Code.

Mr. LONG. I would strike all amendments on the bill.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Let us strike it.

Mr. LONG. That is what I am trying to get consent to do.

Mr. GOLDWATER. If the Senator wants it, ask for it.

Mr. LONG. In other words, what I am trying to do is pass the bill the way the House sent it to us.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I recognize the due of the POW families, and I recognize that they have been denied this relief for some time because of the delay in getting this measure passed.

But I also have a concern, and the distinguished Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH) also has a concern, for the retired people in this country who have gone now 10 years without any adjustment in their cost-of-living tax allowances.

We thought this was one way that we might provide some relief for them.

I recognize the situation we are in, legislative wise, here at the end of the session. I am just wondering if the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee can give us any encouragement, since we have been concerned with this for 2 years now and have not been successful. We have attempted to add it to other bills which have gone through in similar fashion as this one, because of the press of time.

When the new session of Congress starts are we going to be given any consideration or any opportunity to present this case again, and have an opportunity to provide some relief?

Mr. LONG. I will say to the Senator that a proposal along the lines of his proposal is in the so-called major tax reform bill, which has been tentatively agreed to by the House Ways and Means Committee but not yet reported.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Where is the bill?

Mr. LONG. The committee was not able to complete action on the bill in which this provision was included because there were too many provisions to be considered.

A proposal along the lines of the Senator's proposal, in and of itself, could pass over there, but there are so many other things in the package with it that the package did not move.

I have no doubt we can enact it next year.

I think I can assure the Senator that a proposal along the lines of his proposal is going to become law. I do not know how anyone could vote against it. But the House will not take it on this measure. If you put it on this bill, it will not help the aged people; all it will do is hurt the prisoners of war and the survivors of those people who died fighting for the liberty of this country.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I assure the Senator I am not interested in an exercise in futility, or denying anyone rightful relief under this law, but I am concerned about our elderly, who have gone some 10 years now without any adjustment in their retirement income credit.

The amendment I am proposing would provide that. I would just like some assurance that early next session we will have an opportunity to get this proposal enacted into law.

Mr. LONG. I am glad to inform the Senator that Mr. ULLMAN says the House is going to get a bill over here within the first month of the next Congress, a limited version of tax reform, and he hopes we can act on it before the middle of the year.

If he gets it over here, if he can fulfill that commitment, I have no doubt we can do that.

I will put it this way: We can carry our end of the load if they can carry their end over there. They may have an amendment along the lines proposed by the Senator, on the House bill, or if they do not have it I will be glad to consider the subject over here.

Several Senators addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, do I correctly understand the Senator from Louisiana to say that the House passed a bill that was confined alone to the relief of the widows of those killed in action and the missing in action? Is that correct?

Mr. LONG. That is right.

Mr. PASTORE. And the Senator is now willing to accept that in the Senate, provided we do not add anything else to it, and if we do add anything else to it then the whole caboodle is lost?

Mr. LONG. We are not going to add any amendments.

Mr. PASTORE. All right. Why not make up our minds whether we want to do it or not do it, and stop all this talk? Do we want to confine it to the House bill, that has to do alone with the veterans, those killed in action, and those missing in action, and pass that? It sounds simple. We do not have to be here until 3 o'clock tomorrow morning to straighten that out. Let us have it out, yes or no.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. Is my understanding correct that the Senator's amendment also covers the telescope bill for Hawaii?

Mr. LONG. We are not talking about that now. Let us do one thing at a time. If we cannot do this bill we cannot do anything.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The acting majority leader has made a unanimous-consent request. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, if the Senator will agree that all 12 amendments be stricken, I shall not object.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am willing to strike all amendments.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I would like to have that from the leader.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, my request included the second bill.

Mr. LONG. All we are doing is asking that the bill be laid before the Senate, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. That was with the understanding there would be no amendments offered thereto.

Mr. STEVENS. Including any amendments?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if the Senator will make the same request to take any amendments off the Hawaii telescope bill, I will not offer the amendment I have in mind. It is a Pan American amendment, quite similar to the American Motors amendment; but if we are going to strip it down, and everyone else will stand aside, we will all stand aside together. But I want to know if the Senator is going to do the same thing with that amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. With every amendment.

Mr. LONG. It is perfectly all right with me to call up some other resolution and let Senators load that measure down until Spencer Rich, who has been writing about four bills as Christmas tree bills, can point to the biggest Christmas tree you ever saw. But the point is, the Senator is not going to get the Pan American bill by this procedure. We will not have a conference with the House, so they are all out. If the Senator wants to go through the motions of amending a bill, it is all right with me, but it is not going to become law, because the House says they will not consider it.

I say take all amendments off, even those correcting manifest grammatical errors.

CXX—2597—Part 31

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we take up first the prisoner of war tax bill, that no amendments be offered thereto—I do not presume to preempt the chairman, but this is my understanding of his intent—that the bill be stripped of all committee amendments, and that the bill then be passed without debate.

Mr. PASTORE. As passed by the House.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. As passed by the House, and then that there be an immediate vote, that the second bill be stripped of all amendments, that no amendments be in order thereto, and that it be passed without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Let me state more specifically how H.R. 8214, provides relief for military and civilian personnel returning from the Vietnam conflict, and the families of those individuals who are listed as missing in action and who are subsequently determined to have died at an earlier time.

First, the bill extends the provision under present law, which permits military personnel who are hospitalized as a result of service in a combat zone to exclude military pay they receive during the period of hospitalization, to cover for a period of time the pay they receive while hospitalized after all combatant activities have terminated.

Second, the bill extends the provision which forgives Federal income taxes on income other than combat pay, which is presently excludable under another provision, in the case of a member of the Armed Forces who dies while serving in a combat zone—or as a result of an injury incurred while serving in a combat zone—to cover the period he is in a missing status even though it is subsequently determined that he actually died at an earlier time.

Third, the bill deals with the question of when the special tax rates available to a surviving spouse should be available for a spouse whose husband was reported in missing status and is subsequently determined to have died at an earlier time. The bill provides that the widow is to be eligible for surviving spouse tax treatment for the 2 years following the year in which her husband's missing status is changed rather than the 2 years following the year of actual death.

This bill also clarifies existing law in two respects. First, the bill makes it clear that the spouse of a serviceman—or spouse of an individual serving in support of the Armed Forces—in a combat zone is to have the same extension of time for performing various acts, such as filing tax returns, paying taxes, or filing a claim for credit or refund of tax, as is available to her husband.

Second, the bill also makes it clear that the spouse of an individual who is listed in missing status may file a joint return during the period he is in missing status even if is subsequently determined that he had been killed in action in a prior year.

Mr. President, with respect to the changes made in the provisions dealing with special benefits during the period there are combatant activities in a combat zone, the bill provides certain general limitations so that these benefits do not extend beyond a reasonable period of time after the termination of combatant activities. In the case of any future conflict, these benefits will generally not be available for more than 2 years after the termination of combatant activities. However, in the case of the Vietnam conflict, these benefits will generally be available for a 2-year period after this bill is enacted.

In addition to these changes, the bill also deals with the tax treatment of certain individuals who were illegally detained when the U.S.S. Pueblo was seized in 1968 by North Korea. In this regard, the bill provides an exclusion from income with respect to compensation received by the members of the crew to conform to the treatment available for prisoners of war in a combat zone.

Finally, the bill removes the requirement that a serviceman must be serving during an "induction period" in order to be eligible for certain benefits otherwise accorded. This change is necessary since the Military Selective Service Act of 1967 has expired and there is no longer an induction period.

Mr. President, this bill has only a small effect on revenues resulting in a decrease in receipts of approximately $4 million spread over the next several fiscal years from the standpoint of the level of revenues on June 30, 1973. The elimination of the "induction period," which as I indicated is a requirement for certain benefits and was allowed to lapse as of June 30, would have resulted in an increase in receipts in fiscal year 1974. However, since the bill continues the identical treatment for those individuals serving in the Armed Forces after June 30, 1973, as was available prior to the expiration of the induction period, this increase will not occur.

I urge that this bill be adopted.

PRISONER OF WAR AND MISSING IN ACTION TAX ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 8214) to modify the tax treatment of members of the Armed Forces of the United States and civilian employees who are prisoners of war or missing in action, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it is understood, and I ask unanimous consent if it is not understood, that all committee amendments and all amendments to the House passed bill be rejected, and that the bill be voted upon as it came to us from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendments are rejected.

The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the second bill.

DUTY-FREE ENTRY OF A TELESCOPE AT MAUNA KEA, HAWAII

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 11796) to provide for the duty-free entry of a 3.60 meter telescope and associated articles for the use of the Canada-France-Hawaii Telescope Project at Mauna Kea, Hawaii, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment.

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, in December, 1973, I introduced legislation similar to the bill before us in the Senate, with my colleague from Hawaii, Senator FONG, to authorize the duty free entry of a 3.60 meter optical telescope and associated articles to be installed and operated at Mauna Kea, Hawaii.

This legislation, which is in keeping with the intent of Public Law 89-651 to promote international cultural, scientific and educational projects, the so-called Florence Agreement, is necessary due to the unique characteristics of this venture, jointly sponsored by France, Canada, and the University of Hawaii.

Mauna Kea is Hawaii's highest mountain and as an astronomical observation site "may be one of the best in the world," according to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. On this site the world's largest infra-red telescope will be constructed. This joint venture which will be undertaken by the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique of France, the National Research Council of Canada and the University of Hawaii represents a unique opportunity for international scientific cooperation. When the site is completed, it will be one of the world's most important centers for ground-based celestial observations.

Among the uses of the proposed facility will be to provide data on the temperatures and surface characteristics of outer planets and their satellites, to study the nature of the planets, interstellar dust, expanding galaxies and galactic nuclei. These investigations will provide NASA with supporting and complementary data for our planetary exploration programs, including the Mariner Jupiter/Saturn mission. Finally, it will serve man's never ending efforts to better understand the cosmos.

Mauna Kea's extraordinarily clear atmosphere, on its summit, was the asset that caused the French Government to come to the University of Hawaii, which already operates three small telescopes on the site, to propose construction of a more powerful scope. Canada joined in the effort which will be financed cooperatively. France and Canada will put up roughly $20 million for construction costs. A nonprofit corporation will operate the facility. The three nations will have access to its use. The international scientific community will greatly benefit from this cooperation in peaceful scientific pursuits.

The entire Hawaii congressional delegation has worked toward the passage of this legislation. It is supported by the Department of State, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and the National Science Foundation. The Hawaii Chapter of the AFL-CIO Federation has expressed their approval of this project which will provide jobs for local labor in the construction of necessary access roads, support facilities and the foundation and structure of the telescope itself. I am gratified by the favorable reports of the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee.

This project deserves the support of the entire Congress. I thank the chairman for his prompt and favorable consideration of this measure and I urge my colleagues to pass this bill.

There has been substantial progress made in bringing about an agreement on how the three countries can cooperatively create and operate this important facility. Because of rising costs, speed of action can mean valuable savings on an expensive undertaking. Prompt congressional approval of this request will be in keeping with the admirable record of international cooperation and economy that the telescope project has produced to date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment is rejected, and the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to move to reconsider the votes by which both bills were passed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to reconsider the votes.

Mr. PASTORE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will come to order. Senators will take their seats.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, we will only be in session another 2 or 3 minutes.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield. Mr. PASTORE. The majority leader stated a little while ago that we were awaiting certain conference reports from the House of Representatives before we could adjourn sine die tomorrow, and that he was hopeful we might be able to do it by 3 o'clock in the afternoon. May I ask at this time, what are the conference reports that we are waiting for?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, the only matters that will come before the Senate tomorrow will be privileged matters, either messages from the House of Representatives or conference reports. In answer to the distinguished Senator's question, I cannot enumerate all the conference reports that are still out, but the conference report on the trade bill is still out and will be acted on in the House of Representatives beginning at 11 o'clock tomorrow. The social services conference report remains to be acted upon. The upholstery bill, to which a tax bill is attached, I believe it is S. 421, the conference report on that measure is still to be acted upon. The community services conference report is still to be acted upon. Other Senators may recall other conference reports, but those are the four main ones.

I really do not think we will have any problem getting out at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. As far as I am concerned, I will do everything I possibly can to discourage—and I can only discourage—any Senator from asking for the yeas and nays tomorrow. But I would hope we could have a workable quorum, at least up to 2 or 3 o'clock, if possible.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, every bill that has hit the calendar in the last 2 or 3 months or longer has been given an opportunity to have a hearing here on the Senate floor. I wonder if the distinguished majority leader would be willing to call up the very first bill on the calendar. It has been first on the calendar for at least 6 months.

It is a constitutional amendment banning the forced busing of schoolchildren for assignment by race, color, nationality, or religion.

I wonder if the distinguished majority leader will give that bill an opportunity to be voted on and give it a fighting chance to be considered by the House. There is surely no objection to considering that measure at this time. I wonder if the acting majority leader would be willing to call that bill up.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I can understand the concern of the distinguished Senator from Alabama with respect to the measure that he has called to our attention. As I say to the distinguished Senator in all seriousness, it would be impossible to get action on that measure if we stayed here from now until noon on January 3.

I must say, I favor the measure, but it would be impossible to do it, and I do not believe we ought to spend our time when such expenditure of valuable time would be futile.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand the position of the distinguished majority leader. I wish to assure him that the bill will be reintroduced in the next Congress and there might be some convenient place where it might be brought before the Senate for consideration. I am sure that the majority leader will cooperate with the Senator from Alabama in this regard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The joint leadership takes note of the Senator's suggestion. We hope that the distinguished Senator will have a very Merry Christmas and that, after the new session begins, we can again have a little conversation about the Senator's wishes.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished majority leader for his cooperation and sympathetic consideration, and for his assurance of support, may I also say.

THE TRADE BILL

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to inform the acting majority leader and the Senate, through its Presiding Officer, that we now have the conference report on the trade bill, H.R. 10710—but not the official papers on the bill. I urge the Senators, if they can find the time to do so, that they take a look at the number of Senate amendments that the House has agreed to.

In my judgment, Mr. President, this is a landmark situation. The House has agreed to 423 Senate amendments.

Mr. President, this is something that I have been contending for many, many years, that when the House sends us a good bill, we should not strike good legislative language from the House bill just to try to gain leverage in conference—to try to make them take Senate amendments. Also, they should consider our amendments in the same manner. If they have something good in their bills, I propose we keep it, and we hope that they will show us the same consideration.

I think it is worth noting that, this being one of the first or second times, Mr. Ullman has been acting chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means when we have met in conference, the House has shown that approach. I think it is a tribute to both bodies that on every Senate amendment in which the House could find merit, they took all of it or took it in part. I am grateful to the House of Representatives, its conferees, and the acting chairman, Mr. ULLMAN, in particular, for the cooperation and the thoughtful consideration they gave to the Senate amendments.

I also state, Mr. President, that in filing the conference report on the social service amendments, they agreed to most of the amendments, except mine—which of course I think was the best one in it. That is how it goes, sometimes.

Also, Mr. President, they agreed to all amendments except two on the tax bill that we sent to them, which, in my judgment, is also a hopeful sign.

We shall discuss these conference reports tomorrow. We do not have the official papers, but we do have the conference reports. The Senate can review them overnight.

ORDER FOR ROLL CALL VOTES TO OCCUR AFTER 12 NOON ON TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that if any roll calls be ordered prior to the hour of 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, there be no roll call votes prior to the hour 12 o'clock noon on tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROVISION FOR THE PRINTING OF THE PRAYERS OF THE HOUSE CHAPLAIN—HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 693

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on House Concurrent Resolution 693.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 693) providing for the printing of the prayers of the House Chaplain.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

HERBERT HOOVER

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 1418.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1418) to recognize the 50 years of extraordinary and selfless public service of Herbert Hoover, including his many great humanitarian endeavors, his chairmanship of two Commissions of the Organization of the Executive Branch, and his service as 31st President of the United States, and in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of birth on August 10, 1974, by providing grants to the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That (a) in order to establish an appropriate memorial to the late President Herbert Hoover, the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to make grants, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, to the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace, Stanford University, Stanford, California.

(b) No grant may be made under this Act for any fiscal year unless—

(1) the Secretary determines that the total of such grants for that year will not exceed the total amount of gifts, bequests, and devises of money, securities, and other property, made after the date of enactment of this Act, for that year for the benefit of the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace; and

(2) the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace furnishes to the Secretary such information at such times and in such manner as he may require.

(c) Grants made under this Act may be used for the construction of a new educational building to be used by the Hoover

Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace, and for the equipment of such building.

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that, if a facility constructed with the aid of any grant under this Act is used as an educational facility for twenty years following completion of such construction, the public benefit accruing to the United States from such use will equal in value the amount of such grant or grants. The period of twenty years after completion of such construction shall, therefore, be deemed to be the period of Federal interest in such facility for the purposes of this Act.

(b) If, within twenty years after completion of construction of an educational facility which has been constructed in part with a grant or grants under this Act—

(1) the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace (or its successor in title or possession) ceases or fails to be a nonprofit institution, or

(2) the facility ceases to be used as an educational facility, unless the Secretary determines that there is good cause for releasing the institution from its obligation, the United States shall be entitled to recover from such institution (or successor) an amount which bears to the then value of the facility the same ratio as the amount of such Federal grant or grants bore to the development cost of the facility (as determined by the Secretary) financed with the aid of such grant or grants. Such value shall be determined by agreement of the parties or by action brought in the United States district court for the district in which such facility is situated.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), no facility constructed with assistance under this Act shall ever be used for religious worship or a sectarian activity or for a school or department of divinity.

SEC. 3. The Comptroller General of the United States, or any of his duly authorized representatives, shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace that are pertinent to the grant received.

SEC. 4. The Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace shall, annually, prepare and furnish to the President and the Congress a report on the expenditure of funds received by the institution in the previous fiscal year during the period for which grants are made under this Act.

SEC. 5. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary for making grants in accordance with this Act amounts not to exceed $7,000,000. Funds appropriated pursuant to this Act shall be available without fiscal year limitation, for the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending five years after such date.

SEC. 6. Grants made pursuant to this Act shall be the sole Federal memorial to the late President Herbert Hoover.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to recognize the fifty years of extraordinary and selfless public service of Herbert Hoover, including his many great humanitarian endeavors, his chairmanship of two Commissions of the Organization of the Executive Branch, and his service as thirty-first President of the United States, and in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of his birth on August 10, 1974, by providing grants to the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace."

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to.

CONGRESS LOOKS TO THE FUTURE

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, it is customary for the Republican leader at the end of each session of Congress to submit to his colleagues a report on what has happened during the year. Today I submit such a report.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that this Republican report, entitled "Congress Looks to the Future" be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent that it be updated before the end of today's session in order that the record votes therein may be brought up to date and that any other statistical data mentioned be also updated as of the time today in which the updating occurs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUGH SCOTT. Mr. President, as I submit this minority report for the second session of the 93d Congress, I must first give credit to my good friend the distinguished majority leader, the Senator from Montana, Mr. MANSFIELD, and to the close and happy relationship he has established in carrying out our duties. He is the kind of modest, quiet individual who accomplishes much with seemingly very little effort. I am most grateful for everything he has done for me, and for all of our colleagues.

The assistant majority floor leader, the Senator from West Virginia, Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, has been a true whip as he has driven us to complete the Senate's business. While he has had to keep our noses to the grindstone—not always, I suspect, an easy thing to do—I, for one, am grateful in that along with my skinned nose I can also point to quite a lot accomplished in this Congress. Sadly, however, and despite the majority whip's efforts, there is a lot yet unaccomplished.

Among my own colleagues on the Republican side, I am as always deeply conscious of the inspired assistance rendered by the Republican whip, the sagacious and energetic Senator from Michigan, Mr. GRIFFIN. I owe sincere and personal gratitude also to the distinguished chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, the Senator from Texas, Mr. TOWER, for the vigorous and unselfish contribution he and that committee have made to the orderly processes of our Nation's business.

Likewise, I am indebted to our distinguished conference chairman, the Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. CORROW, and to the secretary of the conference, the distinguished Senator from Utah, Mr. BENNETT, both of whom are winding up long and magnificent careers in the Senate of the United States.

Along with them I must rank the senior Republican Senator, the beloved and incisive Senator from Vermont, Mr. AIKEN, who also brings to a close many years of admirable dedicated service.

I wish to express at this time also, Mr. President, the great appreciation of the distinguished assistant minority leader and myself for the continued cheerful, willing and effective help of those in our Whip system, beginning with the Senator from Vermont (Mr. STAFFORD) who is here today, and all of the other Senators who have volunteered services during this 93d Congress, because without them it would have been impossible to carry on the daily job of the Senate in an orderly and consequential manner.

I am also most grateful for the help of the White House Liaison Office headed by Mr. William Timmons and of the Senate Liaison from that office, Mr. Tom C. Korologos.

I regret that both of them are leaving government service, and I wish for them a very happy and successful future career. We look forward to the assistance, which we are in fact already getting, from Mr. Max Freidersdorf, the successor in the Liaison Office, and the Counselor to the President, Mr. Jack Marsh, who is in overall charge of that department of the Government, our former colleague in the other body.

At this time, as the 93d Congress draws to a close, there is a feeling of sadness in that we shall be bidding goodbye to a number of our colleagues who will not be with us next year. I want them to know that I speak for all Republican Senators and, in the largest sense surely for all our colleagues in this Chamber, in expressing regret that they will be leaving us and appreciation for their contributions to the U.S. Senate.

And finally, I am exceedingly grateful for the honor my colleagues have bestowed upon me in selecting me to serve as their floor leader. It goes without saying that without their cooperation, consideration, and helpfulness, any such job would have been an impossibility. I am proud of them, and of my association with them.

CONGRESS LOOKS TO THE FUTURE

The 2d session of the 93d Congress and the year 1974 are ending within a few days of one another—almost a dead heat, unfortunately. We have taken a long time to accomplish our annual legislative tasks. But, as they say, 1974 was a very long year.

We could hardly wish for a repetition of all that happened this year. But what was done in 1974 may very well dictate what can be done in 1975.

THE REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL PARTY

This could be labeled "The Minority Report," for Republicans are indisputably the minority party in Congress. In fact, we seem wedded to the role, having taken power as the majority but once in the 1940's, once in the 1950's, never in the 1960's, nor yet in the 1970's—which reminds me of Gilbert and Sullivan: "Never? No, never. Never? Well, hardly ever."

And yet for 14 of those years, we could not be considered the minority in the classic sense, nor could we Republicans even qualify for that interesting status, the "loyal opposition." For the Republican Party has won the Presidency in four of the last six Presidential elections.

Whatever may be the reason, Republicans have not had the in-depth strength nor breadth of appeal to win a congressional majority, even when our party's candidates have assembled a Presidential majority. Our party, responsible enough to head the Government, has yet to learn how to be responsive enough to run the Congress.

The result has been a peculiar, and oftentimes debilitating, standoff between President and Congress. The Democratic congressional majority has wholly controlled—as was to be expected—the committees, the supporting staffs, and the legislative schedule. But many of the great staples they work with—the administration budget, the related programs—come from a Republican executive.

The President speaks not only as Chief Executive of the Nation, but also as titular head of his party. Republican Senators and Representatives are pulled by a sense of party unity and loyalty to help, and cooperate with, our Republican President whenever possible. Yet Republican President and Republican Members of Congress alike labor with knowledge that the final form of all administration proposals can, through majority control, end up as the handiwork of the Democratic side of the aisle in House and Senate.

LOSS OF FAITH

Much has been written of the decline of the citizen-voter's confidence in political parties and elections as a means of "changing things;" of the loss of faith in government as the engine for improving our life on this earth.

Some of this disillusionment may result from the realization that men with public power can be absurd, inept, or corrupt even as in private matters. Or, that the golden promises so carelessly strewn about by our never-ending array of Presidential Senators are simply not collectible. This past year, these conclusions have come indisputably home.

But it may be that the peculiar standoff between Republican President and Democratic Congress for so many years has also contributed to the illusion that "nothing gets done."

Reinforcing this attitude—singing the same sad refrain—and the increasing multitudes of political analysts: reporters, columnists, TV-radio commentators, and editors of those ineffable "dateline Washington" newsletters—not always accurate even at the date of mailing. Indeed, we could wish that more of these very able men and women would seek public office. Perhaps some of the shortage of inspired leadership they so lament is due to their own modesty. If they are unable to overcome this homely virtue, the politician may become an endangered species, hunted down by thousands of critics hungry to pass judgment on his every movement.

THE CONGRESSIONAL PROFILE

The median has changed. Members have more widely varied backgrounds. They are younger, and the average length of service is lower. There have always been groups within each party—sometimes across party—formed around particular legislation, or the more enduring identity of interest. Today there are more visible, more highly organized ideological groups within each party in each House. What this presages for the future of the two-party system on Congress provides interesting conjecture.

December 19, 1974

CONGRESS: 1974

This 93d Congress, particularly in the 2d session, has done some unusual things: It consented to the appointment of a Vice President, who thereafter became President.

It has finally completed an unnecessarily long-winded process of considering the appointment of another Vice President, an act to be finally consummated, we expect, today.

It came very close to voting impeachment, and thereby trying a President. In so doing, it had to dust off and reexamine both impeachment and trial processes.

It persuaded a President to resign.

THE SENATE: 1974

Our preoccupation with the balance between Presidential and congressional powers became more evident in 1974 than during any other years in our recent history.

It gave needed stimulus for passage of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (P.L. 93-344), providing for a new Committee on the Budget, a nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office and new deadlines for submission of the budget. The act prescribed times for reporting of authorization and appropriations bills, and revised the Antideficiency Act to limit Presidential impoundment powers.

There is here potential for real improvement in Congress' exercise of its spending and tax powers. It could mean that authorization and appropriation bills will be reported out and acted on with dispatch, and within overall fiscal limits agreed upon. I emphasize "could," and I devoutly hope this expectation can be realized.

The procedures of this act are complicated. But the test will not so much resolve around the terms of the new law as around the resolve of Congress. We have before us the depressing history of the budget provisions of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. The appropriations time schedule required by that law has been far more honored by Congress in the breach than in the observance.

The 93d Congress is no exception. As of the first week in December 1974—5 months into fiscal year 1975—four appropriations bills had not yet become law. On some there had been almost no action, since authorization bills had not yet been agreed to. This is hardly a good omen for the successful working of the new Budget Act, or for Congress' reputation.

VOTING

On the other hand, the Senate continues to establish new records in the matter of voting. There may be a connection between overfrequent votes and legislative constipation. In 1973, 594 record votes were cast, and this year 543, as of December 19, 1974. Already we have broken the record for an entire Congress that stood for 90 years. Always keeping in mind that correlation does not mean causation, we might note the stock market seems to react negatively to Senate over-indulgence in record votes, having dropped by one-half during the 93d Congress. Or perhaps inflation in votes may have something to do with inflation in everything else, these days. Certainly many of these record votes were, by any reasonable standard, acts of vainglorious supererogation.

LEGISLATION

Last year the Senate chose to redefine its role in foreign policy with passage of the War Powers Act, which finally became law. This year, it continued the effort with the Executive Agreements Act (S. 3830).

The Watergate affair has now moved from Congress to final resolution in the courts. But it obviously inspired the Federal Election Campaign amendments enacted into law (P.L. 93-443), as well as the Freedom of Information Act which became law over a Presidential veto (P.L. 93-502).

Other important legislation which has been enacted would include the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (P.L. 93-383); amending the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (P.L. 93-380); the Minimum Wage Act (P.L. 93-255); the massive new aid for Urban Mass Transit (P.L. 93-503); and the Employee Security Benefit Act regulating private employee pension plans (P.L. 93-406).

Copyright reform (S. 1361) and codification of Federal Rules of Evidence (H.R. 5463) were both passed by the Senate. If enacted into law, they may have far-reaching effects, although the legislation did not attract much publicity.

CRISIS UPON CRISIS

The energy crisis was so constant a consideration in legislation proposed in committee and debated on the Senate floor as almost to defy description. Nevertheless, many of the basic questions have yet to be resolved. Quite frankly, the lines have been snarled by conflicting proposals of our many Presidential aspirants. It will continue to dominate a great part of foreign and domestic policy decisions in this most energy-intensive of nations.

This Congress has expended more energy than it has saved.

THE ECONOMY

The preoccupation of Washington in January 1974 was the Watergate affair. As of December it was the economy. The President and the Congress are trying to deal with the wicked triangular problem of inflation, recession, and energy shortage. It is not, however, an equilateral triangle. Inflation was and is the precursor of our other ills. Recession is, at least as of now, the sharpest priority of all.

Certainly, President Ford proved more than willing to cooperate with and listen to congressional leaders at the Economic Summit Conference. His program to deal with inflation and recession incorporated many suggestions from Senators and Representatives. The Home Purchase Assistance Act which became law (P.L. 93-449) shortly after the conference, the Trade Reform Act of 1974 (H.R. 10710) and the Emergency Unemployment Compensation Act of 1974 (H.R. 17597) are examples of legislative cooperation.

If it is true, as Daniel Webster noted, that inflation wars against industry, frugality and economy, then it is also true that inflation fosters the evil spirits of extravagance and speculation. But if inflation has been prominent in the news lately, we can derive some small comfort from the fact that it is not a uniquely 20th century phenomenon.

Plato, for example, lived through the monetary inflations of ancient Greece and decided exchange control was the answer.

The great inflation of the middle 14th century led King John the Good of France to devalue his currency fully 88 times.

Our own devaluation of 1934—one of the most important events of the 20th century—created low interest rates and an abundance of gold for over two decades. With the exception of wartime, we enjoyed relative stability up to the early 1960's.

But along came the Vietnam war, and the administration then in office did not want to raise taxes to pay for it. Instead, the Government simply created more money by increasing our money supply through increased borrowing on the open market. This not only dries up funds available to other borrowers—industry, homebuilders, small business—it also allows banks to use Government I O U's as reserves, thus encouraging greatly increased new loans and investments to flow into the economy. And as more and more money chases our supply of goods, the price of those goods rapidly increases.

From mid-1962 to 1966 we added to our money supply at a 3.8 percent average yearly rate.

From late 1966 to 1972 we added to our money supply at a 6 percent average yearly rate.

From 1972 to mid 1974 we added to our money supply at a 7.4 percent average yearly rate.

In short, we not only greatly increased our money supply by borrowing on the open market, but increased it faster than productivity could increase the supply of goods.

Presto. Inflation and recession.

THE FORD PROGRAM

In the meantime, inflation became a major problem not only in the United States but worldwide. In an effort to limit what has been described as the present "runaway" inflation, on October 8, 1974, President Ford presented to Congress an emergency economic program, containing five major proposals, of which four have a 1-year lifespan.

The President's proposals highlighted these principal items:

An increase in the investment tax credit from 7 to 10 percent, a $3 billion allocation of funds to purchase residential mortgages, a 5 percent 1-year surcharge on corporate and upper bracket individual income taxes, an additional 13-week extension of unemployment insurance, a public service employment program when the unemployment rate exceeds 6 percent, and a reduction in Federal expenditures in an attempt to keep initial outlays below $300 billion.

December 19, 1974

WHAT HAS BEEN TRIED?

In retrospect during the past few years—since 1968 in fact—every economist and every theory has had a day in court. Some proposals have been forced upon the administration by the Congress, some by labor, some by the press, some by industry. The fact is that since 1968 Republican administrations have patiently and successively adopted the theories of:

Prof. Milton Friedman's monetarism; Prof. John Maynard Keynes's fiscalism;

Prof. John Kenneth Galbraith's wage-price controls;

Prof. Paul Samuelson's dollar devaluation; and, finally, back to Prof. Adam Smith's laissez faire and the "old time religion" of cutting Government spending and balancing budgets. President Ford, aware of the foregoing, formed the "Economic Summit Conference" to solicit the best combination of ideas to deal with the situation that exists today. The resulting proposals were not hastily drafted. They had the benefit of the mistakes made in past years.

The program was proposed 2 months ago. Little has been enacted. As of December 16, the status of those items requiring Congressional action follows:

A SUMMARY OF THE PRESIDENT'S ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

FOOD

Remove remaining acreage limitations on rice, peanuts, and cotton.

(1) Peanut Act H.R. 15755 and H.R. 15757 (original administration); introduced 7/2/74; House Agriculture; subcommittee hearings held 7/9/74; informal meeting held week of 12/2/74 but nothing scheduled.

(2) Rice Act of 1974 H.R. 15263 (original administration); introduced 6/6/74; House Agriculture; reported out 8/21/74; failed to pass House 12/17/74.

Rice Act S. 4121 (original administration); introduced 10/10/74; Senate Agriculture; subcommittee hearings held 12/3/74; nothing else scheduled.

(3) Cotton Act S. 4161 (original administration); introduced 11/18/74; Senate Agriculture; nothing scheduled.

Provide flexibility to use food to help our foreign friends and to provide humanitarian help for those who are hungry.

H.R. 16901, Agriculture Appropriations, amends P.L. 480 to provide: (1) priority to most needy countries; (2) priority given high nutritional foods; amendment passed Senate by Voice vote 11/25/74; but was dropped in conference with House.

H.R. 16901 passed Senate 11/25/74 with above amendment; in conference 12/4/74; conference report filed in House 12/11/74 with above Senate amendment deleted; House agreed to conference report 12/12/74; Senate agreed to conference report 12/17/74; cleared for White House action; House also received Executive Communication #2973 on 11/18/74 dealing with availability criteria but not yet drafted into bill form.

ENERGY

Seek competitive pricing of natural gas supplies.

S. 2048 (original administration); introduced 6/21/73; Senate Commerce; working on drafting clean bill; hearings held 12/4 and 12/5/74; nothing scheduled.

H.R. 7507 (original administration); introduced 5/3/74; House Interstate; no action

S. 4113 and S. 4114 (administration); introduced 10/9/74; Senate ordered held at desk.

Submit within 40 days a package of budget deferrals and rescissions to meet this goal.

H.R. 17505 (administration); to rescind certain budget authority recommended in Presidential messages of September 20, October 4, and November 13; introduced 11/25/74; House Appropriations; reported 11/26/74; passed House 12/4/74; passed Senate 12/10/74; cleared for White House action.

S. Res. 446 disapproving proposed deferral as requested in message of October 4; reported by Senate Appropriations 12/17/74.

S. Res. 455-S. Res. 462 disapproving proposed deferral as requested in message of November 26; ordered held at desk 12/11/74.

WHAT DO REPUBLICAN SENATORS PROPOSE?

On December 11, 1974, the United States Senate Republican Conference adopted the following policy statement:

ECONOMIC POLICY STATEMENT AND INITIATIVES: U.S. SENATE REPUBLICAN CONFERENCE

The urgent needs of an economy marked by severe economic strains require urgent consideration and action. Therefore, the Republican Conference of the United States Senate endorses the following specific proposals to supplement and reinforce the President's economic program. These represent our effort to respond quickly and responsibly to the President's request to supplement his economic program, and should receive immediate attention by the Congress and the Executive Branch. While we do suggest certain strong steps to ease the burden imposed on those least able to sustain the current hardships, we hasten to note that no remedy will be painless. To the contrary, it will require a sacrifice on the part of all Americans. We recommend immediate action in the following areas:

RECOMMENDATION I—JOBS AND EMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE

Increased employment and unemployment assistance through public service jobs and an emergency jobs program, job-impact determinations on all rescissions and proposals in the Federal Budget, a job stimulating tax credit, and increases in unemployment compensation.

RECOMMENDATION II—ENERGY

An aggressive attack on wasteful energy consumption while simultaneously increasing energy production.

RECOMMENDATION III—FOOD

Food production at maximum levels should be encouraged through free market channels so that we may meet present needs domestically, demands for U.S. products abroad, and obligations in cases of famine or humanitarian requirements at home and abroad.

RECOMMENDATION IV—PRODUCTIVITY

Stimulation of productivity by revamping the U.S. Productivity Commission.

Details of the foregoing and a statement of general economic policies follows:

RECOMMENDATION I

JOBS AND EMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE

We consider a vigorous short-term program for the expansion of job opportunities in private enterprise and the provision of additional jobs in the public sector—coupled also with extended unemployment compensation benefits—an immediate objective of the highest priority. We recommend the following four-point jobs program:

1. Public Service Jobs—New Legislation to provide for an estimated 500,000 transitional jobs during calendar year 1975 in such vital public service fields as education, environmental quality, health care, energy conservation and community improvement. The job funds should be allocated on a regional or areas basis, utilizing state and local government prime sponsors designated under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1973. These funds are designed to provide jobs and in many cases will replace welfare payments.

2. Emergency Jobs Program—We propose within the framework of the successful EDA program of grants and loans to public and private bodies, a one year, $1 billion emergency fund to stimulate job opportunities in areas experiencing highest levels of unemployment. Funds would be available to supplement ongoing Federal projects selected for their job effectiveness through a review process, and provide initial loan and grant funds for job-creating activities.

3. Job-Stimulating Tax Credit—To foster the creation of new job opportunities in the private sector, we urge a job-stimulating and job-training human investment tax credit, similar to the Administration's proposed modification of the investment tax credit.

4. Expanded Unemployment Benefits—Finally, a temporary program of federally-financed income replacement payments for unemployed workers should be established. We recommend reenactment of the Emergency Unemployment Compensation Act of 1971, making it effective this January; modification of the existing Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Program to make it apply nationally in January; and a supplemental program of up to 26 weeks of benefits for unemployed workers in high unemployment areas who are ineligible under the existing unemployment insurance system.

In addition, we suggest two technical changes in procedures:

1. Labor-Productive Budgeting—We ask the Executive Branch to develop promptly, in cooperation with the Appropriations Committees of Congress, a labor-intensive index as an analytical tool to accompany all budget proposals. This index would relate jobs involved to funds to be expended and would apply all budgetary measures proposed by the Executive Branch (including amendments, rescissions and deferrals). Such measuring of "jobs impact" would portray the employment effect of each proposed action in the context of the current economy.

2. New Federal Program Priorities—We urge the President to direct each federal agency operating a grant-in-aid program to inventory and report within 30 days all pending projects, identifying those which can be quickly implemented, are labor-intensive, and are in areas of high unemployment. Opportunities for high-labor, energy-saving, productive projects abound in projects already available under existing authority for highways, mass transit, waste treatment, water resources, public buildings, community development and the regular economic development programs.

RECOMMENDATION II

ENERGY

Because of the critical economic role that energy plays, both within our own country and in our relations with other nations, a comprehensive domestic and international approach to meeting energy problems in a realistic and workable manner is needed. Domestically we must pursue an aggressive attack on wasteful energy consumption while simultaneously increasing energy production.

We support the following action programs:

ENERGY CONSERVATION MEASURES

Enactment of strict mandatory conservation authority capable of significantly reducing consumption;

Encourage prompt Congressional consideration of a tax on excessive energy consumption, including the possibility of a variable rate tax based on BTUs, and explore positive incentives to encourage the purchase of U.S. produced automobiles with greater fuel efficiency;

Expand federal programs related to increasing the efficiency of energy uses;

Require that an impact study on energy consumption of planned federal programs be prepared, published and reviewed prior to program implementations;

Initiate federal examination of utility rate structures, including peak load pricing, and other energy pricing policies with a view toward eliminating pricing inequities and inefficiencies in energy use;

Take positive steps to bring about bona fide enforcement by the States of the 55 mile per hour speed limit;

Formulate mandatory standards for insulation of new buildings, explore a program of tax incentives for improved insulation of existing structures, and promulgate mandatory temperature standards in all buildings federally financed or constructed;

Reduce oil imports by at least one million barrels per day during 1975 with an intermediate term goal of a two million barrels per day reduction; and Closely monitor foreign investment in U.S. energy exploration, production and development.

ACTIONS TO INCREASE DOMESTIC ENERGY PRODUCTION

Expand outer continental shelf exploration and development with adequate environmental safeguards;

Lift such constraints as limit exploration and production of natural gas and other fossil fuels, with appropriate competitive safeguards;

Implement on a crash basis new programs to develop alternative energy sources such as nuclear power, coal liquefaction and gasification, syn crude, solar and geothermal;

Support prompt approval and construction of facilities to transport Alaska natural gas to the lower forty-eight states;

Support international energy efforts to assure stable sources of foreign oil at reasonable prices;

Promptly inventory recoverable energy reserves on federal lands; and Enact a windfall profits tax with a credit for reasonable capital investment for domestic exploration, development and delivery of new energy supplies to assure that windfall profits generated by recent enormous increases in the prices of energy are promptly redirected toward increased domestic energy production.

RECOMMENDATION III

FOOD

Food costs are an important aspect of the current inflation and have presented serious problems for most consumers.

Food production at maximum levels should be encouraged through free market channels so that we may meet domestic needs, demands for U.S. products abroad, and requirements in case of famine or humanitarian requirements at home and abroad.

We must support those policies which provide adequate incentives to the farmer for production within the United States of our needed food supplies and recognize the current real distress of certain segments of food production such as livestock and dairy farmers. Solutions to these problems would be a major force in assuring ample supplies at reasonable prices.

We recognize the vital importance of agricultural exports to farm income and our balance of payments in enabling us to pay for oil and other vital imports. Exports should continue to be monitored to assure an equitable balance between our domestic supply needs, the need for markets for agricultural products, and the need to maximize our export earnings and provide assistance abroad where needed.

For the benefit of the consumer and the producer we favor intensified study of off-farm costs that go into the final price of food. We also favor expanded consumer services to the buyer on what constitutes a nutritious diet at a reasonable price to help the consumer pick the best nutritional value for his dollar, and on market practices generally.

RECOMMENDATION IV PRODUCTIVITY COMMISSION

Increasing the productivity of American industry and labor is critical in order to raise output, combat inflation, and provide additional real purchasing power for the nation's workers. The National Commission on Productivity, which is now charged with promoting our productivity performance, must be revamped. It is at present inadequately funded to undertake the enormous task of reviewing the country's entire potential productivity capacity and removing the obstacles to improving it. Its funding should be increased to $10 million for fiscal year 1975. At the same time, the Commission should concentrate on creating joint labor/management committees in production and service facilities, and in state and local governments throughout the country, and seek such additional funds as are necessary to implement fully this objective. To achieve this, the Productivity Commission should establish a strong substructure of field offices in each Federal regional center.

GENERAL ECONOMIC POLICIES

We have made four specific proposals to supplement and reinforce the President's economic package. Nevertheless, there are other important economic policies which we believe should be pursued to maintain the forward thrust of American economy. In order to achieve the broader objectives that we seek we encourage the following:

Monetary policy should pursue an orderly and moderate growth in monetary aggregates as an important means of relieving inflationary pressures brought on by an overly expansive monetary policy and of avoiding excessively high interest rates which eventually and inevitably follow in its wake. Monetary policy has been forced to bear an undue burden of restraining our inflationary tendencies because other fiscal restraints have not been exercised. We would hope that monetary policy could be appropriately eased as other fiscal measures become effective.

Fiscal and tax policy should continue to seek to bring the budget under control and to avoid unjustified and continuing deficits, which are a major source of inflationary pressure and credit market tensions. To enable us to bring the Federal budget closer to balance, reduce its inflationary effect, and, on a progressive basis where possible, pay as we go for anti-recessionary measures, every effort should be made to identify appropriate areas of taxation and other sources of revenue. A responsible fiscal policy will represent an earnest of good faith on behalf of the Federal Government to ameliorate our current inflationary tendencies.

Tax reform should be dealt with as a high priority by the new Congress with a view to an equitable, comprehensive reform in all taxes, most importantly social security taxes, tax relief for the elderly and for low and moderate income taxpayers, in an inflationary period. Tax reform to avoid escape of fair tax payments, increase investment, augment capital formation and spur the economy is necessary to increase employment at this time.

Trade should be stimulated through immediate enactment this year of the Trade Reform Act without extraneous amendments to enable the President to negotiate with respect to restrictive tariff and nontariff barriers to foreign trade and thus to enhance the flow of trade with all our trading partners.

Capital investment and capital formation are critically important to modernization, competition and productivity, and will not only help pull the economy out of recession but also moderate inflation. We should give prompt consideration to encourage new incentives for adequate savings flows and the necessary government incentives to provide the required infusions of capital to troubled industries; and to provide for small business which cannot, under present conditions and on fair terms, either borrow money or raise equity capital from other sources.

Wage and price stability should continue to be sought through the discipline of the marketplace and the fiscal policies herein endorsed. Congress and the Executive share the responsibility to make the marketplace work more effectively and efficiently, but we expressly reject the concept of delegation of discretionary wage-price control authority to the Executive Branch at any time. Should the Congress determine it is necessary to impose controls, the Congress should bear the responsibility for specifying and implementing them when and where needed.

Regulatory review of existing Federal regulatory agencies should be undertaken by Congress to improve current practices. Practices or agencies which unnecessarily restrict competition, cause undue red-tape and result in inflationary pressures should be eliminated.

Anti-trust policy should continue to receive emphasis as a means of improving the functioning of the marketplace and removing anti-competitive practices. Congress should re-examine the significant changes which have occurred since our anti-trust statutes were conceived three-quarters of a century ago, with emphasis on the manner in which the Federal Government (1) identifies anti-competitive influences, (2) initiates anti-trust prosecution of instances of economic restraint, and (3) defines the legal relief available to effect adequate competition for all sectors of the economy.

Housing is recognized as one of the weakest sectors of our economy today, and one of the most vulnerable. We pledge ourselves to its significant improvement. Both private and public housing should, however, soon begin to experience recovery due to reduction in inflationary pressures and mortgage interest rates, to the roughly $20 billion in Federal assistance recently made available, and to the increased availability of building materials. We strongly urge the full utilization of these programs.

SOCIAL AND PHILOSOPHIC CHANGE

To paraphrase Schumpeter, the transformation of social orders, one into another, is an incessant process but in itself a very slow one. To an observer who studies a moderate span of "quiet" time, it may well seem as if the social framework he beholds did not change at all. But it does change, and sometimes very rapidly, if one only takes a long view.

Much the same may be said of the decade of the 1960's. A cogent economic program would consist of keeping monetary policy focused on the long-term problem of inflation, of correcting capital formation problems and other distortions that have helped create the current dilemma, and—as the Wall Street Journal notes—of stimulating the economy by transferring resources from the public sector to the infinitely more productive private sector.

A MORAL ISSUE

But, as Mr. Solzhenitsyn says, inflation is a moral issue; and here the distinction between public and private economies may become blurred. The London Economist notes the Communists' claim that this particular problem afflicts them less than it does the west:

Week after week Moscow radio cites the raging inflation in the West as proof of the failure of the mixed economy; steady prices in Communist shops, it says, are a clear vindication of Karl Marx.

Marx aside, the Economist notes, the claim is fair enough—up to a point. The Soviet retail price index has remained unchanged for 7 years—fares on the Moscow underground are still the same as they were in 1935 when it was built—and in China officially recorded local prices have risen hardly at all over two decades. But is this the same as licking inflation?

The Economist says:

Not quite, one thing the Russians leave out of their index (and the Chinese would leave out if they had an index) are the prices in the relatively free markets where peasants from collective farms sell the produce of their private plots. The Russians explain that the free market contributes only 2½ percent of their total retail turnover, so that its fluctuations do not matter very much. But the official index also ignores numerous hidden price increases. The standard method of disguising price rises is to label products "new" or "improved." When the GAZ-21 model of the Volga car was replaced by its not very different successor, GAZ-24, for example, the price jumped by two-thirds; from $3,197 to $5,378.

The fact is that the whole world has been—and still is—undergoing inflation. This is true whether under the subtle rules of a free society or the harsh rules of a totally controlled one. Perhaps the best way of explaining my private and personal view of the immensely complicated relation between inflation on the one hand and politics on the other, is this small vignette from Gilbert King, once director of research for IBM:

Quite a different approach in the life sciences is the study of living nervous systems to see how they differ from machines in processing information. Because of its simplicity, the crayfish has been a valuable subject for experiment. Thus far, little has been learned that can be applied to computer technology, although the computer has aided biologists considerably in understanding the crayfish!

INTERNATIONAL POLITICS

Our hard choices have changed but little in a year. We are still trying to define détente with the chief oligarchy in the world, the Soviet Union; and with the latter's chief rival for that title, China. We are still trying to prevent a renewal of war between the Arab countries and Israel. We are still trying to hold the NATO alliance together. We are still trying to achieve some stability in Southeast Asia. We are still trying to work out a counter to the economic squeeze resulting from the pricing policies of oil-surplus nations, which are burdened neither by large populations nor world responsibilities. We are still trying to feed hungry nations. Here the litany stops, incomplete though it is, lest we drop the reins and go fishing for the rest of the century.

It is just this question of attitude that may be the most important factor of all. The American peace-keeping burden is heavy. There is no end in sight. It brings few cheers and precious little gratitude from the world we live in—nor is there another free-world nation waiting in the wings with strength enough to take over this burden.

It is with these unpalatable facts in mind that we measure détente and the most recent outline of a new SALT agreement arrived at in that most improbable of places, Vladivostok. And let us keep in mind that the hard details have yet to be worked out in actual negotiations next year.

The meeting did provide the first face-to-face encounter between a new President and an old Bolshevik.

It answered in the affirmative the question as to continuity in U.S. foreign policy.

The statement issued as to Mideast policy was sufficiently balanced as to be acceptable both to Syria and Israel.

What then should be our attitude toward the most important result of Vladivostok, the agreement to put a ceiling, a "cap" in President Ford's words, on nuclear arms production? Its critics argue the agreement places force limitations dangerously high, requires more rather than less military spending, and gives the Russian missile force an undeserved lead in the nuclear payload.

President Ford and Secretary of State Kissinger maintain that rejection by Congress would require $5 billion to $10 billion extra for more strategic weapons to keep American muscle intact while new negotiations are attempted.

Rather than being a sellout to Russia, Secretary Kissinger said the SALT II agreement came about only because the Soviets made major and unexpected concessions:

First. They stopped demanding that U.S.-European-based warheads be counted in the strategic totals;

Second. They dropped demands for extra warheads to offset the nuclear forces of Britain and France; and Third. They dropped demands for "geographical compensation," in terms of additional warheads because China's nuclear forces can hit Soviet targets but not the United States.

Détente is not an arrangement whereby one big guy tells a little guy to shut up and sit in the corner. Rather it is an effort to reduce the possibility of war between two potentially hostile world powers with equal capacity to destroy each other and therefore the world. Negotiations are difficult. Constructive results are measured in cautious inches. The armed guards remain at ready.

Nevertheless, some progress has been made. Of the 105 treaties and international agreements with the Soviet Union since the United States established relations in 1933, 58 were concluded between January 1969 and May 1974. Forty-one of them were signed in the last 2 years.

I do not deny—rather I strongly support—Congress insistence on the fullest information as to any and all such agreements. We have the right and responsibility to advise and consent on such matters.

I would insist we exercise such responsibility in the best sense of that word, setting aside partisanship and personal ambition in our quest to maintain an honorable peace in the years ahead.

Not all the news from home and abroad is bad. Thus we cite two treaties ratified by the Senate but 2 days ago. They are outgrowths of Nixon administration initiatives to control chemical and biological warfare, begun in 1970 with our unilateral renunciation of biological warfare and destruction of all U.S. germ weapon stockpiles.

The first treaty, the Geneva Protocol of 1925 prohibiting the use of chemical and bacteriological warfare, was initiated by the United States that same year but withdrawn and not resubmitted to the Senate until 1970. Ratification means that the principal military powers of the world have renounced first use in war of chemical or germ weapons.

The second treaty ratified was the 1972 Convention on the Prohibition of Development, Production, and Stockpiling of Bacteriological and Toxin Weapons; and On Their Destruction. Our approval will provide real impetus for the final ban of all chemical weapons.

CONCLUSION

The tragic confrontation between the White House and Capitol Hill has been followed, since August, by the efforts of a new President to reestablish practical, constructive working relationships with the House and Senate. Much will be done in the way of restoring public confidence if this effort is perceived as successful.

Republican Senators have made considerable contribution to the legislative accomplishments of the 93d Congress. They have, through their Conference, urged economic policies to supplement those already proposed by the President. They have been candid in expressing opposition as well. The hope of the President and Republican Senators was that Congress would take action immediately on inflation and recession. Apparently the Democratic majority would rather bask in the headlines engendered by their Kansas City Caucus and by their reactionary return to "King Caucus" in the House, than address themselves to the needs of the Nation as of December 1974. So be it.

The 94th Congress will have a top-heavy Democratic majority in both Chambers. Though our ranks are diminished, the Republican responsibility will be even greater. The history of representative government shows that an obese majority first considers itself under direct instruction from the Almighty, and thereafter wanders into polytheistic disputations.

It is a truism that the American voter has always appreciated the need for healthy two-party competition as part of our system of checks and balances. Republican Senators and Representatives must take that abstraction and prove in the concrete we are the party providing such competition. We will cooperate constructively. We will also police and audit the big majority lest they confuse themselves with Big Brother.

This is still the land of political opportunity. The late great Walter Lippmann noted, after the Democratic landslide in 1964, that the country was "in no danger of having a one-party system," because the minority "always revives in a free country and we are a free country."

Let us make the most of this freedom for constructive opposition to the huge Democratic majority in Congress.

Finally, let us remember that President Ford was "one of ours" for 25 honorable, successful years in the House. There can be no question as to the sincerity of his intentions.

Let us be equal in the sincerity of our response.

SENATE ACCOMPLISHMENTS IN THE 93D CONGRESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the distinguished majority leader (Mr. MANSFIELD) concerning Senate accomplishments of the 93d Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that various extraneous pieces be included therewith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent further that at the close of today, such additional information as is required to make the statements all-inclusive of today's session as well be included therewith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. President, as has been customary in the past, I ask unanimous consent that the statement, report, and related documents of Mr. MANSFIELD be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MIKE MANSFIELD SENATE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE 93D CONGRESS

The 93d Congress will adjourn sine die on tomorrow. When we convened in January, 1973, many of us were discouraged and dispirited by the 1972 Presidential election results and the prospect of an even more powerful Executive branch headed by a President and Vice President who won reelection by one of the widest margins in history. There was unanimous concern about the increasing imbalance of power between the legislative and executive branches of government. This concern, however, fostered unprecedented determination and exceptional cooperation among Senators to halt a further erosion of power.

In this atmosphere of concern for the Constitutional structure of the government, the majority conference of the Senate endorsed a leadership statement of purpose and objectives for the 93d Congress calling on the Senate to move immediately to reassert the coequal role of the legislative branch in the government of the United States. It called for action on a number of specific issues which ranged from ending the involvement in Indochina to the investigation of the Watergate affair and related matters arising out of the political campaign of 1972.

Listed below are these 20 objectives as outlined in early 1973 along with brief reference to actions taken with regard to the objective. (See exhibit 1.)

An examination of this list indicates that considerable Congressional effort has been expended toward their achievement.

Among the specific goals set by the Democratic Conference in 1973 was prompt passage of a number of bills on which the Senate had already spent many hours. It asked for immediate repassage of those twelve bills pocket vetoed by President Nixon after Congress adjourned in 1972. All of the major bills on this list have now become public law or have been cleared for the President. One of these measures, vocational rehabilitation, was vetoed three times before becoming law. (See Exhibit 2.)

A recap of Senate goals, as seen in early 1974, by the Majority Leader was presented to the nation on television at the beginning of the second session. These twenty objectives are listed below. (See Exhibit 4.)

A quick look at this list indicates that progress has been made in various areas. We have fallen short on only a few items—notably with regard to passage of national health insurance, comprehensive tax reform and energy related legislation—all matters of priority concern for the 94th Congress. However, with regard to the single most important issue involving the Constitutional structure of the government, we have been able to reverse the diminishing role of the legislative branch and to reassert its Constitutional authorities with regard to the impoundment of appropriations, control over the budget and the waging of war. Certainly, there exists today a more equal balance of power.

The 93d Congress may be remembered for the Watergate hearings which turned public attention to Watergate matters and the abuses of power in the government. The nation owes special thanks to Senator Ervin and the other members of the special committee for this accomplishment. However, members of the 93d Congress carried out other, less publicized, legislative responsibilities with distinction. Indeed, the legislative branch became the rock of the Nation at a time when the executive branch was seized in a whirlwind of disclosures, denials, dismissals, indictments and resignations of even the Vice President and finally the President. No Congress preoccupied with one issue alone could have made the legislative achievements of the 93d Congress. It enacted numerous important measures which had been in the legislative process for several years. They include:

War Powers resolution which prohibits the President from stationing troops overseas for more than 60 days without Congressional approval. President Nixon vetoed this measure but it became law after both Houses overrode his veto in early 1973.

Budget Reform and Impoundment Control Act which established a joint Congressional budget committee to give Congress better control over the budget and to clarify Presidential and Congressional authority with regard to the impoundment of appropriated funds. The President can no longer refuse to spend appropriations without Congressional approval. Nor can he postpone expenditure of appropriations if Congress disapproves.

Private Pension Plan Reform which assures that private pension plans will be more equitable and beneficial to all employees and that millions of Americans will not lose their pension benefits through mismanagement.

Campaign Financing and Reform Act which provides $20 million in public financing to major Presidential candidates and sets limits on campaign spending and contributions.

Strip mining controls which sets Federal standards for the State regulation of surface mining operations in order to keep such operations from permanently scarring the land, and, indeed, the lives of our people.

Minimum Wage Increase which had not been changed in 8 years. This act which was vetoed in the 92d Congress extends coverage to several million more American workers.

Trade bill which seeks to promote the development of an open, non-discriminatory and fair world economic system, and to stimulate the economic growth of the United States.

The Congress enacted other important legislation with regard to major revisions of the agricultural program, housing assistance programs and aid to elementary and secondary schools.

For the first time, it enacted special energy appropriations. It established an Energy Research and Development Administration and authorized twenty billion dollars over the next decade for nonnuclear energy research and development. The 93d Congress was fortunate to have leaders such as Senators Jackson and Randolph who have been in the forefront in the field of energy.

Other Senate-passed bills of widespread consequence include D.C. home rule, deep-water ports regulation, Vietnam veterans educational benefits, increases in social security, SSI and railroad retirement benefits, liberalization and extension of unemployment compensation benefits, emergency jobs program, preservation of the Watergate tapes, Senate confirmation of future OMB directors, national emergencies termination, privacy protection to list a few.

This year the Senate has broken the record on the total number of rollcall votes cast during a Congress which was set in the 47th Congress. During that Congress (1881-83), 986 record votes were cast. Thus far, 1,127 record votes have been cast in the 93d Congress. Rollcall votes are a measure of time expended and not always for useful purposes, notwithstanding the scorecards which are maintained and the snap judgments of performance which emerge from them. I hope that in the coming 94th Congress, a little more discretion will be exercised in the use of this parliamentary mechanism.

This year, the Senate has passed over 800 measures, ratified 9 treaties, and confirmed over 64,000 nominations. 280 measures have become public law and many more have become private law.

At the end of a long and productive Congress, I wish to thank the able assistant majority leaders, the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Robert C. Byrd), who gives unstintingly of his time and talent to the orderly functioning of the Senate. I wish to express special thanks and appreciation for his outstanding leadership throughout 1973 and 1974 and particularly during my absence on official business this month.

I also wish to thank the distinguished Minority Leader (Mr. Hugh Scott) and his capable assistant Senator Griffin for their understanding, accommodation and cooperation. I am grateful to the Republican leadership for their readiness to work with the Majority leadership to make the Senate function at its best.

To all Senators, I express by gratitude for their understanding, my appreciation for their hard work, and my profound respect for their courage and determination to carry out their responsibilities to the Nation.

I ask unanimous consent that the documentation to which I have referred during my remarks and the Senate legislative activity report and index which is prepared by the staff of the Democratic Policy Committee be inserted in the Record at this point.

EXHIBIT 1.—SENATE OBJECTIVES, 1973, AS OUTLINED IN JANUARY 3, 1973

1. Reinforcement of Constitution's checks and balances and reassertion of legislative role, PL 93-344, PL 93-148.
2. End of war in Indochina, PL 93-50, PL 93-189.
3. Cooperation with House, monthly leadership meetings.
4. Coordination with Democratic Governors, periodic meetings.
5. Spending Ceiling set by Congress, PL 93-34.

6. Computerization and Access to Material in Budget, PL 93-344.

7. Clarification of the Impoundment of Funds Practice, PL 93-344.

8. Reduction of Defense Spending, PL 93-437, PL 93-238.

9. Closing of Overseas Bases.

10. Cutting of the size of the Federal Bureaucracy.

11. Reorganization of the Federal Government, PL 93-438.

12. Quick Disposal of Priority Legislation, including 1973 vetoes, only two out of twenty-eight never passed Senate.

13. Need for Health Insurance and Welfare Reform, H.R. 17045.

14. Reform of Campaign Financing Law, PL 93-443.

15. Investigation of Watergate Bugging and Other Practices, S. Res. 60, Watergate hearings.

16. End of FBI Dossiers on Congressmen—Watergate hearings led to Justice Dept. assurances that such a practice would be discontinued.

17. Insurance of Freedom of Speech for the Press, examined by Cte. during consideration of H.R. 5463.

18. Reform of Senate Rules, S. Res. 69.

19. Policy Committee to Delineate Party Positions, over 20 resolutions agreed to.

20. Clarification of the Use of Executive Privilege, Majority agreement to get commitment from all appointees regarding willingness to testify before confirmation.

EXHIBIT 3

REMARKS OF SENATOR MIKE MANSFIELD AT THE DEMOCRATIC CONFERENCE, JANUARY 3, 1973

We meet, today, with a new majority. We meet with new responsibilities and a new mandate.

The same electorate that endorsed the President increased the Democratic majority in the Senate by two votes. If the re-elected Members (Senators Sparkman, McClellan, Mondale, Eastland, Metcalf, McIntyre and Randolph), and the Senators-elect (Senators Abourezk (S.D.), Biden (Del.), Clark (Iowa), Haskell (Colo.), Hathaway (Me.), Huddleston (Ky.), Johnston (La.), and Nunn (Ga.)) will stand, the Conference would appreciate the opportunity and the privilege of congratulating them en bloc.

In my judgment, the vote for each of these Senators in November was cast for them as individuals. Each speaks with unique ideological and regional accents. Each has a sensitivity to a particular constituency. Nothing I may say, today, is intended to detract from that basic fact of victory in this or any other free election. Collectively, however, these Senators are representative of the Democratic Party. They reflect the strength of a unified political identity in the midst of ideological diversity, of a party that excludes no sector of the nation, nor any group of Americans.

What I have to say now, I say with all due respect and affection for our distinguished colleague from South Dakota. (And if I may digress for a moment, I would note that not a single Member of the Democratic Majority in the Senate of the 92nd Congress—south, north, east or west—defected to the Republican Presidential candidate in November.) Notwithstanding the outcome of the November election, it should be emphasized that, as a Senator from South Dakota, George McGovern shares the mandate which the electorate has given to the Senate Majority. I have every confidence that we can expect of him a vigorous contribution in its pursuit.

The recent election tells us something of what the people of the nation expect of the Senate. If there is one mandate to us above all others, it is to exercise our separate and distinct constitutional role in the operation of the Federal government. The people have not chosen to be governed by one branch of government alone. They have not asked for government by a single party. Rather, they have called for a reinforcement of the Constitution's checks and balances. This Democratic Conference must strive to provide that reinforcement. The people have asked of us an independent contribution to the nation's policies. To make that contribution is more than our prerogative, it is our obligation.

An independent Senate does not equate with an obstructionist Senate. Insofar as the Leadership is concerned, the Senate will not be at loggerheads with the President, personally, with his party, or his Administration. The Senate will give most respectful attention to the President's words, his program and his appointments. Every President deserves that courtesy. During the period in which you have entrusted me with the leadership, every President has had that courtesy.

In a similar vein, the rights of the Republican Minority in the Senate will be fully sustained by the Majority Leadership and I anticipate the cooperation of the minority leadership in the operation of the Senate. I would say to the Minority, however, no less than to the Majority, that the Senate must be prepared to proceed in its own way. When conscience so dictates, we must seek to initiate and advance public programs from the Senate and, as indicated, to revise proposals of the Executive Branch.

It is my expectation that the House of Representatives will join in this approach. To that end, the Senate Leadership will seek to establish close and continuing liaison with that of the House. Looking to the needs of the entire nation, moreover, the Leadership will put out new lines of communication to the Governors Conference, notably to its Democratic Members, as well as to the National Democratic Party. We have much to learn from these sources about conditions in the nation. Their contribution can help to improve the design of federal activity to meet more effectively the needs of all States.

There is no greater national need than the termination, forthwith, of our involvement in the war in Viet Nam. This Conference has been in the vanguard in seeking a legislative contribution to rapid withdrawal from that ill-starred, misbegotten conflict. The Majority Conference has resolved overwhelmingly to that effect. Members have voted on the Senate floor, preponderantly, to that effect.

Nevertheless, the war is still with us. Notwithstanding intermittent lulls and negotiations, the prisoners of war remain prisoners and their numbers grow with each renewal of the bombing. The fact is that not a single prisoner has been released to date by our policies; the handful who have come home have done so in consequence of gestures from Hanoi. The recoverable missing in action have yet to be recovered and their numbers grow. Americans still die in twos and threes and plane-loads. Asians die by the hundreds and thousands. The fires of an enduring hostility are fed by unending conflict. We are in the process of leaving a heritage of hate in Southeast Asia to our children and our children's children. And for what?

With the election behind us, I most respectfully request every Member of the Conference to examine his position and his conscience once again on the question of Viet Nam. I do not know whether there is a legislative route to the end of this bloody travesty. I do know that the time is long since past when we can take shelter in a claim of legislative impotence. We cannot dismiss our own responsibility by deference to the President's. It is true that the President can still the guns of the nation in Viet Nam and bring about the complete withdrawal of our forces by a stroke of the pen. It is equally true that the Congress cannot do so. Nevertheless, Congress does have a responsibility. We are supplying the funds. We are supplying the men. So until the war ends, the effort must be made and made again and again. The Executive Branch has failed to make peace by negotiation. It has failed to make peace by elaborating the war first into Cambodia, then into Laos and, this year, with blockade and renewed bombing, into North Viet Nam. The effort to salvage a shred of face from a senseless war has succeeded only in spreading further devastation and clouding this nation's reputation.

It remains for the Congress to seek to bring about complete disengagement. We have no choice but to pursue this course. I urge every Member of this caucus to act in concert with Republican Senators, by resolution or any other legislative means to close out the military involvement in Viet Nam. If there is one area where Senate responsibility profoundly supercedes party responsibility, it is in ending the involvement in Viet Nam.

In view of the tendency of this war to flare unexpectedly, the Leadership now questions the desirability of the Congress ever again to be in sine die adjournment as we have been since October 18, 1972. In that Constitutional state the Congress is unable to be reassembled on an urgent basis except by call of the President. It is the Leadership's intention, therefore, to discuss this gap in Congressional continuity with the House leaders. It may well be desirable to provide, at all times, for recall of the Congress by the Congress itself. There is ample precedent for providing standby authority of this kind to the combined Leaderships.

If Indochina continues to preoccupy us abroad, the Senate is confronted, similarly, with an overriding domestic issue. The issue is control of the expenditures of the Federal government. We must try to move to meet it, squarely, at the outset of the 93rd Congress.

In the closing days of the last session, the President asked of Congress unilateral authority to readjust downward expenditures approved by the Congress within an overall limit of $250 billion. The President's objectives were meritorious but his concern at the imbalance in expenditures and revenues might better have been directed to the federal budget which is now a tool—not of the Congress, but of the Executive Branch. It is there that the origins of the great federal deficits of the past few years are to be found. The fact is that Congress has not increased but reduced the Administration's budget requests, overall, by $21 billion in the last four years.

As the Conference knows, the House did yield to the President's request for temporary authority to readjust downward, arbitrarily, Congressional appropriations. The Senate did not do so. The Senate did not do so for good and proper reasons. The power of the purse rests with Congress under the Constitution and the usurpation or transfer of this fundamental power to the Executive Branch will take the nation a good part of the last mile down the road to government by Executive fiat. That is not what the last election tells us to do. That is not what the Constitution requires us to do.

I say that not in criticism of the President. The fault lies not in the Executive Branch but in ourselves, in the Congress. We cannot insist upon the power to control expenditures and then fail to do so. If we do not do the job, if we continue to abdicate our Constitutional responsibility, the powers of the federal government will have to be recast so that it can be done elsewhere.

We must face the fact that, as an institution, Congress is not readily equipped to carry out this complex responsibility. By tradition and practice, for example, each Senate committee proceeds largely in its own way in the matter of authorizing expenditures. There is no standing Senate mechanism for reviewing expenditures to determine where they may fit into an overall program of government. A similar situation exists in our dealings with the House. So, if we mean to face this problem squarely, it is essential for us to recognize that the problem is two-fold. It involves: (1) coordination of expenditures within the Senate and; (2) coordination with the House.

In the closing hours of the 92d Congress, Congress created a Joint Committee to recommend procedures for improving Congressional control over the budget. While this committee cannot be expected to conclude its work by February 15, as the statute directs, it would be my expectation that by that date an interim report will have been submitted to the Congress. Thereafter, it is the Leadership's intention to seek the extension of the Joint Committee in the hope that a definitive answer can be found to the problem.

In the meantime, what of the coming session? Unless the Congress acts now to strengthen coordinated control of expenditures, it is predictable that the Executive Branch will press again for temporary authority to do so. It is predictable, too, that sooner or later a Congressional inertia will underwrite the transfer of this authority on a permanent basis.

That is the reality and it ought to be faced squarely here in this caucus and on the floor of the Senate. Unless and until specific means are recommended by the Joint Committee, I would hope that the Conference will give the Leadership some guidance on how an overall expenditures ceiling may be set as a goal for the first session of the 93d Congress. Shall we attempt to do it here in the Caucus? Shall we take a figure by suggestion from the President? Thereafter, how will we divide an over-all figure among the various major priorities and programs? How much for defense? For welfare? For labor and so forth?

Who will exercise a degree of control over expenditures proposed in legislation? Can it be done by a committee of committee chairmen? The Appropriations Committee? Should the Majority Policy Committee monitor expenditure legislation before it reaches the Senate floor to determine compatibility with an overall limitation? In any case, where will the necessary budgeting technicians and skilled fiscal officers be obtained? From the General Accounting Office? The Congressional Research Service? By an expanded Senate staff?

I would note in this connection the provisions of the Reorganization Act of 1970 which called for a unified computerized system for the federal government. The system was to permit classifying various programs and expenditures of the government so that we might know, among other things, how much was being spent for each particular purpose. This knowledge is essential for effective control of expenditures on the basis of a program of priorities.

The computer project is being undertaken jointly by the Treasury and the Office of Management and Budget, in cooperation with the General Accounting Office. It is my understanding that the project has concentrated, to date, on the needs of the Executive Branch while those of the Congress are being overlooked. If that is so, this project had better be put back on the right track. If it is necessary, the Congress should alter the enabling legislation to make certain that we get the information that is needed to control expenditures. It would be my hope that the appropriate committees would move without delay to look into this situation.

If the President seeks the cooperation of the Senate in negotiating an immediate end to the involvement in the Vietnamese war, in the control of expenditures or, in any other matter of national interest, he will have that cooperation. Cooperation depends, however, on a realistic give and take at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue. In the name of cooperation, we cannot merely acquiesce in unilateral actions of the Executive where the Constitutional powers of Congress are involved as they are in Viet Nam and in the control of expenditures. I would also note in this connection the proclivity of the Executive Branch to impound funds from time to time for activities approved by the Congress. This dubious Constitutional practice denies and frustrates the explicit intention of the Legislative Branch.

There are some areas in which, clearly, we can work cooperatively with the President. Defense expenditures, for example, can continue to be reduced to a more realistic level. I am glad to note that the Armed Services Committee and the Appropriations Committee both have been moving to bring about a general reduction of requests of the Executive Branch for these purposes. As a matter of fact, the reduction in defense appropriations amounts to $5.3 billion for FY '73 and I would hope that we will do even better this year.

We should also consider closely the Administration's announced plans to close some domestic military bases during the coming year. The Executive Branch should not overlook the approximately 2,000 installations and bases which we have set up in all parts of the world at a continuing cost of billions of dollars annually. Here, too, there is an area for cooperation with the President. I would suggest most respectfully that the Senate and the President consider jointly both in terms of obsolescence and economy the closing of a good many of these overseas establishments.

In the civilian sector, the President has indicated that the Federal bureaucracy is too large. There would certainly be grounds for close cooperation with the Senate in this sphere. The misuse and underuse of civil servants is a scandalous waste of public funds which is felt especially at a time of rising federal salary scales. To overload the agencies and departments with personnel is also demeaning and deadening to the dedicated men and women in the federal service.

If the President will work with the Congress on this matter, I am persuaded that the Civil Service can be reduced substantially from its present 2.8 million employees. The reduction can be without personal hardships, by a carefully developed program which would permit greater flexibility in transfers among agencies and incentive retirements. Such a program coupled with the natural attrition of death and resignation and with accompanying limits on new hirings could do much to improve the tone of government service and curb the payroll costs which now stand at $32 billion a year.

The President has expressed an interest in proceeding with his earlier proposed plans for reorganizing the Federal government. Clearly, there is a need for reorganization of sprawling, over-extended, over-lapping Executive departments, agencies and commissions. It must be faced as a realistic matter, however, that any basic reorganization in government is a difficult undertaking at best. In my judgment, a wholesale approach is not likely to achieve anything more concrete now than when it was first advanced two years ago. It would be only a charade. It is my hope, therefore, that the President would concentrate on areas of maximum need. It seems to me that Members of the Senate who have shown a deep interest in this problem can be very helpful in working with the Administration to define those areas.

Turning to our potential contribution to a legislative program for this session, I would emphasize that the Senate has a distinct mandate to assert its own concepts of priorities. The Constitution does not require us to await proposals from the Executive Branch. In this connection, two categories of "carry-over" legislation, from the 92d Congress warrant immediate attention. The first consists of those measures passed by Congress in the last session but vetoed by the President. In many cases, the same measures can be reported promptly by the appropriate committees largely on the basis of comprehensive hearings held in the past. Within this group, of even more urgent concern are the following bills which were vetoed after Congress adjourned without opportunity to override:

1. An Act To Establish Mining, Mineral, and Related Environmental Research Centers in Each State.
2. The Airport Development Acceleration Act.
3. The Public Works Navigation and Flood Control Construction Bill.
4. The National Environmental Data System Act.
5. Extension of Grants to States for Vocational Rehabilitation of Handicapped Individuals.
6. The Veterans' Health Care Reform Act of 1972.
7. The National Veterans' Cemetery System Act.
8. Reclassification of Positions of Deputy U.S. Marshals.
9. National Institute of Gerontology Bill.
10. Revision of the Older Americans Act of 1965.
11. Public Works and Economic Development Act Amendments of 1972.
12. Appropriations for the Departments of Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare for Fiscal Year 1973.

A second category of priority bills includes those which were reported out and considered in either the House or the Senate during the 92d Congress but not enacted. They include pioneering measures of great relevance to the quality of the Nation's life and the welfare of its citizens. These measures should be reported by the Committees early in the current session so that the Congress may consider them carefully. The list includes:

1. Comprehensive Housing.
2. Consumer Protection Agency.
3. No-fault Insurance.
4. Minimum Wage.
5. Pension Reform.
6. Comprehensive Health Insurance.
7. Health Maintenance Organizations.
8. Strict Strip Mining Controls.
9. Omnibus Crime Victims Bill.
10. Highway Federal Aid.
11. War Powers.
12. Anti Hijacking.
13. Consumer Product Warranty.
14. Land Use.
15. Fair Credit Billing.

I would note, in particular, legislation involving health insurance. Senators have introduced various measures dealing with this subject. The Administration has advanced other proposals. The Congressional approach tends to offer more comprehensive health coverage to the people of the nation. The Administration is more concerned with costs. It would be my hope that a compromise can be brought about between what Senators have suggested and what the Administration has recommended. In that fashion, we might at least begin to move in the direction of meeting the medical and hospital needs of all of our citizens.

In a closely related area, we will have to come to grips with the question of welfare reform. Over the past ten years, the costs of welfare have increased from $5 billion to approximately $15 billion. The trend continues upward. The states and localities are overwhelmed by a growing demand for assistance. They plead for greater federal assistance in shouldering this load.

It is inconceivable to me that this nation will ever turn its back on those among us whose lives have been crippled by physical or mental handicaps, by unemployment, by poverty and disease. For years, we have assisted such people, by the millions, abroad as well as at home.

Nevertheless, we must find a better way of dealing with this problem. We must find a more effective system not only of training but of placement to put the able-bodied to work. It is more than a matter of getting people off welfare rolls. It is a matter of the right to personal dignity for every American who is prepared to assert it. It is a right which is interwoven with supporting oneself and family and with making a constructive contribution to the nation.

To date, the Administration has failed to meet this situation. So, too, has the Congress. Hopefully, together, in the 93d Congress we can make a new beginning.

Once, again, in the last election the flaws in the electoral system were paraded before the nation. In my judgment both Congressional and Presidential campaigns are too repetitive, too dull and too hard on candidates and electorate. Most serious, the factor of finance begins to overshadow all other considerations in determining who runs for public office and who does not in determining who gets adequate exposure and who does not. It is not healthy for free government when vast wealth becomes the principal arbiter of questions of this kind. It is not healthy for the nation, for politics to become a sporting game of the rich.

This Congress must look and look deeply at where the nation's politics are headed. In my judgment, ways must be found to hold campaign expenditures within reasonable limits. Moreover, to insure open access to politics, I can think of no better application of public funds than, as necessary, to use them for the financing of elections so that public office will remain open to all, on an unfettered and impartial basis, for the better service of the nation. With this principle forming the objective, it would be desirable to consider limiting campaigns to three weeks or four weeks, later scheduling of conventions and, possibly, replacing the present haphazard, expensive, time-consuming state primaries with national primaries. Once again too, consideration might be given to abolishing the electoral college and to adjustments in the Constitutional provision involving the Presidential term of office and, perhaps, that of the Members of the House.

The Federal Election Campaign Contributions Act, which was enacted in the 92d Congress and which was put into effect this past year, may also need refinement and modification to reduce undue paper-shuffling and principle of full disclosure. There are also some specific matters relating to the past elections which warrant investigatory attention. One is the so-called Watergate affair which appears to have been nothing less than a callous attempt to subvert the political processes of the nation, in blatant disregard of the law. Another is the circulation by mail of false allegations against our colleagues, Senator Muskie, Senator Jackson and Senator Humphrey, during the Florida primary campaign, with the clear intent, to say the least, of sowing political confusion.

Still another is the disconcerting news that dossiers on Congressional candidates have been kept by the FBI for the last 22 years. This practice has reportedly been stopped. It would be well for the appropriate committees to see to it that appointed employees in the agencies of this government are not placed again in the position of surreptitious meddling in the free operation of the electoral process. The FBI has, properly, sought to avoid that role in other situations. We must do whatever is necessary to see to it that neither the FBI, the military intelligence agencies or any other appointive office of the government is turned by its temporary occupants into a secret intruder into the free operation of the system of representative government in the United States.

On November 17, 1972, I addressed letters to Chairman Eastland of the Judiciary Committee and Chairman Ervin of the Government Operations Committee. I requested that these two Chairmen get together and make a recommendation to the Leadership on how to proceed to investigate these and related matters, to the end that the Senate's efforts may be concentrated. I renew that request today.

While I am on this subject, I would like to suggest, too, that attention be given to the appearance in the Courts and Executive Agencies of what may be a tendency to cloud by disconcerting interpretations the safeguards of the First Amendment as they apply to practitioners in the press and other media of communications. If this tendency does exist, the Congress has a responsibility to try to check it. The press, radio and TV are prime sources of light in the otherwise hidden recesses of our government and society. They are as essential to the fulfillment of our legislative responsibilities as they are to the general enlightenment of the public. At the very least, therefore, it seems, too, that a Senate inquiry is called for into the implications of recent court decisions and such official pronouncements as that of the Director of the Office of Telecommunications Policy regarding the "Fairness Doctrine." We share with the President and the Courts a Constitutional responsibility to protect the freedom of the press to operate as a free press.

I would like next to present a few thoughts about the internal procedures of the Senate.

In recent weeks, much has been said about the evils of the seniority system. I can understand the intent of those who make these assertions. Yet, I would observe that, in general, the Senate has been well served in the years of my personal recollection, by the Chairmen of its various committees.

For the benefit of the new Members, however, I would point out that the system which is followed in the Senate by the Democratic Conference in nominating Members to Senate committees is not one of automatic deference to seniority. In the first place, nominees for each standing committee and its chairmen are designated by the Conference's Steering Committee and by secret ballot. During the 92d Congress, for the first time, the Leadership submitted en bloc to the Democratic Conference for concurrence the names of any new members of the several committees. The Steering Committee's selections were endorsed unanimously by the Conference.

Beginning in the 92d Congress, moreover, the Conference adopted a ratification procedure calling for separate Conference concurrence in the case of each of the Steering Committee's designees for Committee Chairman. That process will be followed this year and a Democratic Conference will be called for that purpose when the Steering Committee completes its work. Finally, I should note that what I have just discussed is the procedure only for designation of Democratic Members to Senate committees. The actual election of committees and chairman occurs on the floor of the Senate where, once again, they are subject to challenge. The safeguards seem to me to be substantial. Nevertheless, the Chair will entertain any request for further discussion of this matter.

On another question, I have received from Senator Moss, a letter which states, in part: "It is my hope that the Democratic Conference will adopt a resolution directing the Policy Committee to set forth the legislative objectives of the Democratic Party. It follows, of course, that all Democrats would be expected to support to the maximum degree possible these objectives."

Let me note, in this connection, that in early 1969, the Leadership did raise with the Policy Committee the question of who was to speak for the Democratic Party in the Federal government in view of the election of a Republican President. The Committee agreed unanimously that a need existed for such a spokesman. Thereupon, it adopted unanimously certain new rules of procedure which were proposed by the Leadership to deal with this need. In general, these rules provided for regular meetings of the Policy Committee to consider issues which might be identified as suitable for the assumption of a party position. Those issues were to be considered which came to the Policy Committee—quoting from the Committee's rules—"by reference . . . from any Member of the Policy Committee, by staff study of legislative proposals, statements or other actions of the Administration and by reference to the (Policy) Committee from any legislative Committee."

The Committee further agreed to consider "the issues which are thus brought to its attention for the purpose of determining whether they are of a significance and are likely to evoke sufficient agreement as to warrant adoption by the Majority Party of a Policy position."

Finally, the Committee agreed to seek "to secure the widest degree of party acceptance of a position on any significant issue (and) . . . to be guided by a minimum of a two-thirds vote in determining the issues on which a party position should be taken."

In short, basic machinery in line with Senator Moss' suggestion has been available and in operation in the Policy Committee for four years. The rules of procedure which govern in this connection were approved in full and unanimously by the Democratic Conference on May 20, 1969, as well as by the Legislative Committee Chairmen. They have been used to identify and to disseminate more than a dozen party positions in the Senate and, in general, these positions have had substantial Democratic support.

It is conceivable that the Conference would wish to make changes in the functions of the Majority Policy Committee with a view to strengthening its role along the lines of Senator Moss' letter. It would be helpful, however, if the Policy Committee itself might consider this matter before it is discussed in the Conference. If there are to be modifications in the present procedures of the Committee, as approved unanimously by the Conference in the past, we ought to be as specific as possible in presenting them. The Policy Committee will be meeting soon and the Leadership will undertake to raise the matter at that time. The results of the discussion will be brought back to the Conference thereafter if changes are to be proposed.

I will now close these remarks with a final reference to the last election. I suppose each of us interprets the national sentiment which is reflected in the outcome in terms of his own predilections. Certainly, I have done so. Therefore, "the state of the Senate," as seen from the viewpoint of the Democratic Majority might not necessarily dovetail with the mandate which the Administration delineates from President Nixon's reelection or that which is seen by the Republican Minority in the Congress.

Nevertheless, it does seem that the election tells all of us—President, Democratic Majority and Republican Minority—what the people of the nation do not want.

(1) They do not want one party or one branch government during the next two years.

(2) They do not want to turn back the clock on the national effort to improve the human climate and the physical environment in which the people of this nation must live.

(3) They do not want a rate of change which whether too slow or too rapid produces major internal chaos and disruption.

(4) Most of all, they do not want the President to persist nor the Congress to acquiesce in the indefinite continuance of the senseless bloodshed in Viet Nam and, with it, accept the indefinite postponement of the return of the POW's and the recoverable MIA's.

These negatives point the way to the positive path which the Senate Majority Leadership intends to pursue during the next two years. We will not abandon the effort to end the U.S. involvement in Viet Nam and to bring back the POW's and the recoverable MIA's, period. We will work to preserve and to enhance the faithfulness of this nation to its Constitutional principles and its highest ideals and, in so doing, we will not shut the door on essential changes.

The Leadership needs your cooperation, your understanding and your support. Ideas are welcomed, equally, from every Member of this Conference, the oldest no less than the youngest, the most junior no less than the most senior. Together, we are here, in the last analysis, with only one mandate—to serve the people of the several states and the nation. With your help, the Leadership will strive to carry out that mandate in full.

8. Set priorities for future—PL 93-426 creating a Commission on Supplies and Shortages composed of representatives of the private sector and the executive and legislative branches.

EXHIBIT 5—ADDRESS OF SENATOR MIKE MANSFIELD, MAJORITY LEADER
STATE OF THE CONGRESS—1974
(February 1, 1974)

Wednesday evening President Nixon addressed a joint session of Congress, through the medium of radio and television, he also spoke directly to the nation. His State of the Union Address was welcomed by the Congress. It will receive full and cooperative consideration. Whatever the legal difficulties which confront the Administration, the regular business of the nation must come first. The President put it first. Insofar as the Congress is concerned, it will be first.

Tonight, I offer an assessment of where the nation stands and what lies ahead as we see it in the Legislative Branch. The President, alone, speaks for the Executive Branch. One Senator cannot speak for the 100 Members of the Senate. Nor will all 435 women and men in the House of Representatives agree with everything that I have to say. Nevertheless, my remarks are indicative of the prevailing views of the Democratic Majority as reflected in the Leadership of the Congress.

In some respects, of course, these views are on the same wave length as the President's, as for example, when he spoke on Wednesday of his desire to protect the personal liberties of Americans. In others, they differ. It can be no other way. We are a government of separate branches. Our politics remain cast in two major parties.

Twelve months ago the 93d Congress convened after a sweeping victory for a Republican President in the 1972 election. From that same election, however, there also came an increase in the Democratic Majority in the Senate and a continuing Democratic Majority in the House of Representatives. There were those who chose to note the first event but to ignore the second. The facts of the election, nevertheless, were clear. There had been not one but two basic decisions. The people had continued the President in office. At the same time, they had rejected government by one party and government by one branch. And, may I add, subsequent events have underscored the wisdom of this duality of choice.

The Congressional Majority accepted the President's electoral mandate. At the same time, we concluded that there was also a mandate to the Legislative Branch. Therefore, we moved promptly to reinforce the nation's system of checks and balances against an accumulation of power in the Executive Branch. This accumulation did not begin in the present Administration. It had been going on, administration after administration, Democratic and Republican, for decades. Nevertheless, there were, at the outset of the 93d Congress the following evidences of an ominous shift to one-branch government:

(1) Excessive Executive curtailment of public information in the name of national security;

(2) Arbitrary Executive impoundment of appropriated funds;

(3) Unwarranted Executive attacks on the national press;

(4) Executive pre-emption of sole authority over the Federal budget;

(5) Multiplying expressions of Executive contempt for Congress and, by extension, for the people who elect the Congress;

(6) Executive usurpation of sole control over changes in the basic organizational structure of the government; and,

(7) Illegal invasions of personal privacy by Executive agents.

To the Congress, these were flashpoints of a danger to freedom and we were determined to act on them. In my judgment, we did what we set out to do. The erosion of the system of checks and balances was halted. A greater Congressional impact began to be registered on all of the basic decisions of the Federal government.

A year ago, for example, this nation's principal concern was to get out of Viet Nam. That was a goal set not in 1973 or 1972 by this Administration. It was set by its predecessor in the distant past. It was a goal reiterated year after year for a half-dozen years. For even more years, Members of Congress had spoken out against the involvement.

But at the beginning of the 93d Congress, we were still in Viet Nam. Americans were still dying in Indochina. The urgency, therefore, was to translate pious words into action that would restore fully the nation's peace. In 1973 that was done. An effective settlement was negotiated with the North Vietnamese by Dr. Henry Kissinger, the present Secretary of State. The final withdrawal of our military forces was achieved under what became an absolute legal insistence by the Congress. Thereafter, the gate to re-involvement anywhere in Indochina was shut tight by legislation.

The bitter and tragic experience of Viet Nam led us, moreover, to act against a repetition elsewhere. Now, any military intrusion into another nation—and, hopefully, we have seen the last—is conditioned on the expressed consent of Congress as prescribed in the War Powers Act. Hereafter, what this nation may find necessary to do abroad in a military sense is a question that must be openly considered. It must be decided not alone by the President. It must be decided by the President together with the men and women in the Congress who answer directly to the people. That is a basic Constitutional concept. That is an essential concept for the continued existence of freedom in this nation.

The past year also witnessed major contributions from the Congress over a range of domestic questions. New farm legislation was passed calling for the removal of all limitations on the production of food. Hopefully, this legislation will undo some of the damage done by subsidized sales of grains abroad at bargain-basement prices.

Last year, we sold millions of tons of grain to the Soviet Union. This year, the Soviet Union is offering to sell some of it back to us—at almost three times the price. Who pays for this sort of film flim? The people of the nation pay for it in the skyrocketing costs of all foodstuffs.

In the last session, Congress acted twice on its own initiative to try to keep Social Security benefits in line with rising prices. The way was also cleared for building the Alaska pipeline. New emphasis was given to urban mass transportation. Measures were adopted to encourage emergency medical services and health maintenance systems throughout the nation. Legislation of significance to veterans became law after a Presidential veto. To be sure, the achievements were not earth-shaking. Nevertheless, they represented a sustained and sober effort on the part of Republicans and Democrats alike. They were the work of one session of a two session Congress. During the current year, it is my expectation that we will move to consider these additional major measures:

An effective National health insurance system which covers all Americans;

An expansion of Housing assistance so that those of limited means will once again be able to pay for a home;

Reform of private pension systems which will recognize that millions of Americans move from place to place and from job to job and that the accumulation of private retirement credit, in effect, should do the same;

A fair minimum wage that underwrites a modest standard of living in the face of an explosive inflation;

A system of no-fault automobile insurance;

An increase of Congressional control over the budget, to the end that the President's more than $300 billion in spending requests will be reduced;

A renewed commitment to excellence in education after years of administrative indifference.

There will be time to try, too, to bring about more equity in the tax structure. The system now favors, too much, those who have more, over those who have less. It favors too much, income from substantial wealth already accumulated as against income derived from pay-check to pay-check and from personal savings that are small or almost non-existent.

That is the way the legislative program for the coming session is beginning to take shape. It is the first order of business. It will be pursued deliberately.

At this point, I wish to speak with the utmost candor on the Congress and Watergate and the related questions of impeachment and resignation. I raise these matters reluctantly. Nevertheless, they must be raised because they have been widely discussed by the public and, on Wednesday, reference was made to them by the President. The question of a Presidential resignation, as in the case of a Vice-Presidential resignation, is not one for the Congress. The President has stated his intentions bluntly in that regard. Insofar as the Congress is concerned, that closes the matter of resignation.

Impeachment is a responsibility of the Congress. The question is now before the House of Representatives where it belongs at this time under the Constitution. It is being handled properly and deliberately. On the basis of available information, I would anticipate that it will be dealt with fully in this session.

What has been done by the Senate Watergate Committee is also within the Constitutional responsibility of the Congress. That work, too, I would anticipate, will be completed during this session in legislative recommendations.

The question of impeachment and the matters of the Watergate hearings create onerous responsibilities for the Congress. They are also inescapable responsibilities. They have had to be assumed in order to cleanse the political processes of the nation. The members of the Congressional Committees which are pursuing them—members of both parties—deserve every support in these endeavors.

As for the crimes of Watergate—and there were crimes—they cannot be put to rest by Congress. Nor can any words of the President's or from me mitigate them. The disposition of crimes is a function of the Justice Department and the Courts. Insofar as I can see, Mr. Leon Jaworski, the special prosecutor, is doing his job and so, too, are the courts. There the matter must rest for however long may be necessary. Whether it is months or years, there are no judicial shortcuts.

Looking ahead, in ten months the Senate and the House of Representatives will face the people in an election. That event will test the record of the past two years. More important, it will be an affirmation of freedom at a critical moment in our history. The transitory political lives of elected officials are not what will matter most in November. It is the political life of the nation that is involved most deeply.

To excise Watergate and what it implies before it becomes fatal to liberty is a fundamental responsibility of this government. The people have a right to an electoral system free of shenanigans, capable of yielding honest, responsible and responsive government, open to all, and shaped to meet the needs of all.

The people of this nation, in their overwhelming number, do not want government by the whim or the will of the most powerful and influential. That is the nub of the problem. It is incumbent on us to foreclose an excessive intrusion of great wealth, whether corporate, labor, personal or whatever, into the electoral process. That is a solemn and urgent obligation.

We have taken steps in law in the direction of fulfilling that obligation. Citizens, for example, can now indicate on the front page of their income-tax returns whether or not they wish a dollar of their taxes to go to defray election costs at no additional cost to themselves. These funds will be impartially divided to finance future political campaigns. Certainly, I would urge all Americans to use this income tax device to register their concern for the integrity of free elections.

In my judgment, we shall not come finally to grips with the problem except as we are prepared to pay for the public business of elections with public funds. We are moving in that direction, as I have already indicated, with the income tax earmark. There are other measures under consideration in Congress which will accelerate the process. I would hope and expect that the President will join with the Congressional leadership in supporting these efforts to clean up the campaign-financing mess. If it was in 1972 that Watergate arose, and in 1973 that it was investigated, may it be said that it was in 1974 that the matter was finally ended in a new system of open elections openly paid for. I urge the support of the people of the nation in that resolve.

What Watergate did to public confidence with regard to the nation's politics, the energy crisis has done in the realm of the nation's economy. Grave uncertainties have arisen. It is not merely a question of long lines at the filling stations, and slower speeds on the highways. The implications of the shortage are seen to extend far beyond the gas tank into every aspect of our society. Today, the petroleum situation threatens the jobs, the business and even the basic maintenance of the homes of millions of Americans. We have become aware, suddenly, of an abject dependency on decisions made by governments five thousand miles away and by a handful of executives in petroleum companies scattered around the world.

To be sure, oil shortages had been forecast for years. But, the message was either not received or ignored. The use of ever-increasing amounts of energy and, in particular, of petroleum-derived energy was stimulated in this nation as basic to prosperity. Now, we have shifted gears. The watchword has changed from consumption to curtailment. The people of the nation have been quick to recognize the need. They have displayed, over all, a remarkable degree of self-discipline in meeting the problem. And that has been the single most important element in preventing a national catastrophe.

The recent agreement between Egypt and Israel will also be of significance in this connection. The President and Secretary of State Kissinger have acted with notable astuteness on the interplay of the Middle East conflict and other aspects of the international situation and the energy question. While I am on this subject, I would like to commend the peripatetic Mr. Kissinger. His achievements extend far beyond the Middle East as, for example, in the improvement of relationships with China and the Soviet Union.

In the year ahead, I would hope that the President and the Secretary of State will turn to such questions as the reduction—not just the limitation—but the reduction of arms on a mutual basis. Hopefully, this wasteful financial burden and the drain on the resources of the nation which it entails may be reduced, and military spending can be cut, not increased, as the President has already requested in his State of the Union message.

There is also the need for a new look, south, at our relations with a Latin America that is changing rapidly. It may well be that in the excellent ties which we have maintained with Mexico—ties in which regular meetings of the Congresses of the two countries play a major role—there will be found a prototype for a new cooperation with the other American republics.

Under the stress of the energy shortage and other economic difficulties, there is the danger of a crumbling of international cooperation, notably, as it involves our relations with Western Europe and Japan. That, indeed, would be the final straw. The consequences of devil-take-the-hindmost economic policies among free nations would be disastrous to all concerned and might well initiate the general erosion of world peace. In that connection, the President is to be commended for convening a meeting this month to consider our common plight with the representatives of several European nations and Japan.

As for the energy crisis at home, the immediate responsibility of government is to make certain that the shortage does not devastate the economy and that the price of past neglect is borne equitably by all Americans. If that means rationing, then let us not hesitate to use this device. Surely a price rollback will also be considered by the Congress. Surely the tax benefits accorded the major oil concerns on investments outside the United States by this Government, as well as excessive oil profits, will be scrutinized by the Congress.

Critical information on the production and distribution of energy must no longer be cloistered in the executive offices of private corporations. It is essential that the facts be uncovered and laid before the nation. Wherever they may operate, if corporations are chartered in this country or receive the benefits and protection extended by the government of the United States, they have an obligation to answer, through the Congress, to the people of the United States.

Let me say that we do not need scapegoats in this situation. But we must have a foundation of fact on which to build a national policy on energy. We have got to know far more than we know now if we are to meet the threat to the nation's well-being. I speak of the threat of widespread business shutdowns, transportation paralysis and a run-away inflation which can only culminate in a severe recession with extensive unemployment and appalling human hardship. That, the people of this nation will not tolerate. That, the Congress of the United States will do all in its power to prevent.

The energy crisis has shocked this nation. In so doing, it has also shown us in a sudden flash the precarious manner in which our national economic life has come to be organized. It is all well and good to be concerned at this time with the exhaustibility of petroleum. But what of the exhaustibility of pure air and water? What of bauxite, nickel, tin, iron and copper, and many other materials? Where will the supplies of these and other essentials come from in the years ahead? Indeed, what of food, with the kind of disjointed policies in which exports of wheat are stimulated one year only to compel high-priced imports the next?

To say that we have been extravagant with our resources is to put it mildly. We spend nearly $3 billion a year on air-conditioning and less than $150 million on air pollution control. We throw away 60 billion beverage containers a year, yet spend only $5 million to research recycling techniques. Pollution is building dead seas off the coast of New York, New Jersey, the Great Lakes states and elsewhere. Yet, during the recent recess the President chose to impound $3 billion that had been appropriated for the treatment of waste.

It would be my hope that the concern of the Government will not stop with the energy shortage. The need is to take a careful look not only at the flashing of this single danger signal but at the whole integrated switchboard of our national existence. It is not enough, for example, for the federal government to spend tens of millions of dollars in a rescue operation to keep the bankrupt Penn Central on the tracks. We need to know where an action of this kind fits into a national rail policy; where that policy, in turn, fits into a total transportation pattern; where that pattern, in turn, fits into the over-all requirements of the nation, today, and for the next decade or more. In short, we need to think ahead and begin to make the hard political choices between what is more important to the nation and what is less, between what is enduring and what is transitory. That is the full scale by which government intervention in the nation's economy, when it must take place, should be measured. Unless we begin soon to develop that scale, the right hand of government will tend more and more to undo or do over what the left hand has just done.

It seems to me that it would be helpful in this connection to bring together on a regular basis representatives of the Executive Branch and the Legislative Branch with those of industry, labor and other areas of our national life. The fusion of ideas and interests from these sources should help us to establish useful economic yardsticks. In turn, we may begin to curb in some orderly way the ingrained tendencies of government to spend vast sums out of force of habit or for exotic and wasteful endeavors—whether military or civilian. Perhaps the resources of the federal government can then be used more effectively and efficiently to promote the national welfare. Perhaps, then, the President's budget—which has now broken the $300 billion barrier—can be reduced and better framed to meet the over-all requirements of the nation for today and tomorrow.

There is a great deal that is right in this nation. There is a strong, decent, industrious and compassionate people. There is a bountiful land. There is intelligence, inventiveness and vitality. If, working together, today, we will put these attributes to use for the benefit of all, there need be no fear for the nation's tomorrow. That is the responsibility of this government. It is the responsibility of the President, the elected members of Congress, the appointed officials of government and the civil service. Nor is it a responsibility confined to the now. We owe this nation more than a decent present. We owe this nation leadership in the reach for a decent future. In 1974 this Congress—your Congress—will do its part fully in meeting that responsibility.

AGRICULTURE
Agricultural credit.—States the sense of the Senate that agricultural credit and the current liquidity problem facing agricultural borrowers threaten the viability of agriculture, rural communities, and the national economy. S. Res. 468. Senate adopted Dec. 19, 1974. (VV)

*Animal health research.—Authorizes $47 million annually to support continuing programs for animal health research at colleges of veterinary medicine, or, at institutions where there are no such colleges, the State agricultural experiment stations conducting animal health research; sets a formula for distribution of funds based on the value of and income generated by livestock and poultry in each State and on the animal health research capacity at the eligible institutions; provides for additional grants for research on specific national or regional animal health problems; and establishes an Advisory Board appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture to make recommendations on matters related to the administration of the Act. H.R. 11873. Vetoed Aug. 14, 1974. (VV)

Commodity Futures Trading Commission.—Creates an independent regulatory commission, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, consisting of a Chairman and four Commissioners to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate and transfers to it all existing authority under the Commodity Exchange Act which is presently vested in the Secretary of Agriculture and the Commodity Exchange Commission; requires the Department of Agriculture to appoint a staff person to maintain liaison between the Commission and the Department; deletes certain language in the Commodity Exchange Act to assure that Federal law will preempt State law; gives the Commission broad authority to regulate all futures trading and exchange activities and imposes certain registration requirements in order to insure fair practice and honest dealing on the commodity exchanges and provide a measure of control over these forms of speculative dealing; authorizes a customer's reparation procedure for handling complaints arising from violations of the Act subject to judicial review; imposes administrative and criminal penalties for violations of the Act; authorizes the Commission to regulate transactions for the delivery of silver and gold bullion, bulk silver and gold coins pursuant to standardized margin or leverage account contracts; makes it a felony for any employees of the Commission to acquire and use inside information for futures trading, options trading and trading in actual commodities; provides that the Commission's annual report to Congress include information on registration of futures associations; requires a report to Congress within 2 years on the need for legislation providing insurance against losses caused by financial failure of futures commission merchants; and contains other provisions. H.R. 13113. Public Law 93-463, approved October 23, 1974. (VV)

Egg research and consumer information.—Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to issue a national order providing for the establishment of an Egg Board which would develop, subject to the Secretary's approval, a program of research, producer and consumer education, and promotion to improve and develop markets for eggs, egg products, spent fowl (laying hens removed for slaughter), and products of spent fowl; requires approval by referendum among commercial egg producers with laying flocks of over 3,000 before the order can become effective, and, if the order is approved, provides for payment of administrative costs through assessment of producers at a rate not to exceed 5 cents per case of commercial eggs. H.R. 1200. Public Law 93-428, approved October 1, 1974. (VV)

Farm credit administration.—Authorizes the Federal Farm Credit Board to establish the salary level of the Governor and the Deputy Governors of the Farm Credit Administration. S. 3801. P/S Aug. 19, 1974. (VV)

Fertilizer.—Expresses a sense of the Senate that: all Federal agencies should give the highest priority to the U.S. fertilizer industry in establishing allocation priorities for distribution; the U.S. fertilizer industry should distribute fertilizer supplies among farmers in a timely and equitable manner, and at reasonable prices; the Federal Power Commission, and appropriate State regulatory agencies, should establish priorities for the allocation of natural gas to nitrogen fertilizer producers sufficient to insure them of supply levels required to maintain maximum production levels; the Federal Energy Office should give the highest priority allocation to the fertilizer industry's needs for gasoline, middle-distillates, and other liquid fuels utilized in the production, distribution, and application of fertilizer; the Cost of Living Council and the Departments of Agriculture and Commerce should continue their monitoring and reporting of fertilizer supply availabilities, wholesale and retail prices, and export shipments; and the Cost of Living Council should establish a monitoring and investigatory program through the office of the IRS to determine the factual basis of any alleged price gouging involving either fertilizer wholesalers or retailers. S. Res. 289. Senate adopted Feb. 27, 1974. (VV)

Filbert nuts.—Provides that imported filberts must meet the same grade and quality standards required of domestic supplies. H.R. 2933. Public Law 93- , approved —, 1974. (VV)

Food assistance programs.—Makes mandatory for a 3 year period the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture under Public Law 93-86 to purchase agricultural commodities that are not in surplus supply for donation to certain food programs; authorizes the Secretary to pay each State agency 50 percent of all costs in administering the Food Stamp Program instead of, as at present, 62.5 percent of only certain designated administrative costs; requires that States report from time to time at the request of the Secretary on the effectiveness of the administration of the Food Stamp Program; amends section 3 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 to establish a 5-cent minimum rate or reimbursement for each half-pint of milk served in the special milk program, with annual adjustment beginning with the 1976 fiscal year to reflect changes in costs; and contains other provisions. S. 3458. Public Law 93-347, approved July 12, 1974. (VV)

Food marketing margin investigation.—Expresses the sense of the Senate that the Federal Trade Commission undertake an investigation of margins that exist between farm prices of livestock, dairy products, poultry, and eggs and their retail prices to determine: (a) the past and present margins for these commodities; (b) the changes in the relative values of the items that compromise the margin; (c) whether these margins fully reflect appropriate farm price changes; (d) whether any important level in the food marketing chain experienced any losses since August of 1973; (e) profits of each important level in the food marketing chain; and (f) whether market power concentration exists to the extent that it impedes competitive forces. S. Res. 351. Senate adopted Aug. 2, 1974. (VV)

Food stamps.—Extends for 1 year, until July 1, 1975, the period of eligibility where-in supplemental security income recipients may receive food stamps. H.R. 15124. Public Law 93-335, approved July 8, 1974. (VV)

ATOMIC ENERGY

Nuclear agreements.—Amends the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, to require that proposed international agreements for peaceful cooperation in nuclear energy which deal with nuclear reactors capable of producing more than 5 megawatts of heat and fuel be submitted to the Congress under the procedure for military agreements for a period of 60 days of continuous session during which Congress may disapprove the agreement by passage of a concurrent resolution; directs that such agreement be referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy who, within the first 30-day period, must report its views and recommendations together with a proposed concurrent resolution stating that the Congress does or does not favor the agreement of cooperation; and provides that any concurrent resolution so reported shall become the pending business of the House in question within 25 days and voted on within 5 calendar days thereafter unless otherwise determined; and provides that the Act shall apply to all proposed agreements and amendments thereto submitted to Congress after its enactment. S. 3698. Public Law 93-485, approved Oct. 26, 1974. Note: (Comparable provisions for distribution of special nuclear material are contained in S. 3686, the Atomic Energy Commission Omnibus Legislation.) (283)

Nuclear incidents—Insurance.—Amends and further extends for five years from August 1, 1977, to August 1, 1982, the Price-Anderson indemnity provisions of the Atomic Energy Act which were designed to protect the public and the emerging nuclear industry by assuring the availability of funds for the payment of claims in the event of a nuclear incident up to a total amount of $560 million, which represents the sum of Government indemnity fixed at $500 million by the Congress and then-existing (1967) maximum available private liability insurance of $60 million (which has currently risen to $110 million);

Provides that the provisions of this bill shall not come into effect until 30 days after the Rasmussen Study on reactor safety and the probability of accidents has been completed and the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy has reported to the Congress its evaluation of the results of such study unless Congress within 30 days thereafter adopts a concurrent resolution of disapproval of extension of the Price-Anderson Act;

Amends the act to phase out Government indemnity for the nuclear industry; authorizes the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) to establish the terms and conditions of the financial protection required of nuclear licensees and provides a deferred premium system whereby in the event of a nuclear incident resulting in damages exceeding the base layer of insurance each licensee would be assessed a deferred premium which would be a prorated share of the excess damages; sets the level of the standard maximum deferred premium at no less than $2 million per facility and an upper level for the premium of $5 million per facility; retains the present $560 million limit on total liability until the total of primary insurance and assessable retrospective premiums reaches the level necessary to completely replace the Government indemnity; places no ultimate limitation on the level to which this coverage could rise and has a projected level, which, at a premium level of $3 million per reactor, is $1 billion about 1987 and $1,346,000,000 in 1990;

Extends the coverage of the act (which is presently limited to the occurrence of a nuclear incident within the United States or involving the nuclear ship Savannah and to nuclear incidents involving activities under contract to the United States) to include occurrences outside the territorial limits of the United States and all other nations involving ocean shipments of fuel during transit from one AEC licensee to another and a nuclear facility such as an AEC licensed floating nuclear powerplant, and any occurrences resulting from theft;

And contains other provisions. H.R. 15323. Vetoes Oct. 12, 1974. (VV)

Nuclear information report.—Amends section 202 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, to establish a requirement for an annual report by the Joint Committee membership to their respective Houses on the development, use and control of nuclear energy for the common defense and security and for peaceful purposes in order to provide Members of Congress with factual information concerning nuclear energy, weapons and policy. S. 3802. Public Law 93-514, approved Dec. 6, 1974. (VV)

Nuclear warships.—Gives claims settlement authority to the President for any nuclear damages claims involving the reactor of a U.S. nuclear powered warship in domestic as well as foreign accidents, except for those resulting from acts of war or civil insurrection, for the purpose of enabling the United States to give assurances that such claims would be handled on an absolute liability basis regardless of whether or not a foreign government has enacted legislation to that effect. S.J. Res. 248. Public Law 93-513, approved Dec. 6, 1974. (VV)

CONGRESS

Adjournment.—Provides that neither House of Congress shall adjourn for a period in excess of three days or sine die, until both Houses have adopted a concurrent resolution for either an adjournment until a date certain or for adjournment sine die. H. Con. Res. 568. House adopted July 24, 1974; Senate adopted July 25, 1974. (VV)

Budget reform—impoundment control.—Establishes a new congressional budget process;

Establishes Senate and House Committees on the Budget and also, a Congressional Budget Office (COB) which shall (1) provide the Budget and other committees of both Houses with information and assistance regarding matters relating to the budget appropriation bills, other bills authorizing or providing budget authority, revenues, receipts, estimated future revenues and receipts, changing revenue conditions, and such other information as the committee may request; (2) issue a report as soon as possible after the beginning of the fiscal year which projects for 5 fiscal years total new budget authority and total budget outlays for each of the fiscal years, revenues to be received and the major sources thereof, and the surplus or deficit, if any, for each of the fiscal years, (3) report by April 1 of each year to the Budget Committees, addressed to fiscal policy and national budget priorities, which will discuss the impact of alternative levels of revenues and outlays for the coming fiscal year on national growth and development;

Changes the Federal fiscal year from July 1—June 30 to October 1—September 30 beginning in 1976, with provisions for an interim transition period from July 1, 1976, to September 30, 1976, and establishes the following timetable for the budget process:

By November 10: The President submits the current services budget (a document showing programs and funding levels for the year just past), thus giving the Congress line-item information with which to begin analysis and preparation of the budget for the coming fiscal year prior to receipt of the President's budget;

Fifteen days after Congress meets: The President submits his budget;

By March 15: Committees and joint committees submit reports to the Budget Committees;

By April 1: COB submits report to Budget Committees;

By April 15: The Budget Committees report the first concurrent resolution on the budget to their Houses, setting forth (1) appropriate levels of total budget authority and outlays; (2) an estimate of budget outlays and an appropriate level of new budget authority for each major functional category, including contingencies and for undistributed intragovernment transactions; (3) appropriate surplus or deficit, recommended level of Federal revenues and any recommended aggregate revenue-increase or decrease; (5) appropriate level of any recommended changes, if any, in the public debt, and (6) such other matters relating to the budget as may be appropriate;

By May 15: The appropriate committees report bills and resolutions authorizing new budget authority (with the exception of entitlement authority or omnibus social security legislation);

By May 15: Completion of all action on the first concurrent budget resolution;

Seventh Day After Labor Day: Completion of action on bills and resolutions providing new budget authority and new spending authority;

By September 15: Completion of all action on the second required concurrent budget resolution;

By September 25: Completion of action on reconciliation bill or resolution containing provisions necessary to accomplish any change or changes in budget authority, revenues, or the statutory public debt directed by the second required budget resolution;

October 1: The fiscal year begins;

Provides that the first concurrent budget resolution must be adopted before any measures providing for new budget authority, entitlement authority, and changes in revenues or the public debt limit are to be considered on the floor, with the exception of advance appropriations or advance revenue changes; contains a procedure for waiver of the prohibition in the Senate;

Authorizes additional budget resolutions; Requires that proposed legislation providing contract or borrowing authority must provide that such new spending authority is to be effective for any fiscal year only to the extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation acts, thus subjecting such legislation to the appropriations process, with the exception of such authority now in effect and all existing social security trust funds, 90 percent self-financed trust funds, general revenue sharing (to the extent provided in the legislation), outlays of government corporations, and gifts to the United States;

Makes entitlement authority (entitles persons or governments who meet the requirements to receive payments from the Federal Government) subject to the reconciliation process, with social security and 90 percent self-financed trust funds and government corporations not subject to the referral process for amounts exceeding the budget allocation;

Provides that after the budget process for a fiscal year has been completed it shall not be in order to consider any new budget level of budget authority or outlay to be exceeded or reduced;

Contemplates that in the future that authorization bills will be enacted a year or more in advance of the period for which appropriations are to be made;

Provides in title X, the Impoundment Control Act of 1974, that if the President determines that certain budget authority is not required to meet the objectives of a program or should be rescinded for fiscal purposes, or whenever all or part of budget authority provided for only one fiscal year is to be reserved from obligation for such fiscal year, he shall transmit a special message requesting a rescission of the budget authority, and, unless both Houses complete action on a rescission bill within 45 days, the budget authority shall be made available for obligation; also provides for a second type of message concerning deferral, which includes any withholding or delaying the availability for obligation of budget authority, and passes an "impoundment resolution" disapproving the proposed deferral at any time after receipt of the special message; amends the Antideficiency Act regarding the placing of funds in reserve by deleting an "other developments" clause, permitting reserves solely to provide for contingencies, or effect savings where possible by change in requirements or greater efficiency;

And contains other provisions. H.R. 7130. Public Law 93-344, approved July 12, 1974. (81,261)

Congressional office equipment and furnishings.—Permits a United States Senator or a Member of, Delegate to, or Resident Commissioner in the House of Representatives, upon his leaving office (except by expulsion), to purchase the office equipment and furnishings provided by the General Services Administration for use in his State or district office. Legal services corporation.—Establishes a private nonprofit Legal Services Corporation—to which is transferred the duties and responsibilities of the legal services program in the Office of Economic Opportunity—for the purpose of providing financial support for legal assistance in noncriminal proceedings to those unable to afford legal assistance; places the administration of the Corporation in a Board of Directors consisting of 11 members appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate and provides that not more than 8 shall be of the same political party, that a majority be members of the bar of the highest court of any State, and that none be full-time employees of the United States; provides that the Chairman shall be selected from the Board members by the President for a 3-year term and thereafter the Board shall elect annually the Chairman from its members; provides that within 6 months after the first meeting of the Board, the Board shall request the Governor of each State to appoint a 9-member advisory council for the State which shall be charged with notifying the Corporation of any alleged violation of this act;

Authorizes the Board to appoint a President of the Corporation, who shall be a member of the bar of the highest court of any State, and any other corporate officers; provides that no officer of the Corporation may receive any compensation from any source other than the Corporation during employment by the Corporation except as authorized by the Board; prohibits the use of political tests or qualifications in appointing or promoting employees of the Corporation or in selecting recipients;

Provides that all officers and employees of the Corporation are to be treated as private employees except for certain rights and benefits of employees of the Federal Government (work injuries, retirement, and health and life insurance); further provides that the Corporation shall be considered a private nonprofit entity for all statutory purposes, including those concerning labor relations, except as otherwise specified;

Authorizes the Corporation to make grants and contracts with individuals, partnerships, firms, and nonprofit organizations and corporations for the purpose of providing legal assistance to eligible clients; authorizes the Corporation to undertake directly and not by grant or contract, to provide research, training, and technical assistance and to serve as a clearinghouse for information relating to the delivery of legal assistance; authorizes the Corporation to insure that clients and employees comply with the law, rules, regulations and guidelines under which the recipients of assistance, grants or contracts will operate; provides that the Canons of Ethics or the Disciplinary Rules of the Code of Professional Responsibility would be fully applicable to the actions and responsibilities of attorneys in the legal services program; prohibits an attorney from receiving compensation for providing legal assistance under this act unless he or she is admitted to practice in the jurisdiction where such assistance is initiated; prohibits employees of the Corporation or any recipient from engaging in or encouraging any public demonstration or picketing, boycott, or strike; makes special provision for bilingual legal assistance; prohibits the Corporation from influencing the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress or any State or local legislature; prohibits contribution of funds, equipment, or personnel to any political party or campaign or for use in influencing any ballot measures or referendums;

Provides that the Corporation, in consultation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and with the Governors of the States, establish maximum income levels (taking into account family size, urban and rural differences, and substantial cost-of-living variations) for individuals eligible for legal assistance and establishes guidelines and priorities to insure eligibility of clients; prohibits the use of funds for legal assistance with respect to a criminal proceeding, or to make grants to, or contracts with, any law firm which expends 50 percent or more of its resources litigating issues in the broad interests of a majority of the public; makes special provisions for legal assistance to persons 18 years of age; authorizes $90 million for fiscal year 1975, $100 million for fiscal year 1976, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1977;

And contains other provisions. H.R. 7824. Public Law 93-355, approved July 25, 1974. (28,302)

Mandatory death penalty.—Imposes by statute a mandatory death penalty for offenses for which the death penalty is available because death resulted, as follows where: (1) the offense involves flight by a prisoner from the custody of an officer or from an institution, gathering or delivering defense information to aid a foreign government, transportation of explosives in interstate commerce, destruction of government property, destruction of property in interstate commerce, kidnapping, treason, and aircraft piracy; (2) the defendant has been convicted of another offense, State or Federal, for which a sentence of life imprisonment or death was authorized by statute; (3) the defendant has previously been convicted of two or more offenses, State or Federal, which carried a penalty of more than 1 year's imprisonment and which involved the "infliction of serious bodily injury upon another person"; (4) the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of death to another person in the commission of the offense; (5) the offense was committed in an especially heinous, cruel, or depraved manner; (6) the defendant procured commission of the offense by payment or promise of payment; (7) the offense was committed for money or anything of pecuniary value; and (8) the offense was committed against the President, Vice President or Vice President elect, or if no Vice President, the officer next in order of succession, a chief of state of a foreign nation, certain foreign officials in the United States because of official duties, a Justice of the Supreme Court, a Federal law enforcement officer or an employee of a Federal prison;

Also provides in regard to offenses concerning defense information or treason that the sentence of death shall be imposed in cases where (a) the defendant has been convicted of another previous offense concerning defense information or treason, for which a sentence of life imprisonment or death was authorized by statute; or (b) in the commission of the offense the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of substantial danger to the national security and it is found that the offense directly concerned nuclear weaponry, or other major weapons system or major element of defense strategy; or (c) in the commission of the offense the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of death to another person;

Makes the following exceptions to the imposition of the death sentence where, at the time of the offense, (1) the defendant was under 18 years of age; (2) his or her capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law was significantly impaired but not so much as to constitute a defense for prosecution; (3) he or she was under unusual and substantial duress, although not such as to constitute a defense for prosecution; (4) he or she was a principal in the offense, which was committed by another, but the participation was relatively minor, though not so minor as to constitute a defense; (5) he or she could not reasonably have foreseen that his conduct in the courts of the commission of the offense which resulted in the death for which he or she was convicted would cause, or would create a grave risk of causing, death to any person; or (6) as allowed by the court when hostages have been released by the defendant on the assurance of the Attorney General that their release would be a factor mitigating the application of the mandatory death sentence;

Establishes a procedure whereby a hearing shall be held after conviction or plea of guilty for the purposes of determining whether any of the exceptions apply; contains provisions concerning appeal from a sentence of death under this procedure; and contains other provisions. S. 1401. P/S Mar. 13, 1974. (69)

Narcotic treatment.—Amends the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970, Public Law 91-513, commonly called the Controlled Substances Act, to provide new authority for the regulation of the use of narcotic drugs in the treatment of narcotic addicts; provides definitions of "maintenance treatment" to enable the Attorney General to establish more specific and comprehensive regulatory control over the handling of narcotic drugs used in the treatment of narcotic addicts; requires practitioners who dispense or administer narcotic drugs in the treatment of narcotic addicts to obtain a special registration predicated on the approval of treatment standards by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the approval of security standards by the Attorney General; enables the Attorney General to deny, revoke, or suspend the special registration for failure to comply with the new standards; makes the full range of civil remedies and felony penalties available under the Controlled Substances Act applicable to practitioners who provide narcotic drugs without obtaining the special registration, in violation of the registration, or after revocation of the registration; and requires the special registered practitioners to keep complete records of narcotic drugs directly administered to patients in their presence. S. 1115. Public Law 93-281, approved May 14, 1974.

Privacy protection.—Requires agencies to give detailed notice of the nature and uses of their personal data banks and information systems and their computer resources;

Establishes a new Privacy Protection Study Commission, which is to submit a report of its findings in 2 years;

Establishes certain minimum information-gathering standards for all agencies to protect the privacy and due process rights of the individual and to assure that surrender of personal information is made with informed consent or with some guarantees of the uses and confidentiality of the information;

Establishes certain minimum standards for handling and processing personal information maintained in the data banks and systems of the executive branch; for preserving the security of the computerized or manual system, and for safeguarding the confidentiality of the information;

Prohibits any Federal, State, or local government agency from denying any rights, privileges, or benefits provided by law because of an individual's refusal to disclose his or her social security number except with respect to a disclosure required by Federal law or any information system in existence and operating before January 1, 1975;

Gives the individual the right to be told upon request whether or not there is a Government record on him or her and to have access to it; allows enforcement of the act through the courts by individuals in civil actions;

Makes certain exceptions for CIA and police records;

And contains other provisions. H.R. 16373. P/H Nov. 21, 1974; P/S amended Nov. 22, 1974. (VV) S. 3418. Public Law 93- , approved 1974. (473,535)

Speedy Trials.—Makes effective the sixth amendment right to a speedy trial in Federal criminal cases by requiring that each Federal district court, in cooperation with the United States Attorney, establish a plan for trying criminal cases within 90 days of arrest or receipt of summons; provides a 7-year phasing-in period so that the goals of a 30-day limit between arrest and indictment and the 60-day limit between indictment and commencement of trial will not be in force until the seventh year to be phased in beginning in the second year after enactment as follows: during the 2d year—a 60-day arrest-to-indictment time limit and a 180-day indictment-to-trial time limit, during the 3d and 4th years—a 45-day arrest-to-indictment time limit and a 120-day arrest-to-trial time limit, during the 5th and 6th years—a 30-day arrest-to-indictment time limit and a 60-day indictment-to-trial time limit; requires that failure to comply with the phasing-in time limit schedule be reported to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts; provides a dismissal without prejudice sanction if a case extends beyond the specified time limits and provides that beginning the seventh year after enactment a prosecution can only be recommended following such a dismissal if the government can show "exceptional circumstances"; defines what is expected from the district courts, the United States Attorneys, and defense counsel in terms of planning for the implementation of speedy trials and provides reporting requirements so that the progress of implementation and its resource needs can be easily monitored; specifies that a judge should use a balancing test in order to determine whether to grant an exclusion from the speedy trial time limits; authorizes the creation of demonstration "pretrial Services Agencies" in 10 Federal districts to make bail recommendations, supervise persons on bail and assist them with employment, medical, and other services designed to reduce crime on bail; and contains other provisions. S. 754, P/S July 23, 1974. (VV)

Export control.—Amends the Export Administration Act of 1969 to improve United States capacity to respond to rapidly changing international economic conditions, and extends the act from July 30, 1974, to September 30, 1976;

Amends section 3(2)(A) of the act which sets forth congressional policy on the use of export controls in situations of short domestic supply to delete the word "abnormal" in relation to foreign demand, so that it will no longer be necessary that foreign demand for products be "abnormal" before export controls may be imposed;

Provides that it is the policy of the United States to use export controls to secure the removal by foreign countries of restrictions on access to supplies where such restrictions have had or may have a serious domestic inflationary impact, cause a serious domestic shortage, or have a serious adverse effect on employment in the United States, or where such restrictions have been imposed for purposes of influencing the foreign policy of the United States; establishes United States policy firmly in opposition to unreasonable restrictions on access to supplies, and firmly in favor of international cooperation to combat such restrictions;

Requires the Secretary of Commerce to monitor exports and contracts for exports (other than commodities) when such exports contribute or may contribute to domestic price increases or shortages which could have an adverse effect on the domestic economy;

Requires that license applications to export goods and technology subject to national security export controls must be processed within 90 days in order to alleviate delay; requires the Secretary to give interested parties an opportunity to comment when export controls are imposed for short supply purposes; provides statutory hardship relief under prescribed circumstances for persons who have historically exported materials made subject to export controls;

Adds provisions to establish review procedures for exports of goods and technology to "controlled countries" (the Soviet Union, Poland, Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, and such other countries as may be designated by the Secretary of Defense); requires that the Secretary of Defense be notified of all requests for licenses for exports to such countries to insure full consideration of the military and national security implications of exports to Communist countries;

Gives the President permissive authority to use license fees as a means of export control;

Requires a study by the President of laws and regulations governing the export and re-export of materials and information relating to any nuclear facility or part thereof and of domestic and international nuclear safeguards, and to make a report within 6 months to Congress on the adequacy of the regulations to prevent the proliferation of the nuclear capability for nonpeaceful purposes, the adequacy of the safeguards, and the efforts by the United States and other countries to strengthen safeguards in anticipation of the Conference on the Review of the Nuclear Proliferation Treaty scheduled for February 1975;

And contains other provisions. S. 3792. Public Law 93-500, approved Oct. 29, 1974. (327)

Export expansion.—Establishes new export expansion programs to facilitate the entry of more American firms into export trade and to encourage certain American companies already exporting to increase their exports by: (1) authorizing a categorical grant program to States, regions, and municipalities for export promotion projects; (2) authorizing export training programs to be conducted under the aegis of the Department of Commerce; (3) authorizing establishment of regional export assistance centers; (4) authorizing a program for the simplification of documentation, to be conducted by the Secretary of Transportation; (5) establishing a Federal Export Agency, with two export expansion programs, within the Department of Commerce; (6) requiring Federal agencies to prepare international economic assessment impact statements on any Federal action or proposal which would significantly affect the international economic relations, balance of payments, or balance of trade of the United States; (7) amending the Export Trade Act of 1918 to include within the scope of the Act the export of firms wishing to participate in export trade associations; and (8) establishing an international trade specialist program within the Department of Commerce to implement the purposes of this act, S. 1488. P/S June 13, 1974. (VV)

Holding companies.—Amends section 19(a) of the Federal Reserve Act to authorize the Federal Reserve Board to regulate debt obligations of a parent holding company or an affiliate of a member bank, regardless of the use of the proceeds within the holding company; exempts from this authority any bank holding company which has filed prior to the date of enactment an irrevocable declaration with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to divest itself of all its banks under section 4 of the Bank Holding Company Act; grants similar authority to the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Home Loan Bank Board with respect to parent holding companies and affiliates of insured non-member banks; exempts from the authority granted the regulatory agencies those debt obligations exempted under section 3(a)(3) of the Securities Act of 1933 from SEC registration and prospectus requirements (such as commercial paper issued by holding companies and their nonbank subsidiaries characteristically sold only to institutional investors in large denominations);

Amends the National Banking Act, the Federal Deposit Insurance Act and the National Housing Act to alleviate situations primarily in Arkansas, Tennessee, and Montana which have a 10 percent ceiling on business loans by permitting national banks and Federally-insured savings and loan associations and savings banks to charge interest on business or agricultural loans in the amount of $25,000 or more, at a rate of not more than 5 percent more than the Federal Reserve discount rate on 90-day commercial paper notwithstanding any State law; specifies that these provisions shall not apply to any loan made after July 1, 1977, or after the effective date of any law enacted by a State which prohibits the charging of interest at the rates provided herein; contains similar provisions applicable to small business investment companies' (SBIC's) loans;

Exempts borrowings of bank holding companies and bank deposits over $100,000 from State usury laws until July 1, 1977, or earlier if the State legislates otherwise, which would primarily affect California, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Montana. S. 3838. Public Law 93-501, approved Oct. 29, 1974. (VV)

Inflation policy study.—Directs the Joint Economic Committee to undertake an emergency study of the current state of the economy, with special reference to current inflation, and to provide Congress with specific legislative recommendations to improve the performance of the economy; authorizes $100,000 for the six-month period July 1, through December 31, 1974; and directs the Committee to submit to Congress a report of its findings and any recommendations by December 31, 1974. S. Con. Res. 93. Senate adopted July 9, 1974; House adopted amended July 31, 1974; Senate agreed to House amendment Aug. 7, 1974. (VV)

Interest Rates.—State Usury Ceilings.—Amends the National Banking Act, the Federal Deposit Insurance Act and the National Housing Act to permit national banks, Federally-insured state-chartered banks, savings and loan associations, savings banks and small business investment companies, to charge interest on business or agricultural loans in the amount of $25,000 or more, notwithstanding any State constitution or statute, at a rate of not more than 5 percent in excess of the discount rate on 90-day commercial paper in effect at the Federal Reserve bank in the Federal Reserve district where the institution is located; and amends the Federal Reserve Act, the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, and the Federal Home Loan Bank Act to exempt borrowings of bank holding companies and bank deposits over $100,000 from State usury laws for three years, except that if a state so chooses, it may pass a law to the effect that it does not desire to be covered under these provisions. S. 3817. P/S Sept. 25, 1974; reconsidered and P/S amended Oct. 2, 1974. NOTE: (Comparable provisions are contained in H.R. 15977, the Export Import Bank Act Amendments and S. 3838, the Bank Holding Companies bill.) (VV)

Municipal Securities.—Extends Federal regulation to bonds and securities dealers who trade in tax-exempt state and local bonds thus removing the exemption municipal securities now have under the provisions of the Exchange Act; vests the ultimate authority and responsibility for the regulation of the municipal securities industry in the Securities and Exchange Commission with the rulemaking responsibilities vested in a new self-regulatory agency, the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board, and the primary enforcement responsibility in the National Association of Securities Dealers and the federal bank regulatory agencies; and contains other provisions. S. 2474. P/S Sept. 16, 1974. (VV)

National Commission on Supplies and Shortages.—Establishes a one-year independent national commission to report to the President and Congress within 6 months specific recommendations with respect to institutional adjustments, including the advisability of establishing an independent agency, to provide for a comprehensive data collection and storage system to aid in the examination and analysis of the supplies and shortages in the economy of the United States and in relation to the rest of the world; provides for the appointment of 13 members—4 from the Executive branch, 4 from the Congress and 5 from the private sector; authorizes $75,000 for the establishment of an advisory committee to recommend possible policy-making processes and structure within the executive and legislative branches to coordinate efforts with appropriate multi-State, regional and State governmental jurisdictions; provides that the Commission make other reports and recommendations to the President and Congress by June 30, 1975; and authorizes therefor $500,00 for fiscal year 1975. S. 3523. P/S June 12, 1974. NOTE: (Comparable provisions are contained in S. 3270, the Defense Production Act Extension, Public Law 93-426.) (VV)

National Securities Market System.—Amends the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, to facilitate the development of a national securities market system for buying and selling stock in order to provide greater investor protection and maintain a strong capital raising and allocating system through the establishment of a uniform standard encompassing the various facets of the securities industry; vests in the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) the responsibility to take steps necessary to establish a national securities system and broadens SEC regulatory authority over securities information processors; consolidates and expands SEC oversight powers with respect to self-regulatory organizations, their members, and officers; confers upon the District courts the jurisdiction to command compliance with this act; clarifies the rule-making powers of SEC; and provides for judicial review of SEC actions in an appropriate court of appeals. S. 2519 P/S May 28, 1974. (VV)

Penny composition.—Eisenhower College.—Permits the Secretary of the Treasury to reduce the copper content of the penny if copper prices rise to levels which would make the penny more valuable for its copper content than as a coin and further permits the Secretary to produce pennies of other metallic content if copper prices rise to such an extent to make a reduced amount of copper impracticable as the major ingredient of the coin provided consideration is given to coin-operated devices and Congress is given a 60-day notice as to the alternative materials to be used; authorizes up to $10 million for Eisenhower College, Seneca Falls, New York, the official memorial to Dwight D. Eisenhower, which represents one-tenth of the gross receipts to the Treasury from the sale of proof silver dollars authorized by the Coinage Act Amendments of 1970; and provides that 10 percent of the authorization for Eisenhower College received from the Treasury sale of the proof coins shall be transferred to the Samuel Rayburn Library, Bonham, Texas, the memorial to the late speaker of the House of Representatives. H.R. 16032. Public Law 93-441, approved Oct. 11, 1974. (VV)

Pension reform.—Seeks to protect the interests of participants in employee benefits plans by requiring disclosure and reporting, by requiring employers to vest the accrued benefits of employees with significant periods of service and to meet minimum standards of funding, and by requiring plan termination insurance;

Reporting and disclosure.—Requires the administrator of each employee plan to furnish, in writing, to each participant a description of his rights and obligations under the plan; requires an annual audit and a report to be filed with the Secretary of Labor on certain financial and actuarial data;

Participation and coverage.—Sets minimum standards for participation and coverage in pension plans by employees; requires coverage of an employee who is at least 25 years old and has 1 year of service; requires credit up to 3 years of service prior to age 25; may require employees to be age 25 with 3 years service if the plan provides full and immediate vesting; exempts governmental plans (including Railroad Retirement plans) church plans (unless they elect coverage) and certain other plans;

Vesting.—Sets minimum standards for vesting of benefit rights derived from employer contribution by requiring vesting of employee pension credit according to one of three optional formulas: (1) graded vesting: 25 percent vesting after 25 years increased by 5 percent yearly through the 10th year and by 10 percent thereafter until the 15th year when 100 percent vesting is reached, (2) full vesting: 100 percent vesting after 10 years and (3) modified rule of 45: 50 percent vesting after 5 years when the sum of age and service total 45, increasing 10 percent each year thereafter and requiring 50 percent vesting for any employee with 10 years service regardless of age;

Funding.—Sets minimum standards for funding of plans to assure that pension plans will have sufficient funds to pay their obligations to participants and beneficiaries when they come due; provides for amortizing past service liability over no more than 30 or 40 years; authorizes waiver of minimum funding requirements upon a showing of substantial business hardship with the waived amounts to be amortized over no more than 15 years and prohibiting more than 5 such waivers within 15 years;

Portability.—Provides a voluntary portability system under which participating plans and employees can agree to transfer vested benefits from one plan to another through a central clearinghouse; facilitates portability by providing that an employee can transfer his vested benefits, upon changing employment, to an individual retirement account on a tax-free basis;

Plan termination insurance.—Provides a plan termination insurance program to be managed by a newly established Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation within the Department of Labor and funded by an annual tax of $1.00 per participant for single employer plans and 50 cents per participant for multi-employer plans, with vested pension benefits insured up to a benefit of $750 per month;

Fiduciary Standards.—Imposes strict fiduciary obligations on those who have the discretion or responsibility for managing pension and welfare plan assets; applied the "prudent man" rule to the conduct of fiduciaries; prohibits transactions involving the transfer of assets between the plan and parties in interest with certain exceptions;

Individual Retirement Accounts.—Provides that individuals not covered by a pension plan may take a tax deduction for contributions to an individual retirement plan in the amount of up to 15 percent of earned income or $1,000, whichever is less;

Limitation on Employee Contributions.—Limits the employer contribution tax deduction to an amount which would produce an annual pension of $75,000 for any one employee;

Enforcement.—Enforcement of standards to be provided by the Department of Labor and the Internal Revenue Service with, in general, the IRS enforcing the tax qualification requirements and the Labor Department enforcing violations of standards which result in denial of employee pension rights;

CXX—2599—Part 31

And contains other provisions. H.R. 2 (H.R. 4200). Public Law 93-406, approved Sept. 2, 1974. (360)

Public Debt Limit.—Increases, until March 31, 1975, the temporary debt limit to $95 billion, thereby providing for a $495 billion overall debt limit instead of the current $475.7 billion limit. H.R. 14832. Public Law 93-325, approved June 30, 1974. (270)

Pyramid Sales Act.—Makes the knowing selling, offering, or attempt to sell, of a participation or the right to participate in a pyramid sales scheme, a criminal offense with penalties of a fine of not more than $25,000 or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both; defines a pyramid sales scheme as a plan or operation which includes a means for increasing the participation in the plan or operation and with respect to which a participant pays a valuable consideration for the opportunity (a) to receive compensation for introducing any other person into participation in such plan or operation; or (b) to receive compensation when a person introduced by the participant introduces any other person into participation with the rights; provides that the fact the number of persons who may participate may be limited, or that conditions may be imposed with respect to eligibility shall not be construed to change the identity of any plan or operation that is a pyramid sales scheme; and contains other provisions. S. 1939. P/S Aug. 22, 1974. (VV)

Railroad retirement financing.—Restructures the Railroad Retirement system to place it on a sound financial basis; replaces, in title I, the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 with a new Railroad Retirement Act of 1974, which provides all retirement and survivor benefits for employees with ten years or more of railroad service, retiring after December 31, 1974; prevents future accrual of dual benefit rights—payment of separate social security and railroad retirement benefits—and breaks the retirement benefit into two components, one tier reflecting a basic social security benefit—calculated on the basis of both railroad and nonrailroad service—and a second tier related strictly to railroad service; protects the dual benefits of those already retired as well as present railroad employees who are vested under both systems as of January 1, 1975; liberalizes benefits whereby (1) persons retiring at age 60 with 30 years of service could receive supplemental annuities at age 60 rather than at age 65, (2) the spouse of a person who retires at age 60 with 30 years service could qualify for a spouse annuity at age 60 rather than at age 65, and (3) the benefits generally payable to a survivor would be increased from 110 percent of the comparable social security benefit to 130 percent of the comparable benefit; and contains other provisions. H.R. 15301. Vetoed Oct. 12, 1974. House overrode veto Oct. 15, 1974; Senate overrode veto Oct. 18, 1974. Public Law 93-445, without approval Oct. 18, 1974. (404, 457)

Renegotiation Act.—Unemployment compensation.—Extends the Renegotiation Act of 1951, as amended, which authorizes the Government to recapture excessive profits on certain Government contracts and subcontracts, for 12 months, until June 30, 1975, and extends for 30 days the benefits under the Federal-State unemployment insurance program to provide an additional period of unemployment benefits. H.R. 14833. Public Law 93-329, approved June 30, 1974. (VV)

Securities and Exchange Commission Enforcement Actions.—Exempts law enforcement actions brought by the Securities and Exchange Commission under the Federal securities laws as well as actions arising under the antitrust laws in which the United States is a complainant. S. 2904. P/S Oct. 4, 1974. (VV)

Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) paperwork reduction.—States as a sense of the Senate that the SEC should immediately proceed to evaluate the role of the small broker-dealer in the U.S. securities markets and determine if their survival is being jeopardized by unnecessary overlapping, and duplicative reporting requirements and urges the SEC to examine the paperwork burden of the small broker-dealer consistent with SEC's statutory mandate to protect the investor and, where possible, reduce and consolidate duplicative and excessive reporting requirements. S. Res. 173. Senate adopted Feb. 7, 1974. (VV)

Social Security amendments.—Amends the Social Security Act to authorize a $2.5 billion social services revenue sharing program, provides that the States will have maximum freedom to determine what services they will make available to reach the goals of self-support, family care or self-care, community-based care, and institutional care, the persons eligible for such services, the manner in which the services are provided, and any limitations or conditions on the receipt of such services; requires that any increase in Federal funding used by a State to purchase social services must result in an increase in the level of services, and that the State must submit an annual report on the use of funds for social services; retains the present $2.5 billion annual national limit on social services but permits re-allocation of funds unused by any State, and repeals the requirement that 90 percent of funds for services (other than the six specified high-priority services) be devoted to welfare recipients; authorizes a social security tax credit for low-income workers with families; requires the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to set up a separate organizational unit under the direct control of an Assistant Secretary for child support to review and aid State plans in implementing child support programs and in establishing effective systems for determining paternity and collecting support; and contains other provisions. H.R. 17405. P/H Dec. 9, 1974; P/S amended Dec. 17, 1974; conference report filed. (530)

Supplemental security income—unemployment compensation.—Authorizes payment of supplemental security income (SSI) benefits on the basis of presumptive disability, for up to 12 months, to otherwise eligible individuals who were formerly on the rolls of State programs of aid to the blind and disabled in order to allow benefits to continue while the Social Security Administration, which administers SSI, completes its eligibility review; extends unemployment compensation in Public Law 93-233, amending the Social Security Act, whereby a State can elect to come under the extended unemployment compensation program which provides for 13 weeks of extended benefits beyond the expiration of regular unemployment benefits, if the insured unemployment rate in the State is at least 4 percent without meeting the permanent law requirement that the rate also has increased by 20 percent over the prior 2 years; and provides a 1-year delay for the repayment by a State of funds it has received from the Federal government to pay unemployment compensation benefits. H.R. 13025. Public Law 93-256, approved Mar. 28, 1974. (70)

Tax amendments.—Extends for one year through December 31, 1975, the special amortization provisions for rehabilitation of law and moderate income rental housing, pollution control facilities, railroad rolling stock, and coal mine safety equipment enacted in the Tax Reform Act of 1969;

Deals with the tax treatment of accrued vacation pay;

Repeals the provision in the Revenue Act of 1971 requiring the application of the class life system (sometimes referred to as the asset depreciation range or ADR provision) to real estate after 1973 since the Treasury Department study for providing a system for incorporating real estate into the ADR system is not yet completed;

Grants relief to real estate investment trusts that involuntarily acquire property on foreclosure; increases the interest rate paid by taxpayers on tax deficiencies, and by the government on tax overpayments, from 6 percent to 9 percent per year effective for obligations outstanding on July 1, 1975, and provides a procedure whereby the interest rate may be adjusted as the prime rate quoted by commercial banks to large business changes, with the government interest rate to be 90 percent of the prime rate and not to be changed more than once every 2 years;

Includes among the State and local governmental obligations exempt from Federal income tax qualified scholarship funding bonds where the student loan programs are financed by non-profit higher education authorities which are requested by governments even though they do not constitute a State or local government bond;

Extends for one year until December 31, 1976, the present exemption on interest for bank deposits and other similar types of deposits and debt obligations of nonresident aliens or foreign corporations;

Provides that U.S. companies which were entitled to make the IET (Interest equalization tax) election may make the interest paid on that obligation exempt from withholding tax, and also exempts eligible obligations from U.S. estate tax when held by nonresident aliens;

Modifies the tax treatment of political organizations in 5 major respects: (1) provides that political parties or committees (and separate campaign funds) are to be taxed on investment income and on income from a trade or business, but not on campaign contributions they receive; in addition, allows $100 minimum before any tax is payable on investment business income; (2) allows the limited credit or deduction for campaign contributions to individual candidates, parties, and committees, in the year before a person announces his candidacy; (3) in general, treats newsletter committees (and separate funds) for tax purposes in the same way as political campaign committees; (4) appreciated property transferred by a taxpayer to a political party or committee, if occurring after May 7, 1974, is to be taxed to the donor at the time of transfer; (5) gift taxes are not to apply to contributions to political parties or committees;

Increases the maximum credit for contributions to a political candidate from $12.50 ($25 on a joint return) to $25 ($50 on a joint return), and increases the maximum deduction from $50 ($100 on a joint return) to $100 ($200 on a joint return);

Extends for one year to January 1, 1976, present law allowing owners of rental housing under low- and moderate-income housing programs full capital gain treatment with respect to any gain attributable to any excess of accelerated depreciation over straight-line depreciation after a holding period of 10 years, as opposed to 16 years and 8 months for regular rental projects;

Also, amends the tariff schedules of the United States to make duty-free imports of upholstery regulators, upholsterer's regulating needles and upholsterer's pins;

And contains other provisions. H.R. 421. P/H April 8, 1974; P/S amended Dec. 17, 1974; Conference report filed. (VV)

Tax treatment of POW's and MIA's.—Modifies the tax treatment of members of the Armed Forces of the United States and civilian employees who are prisoners of war or missing in action. H.R. 8214. Public Law 93, approved 1974. (VV)

Trade reform.—Authorizes the President, for a period of five years, to enter into trade agreements with foreign countries for the purpose of establishing fairness and equity in international trading relations, including (a) the reform of the rules governing international trade, (b) the harmonization, reduction, and elimination of tariff and non-tariff barriers to, and other distortions of international trade, and (c) the securing for the commerce of the United States, on a basis of reciprocity, equal competitive opportunities in foreign markets and to promote the economic growth of, and full employment in, the United States;

Authorizes the President to proclaim, subject to certain conditions and limitations, such modifications or continuance of any existing duty, such continuance of existing duty-free or excise treatment, or such additional duties as he determines are required or appropriate to carry out such trade agreements;

Authorizes the President to negotiate trade agreements with foreign countries providing for the harmonization, reduction, and elimination of nontariff barriers and other distortions of international trade and to establish constitutionally appropriate procedures for the consideration and implementation of such agreements by the Congress;

Requires the President in the exercise of his trade agreement authority to assure reciprocal trade benefits, and in particular fair treatment and equitable market access for exports of the United States, through the full exercise of rights in such agreements, including the reform and revision of the rules of international trade;

Requires the President in the exercise of his trade agreement authority to enter into international agreements governing fair and equitable access to supplies of food, raw materials, semi-manufactured and manufactured products;

Requires the reporting of the balance of trade of the United States on a cost, insurance, and freight basis;

Provides additional authority to the President temporarily to modify restrictions upon imports into the United States in response to balance of payments disequilibria;

Strengthens the independence of the United States Tariff Commission;

Provides for close and continuing Congressional oversight of international trade negotiations and the implementation and operation of international trade agreements;

Provides greater access and more effective delivery of import relief to industries, firms and workers which are seriously injured or threatened with serious injury by increased imports;

Establishes a program of adjustment assistance for communities adversely affected by imports, to expand investment and employment opportunities in such communities, and to improve existing adjustment assistance programs for workers and firms;

Improves procedures for responding to unfair trade practices in the United States and abroad;

Provides for the fullest possible participation in the negotiating process by private sector advisory bodies representing principal segments of the economy affected by international trade;

Authorizes the President to extend most-favored nation (nondiscriminatory) treatment, upon certain conditions, to countries not presently receiving such treatment, and to provide adequate safeguards against market disruption by imports into the United States from such countries; and

Authorizes the President to extend preferential tariff treatment to the exports of less-developed countries to encourage economic diversification and export development within the developing world. H.R. 10710. P/H Dec. 11, 1973; P/S amended Dec. 13, 1974; In conference. (511)

Wage and price stability council.—Authorizes $1 million to the President to establish, within the Executive Office of the President, a Council on Wage and Price Stability, consisting of 8 members and 4 adviser-members to be appointed by the President; directs the Council to monitor the economy and review government programs with regard to inflation; and provides that the Act shall terminate on August 15, 1975. S. 3919. Public Law 93-387, approved Aug. 24, 1975. (353)

EDUCATION

Educational funding and guaranteed student loans.—Provides that funds appropriated for fiscal years 1973 and 1974 for any program to which the General Education Act applies shall remain available for obligation and expenditure until June 30, 1975, and amends the Higher Education Act of 1965 to clarify congressional intent concerning the Guaranteed Student Loan Program so that students whose family incomes are less than $15,000 per year will be eligible for a $2,000 subsidized loan without a needs test and an additional $500 if they qualify under a needs test which is required for students whose family incomes are $15,000 or more to receive a subsidized loan up to $2,500. H.R. 12253. Public Law 93-269, approved Apr. 18, 1974. (VV)

Elementary and secondary education.—Revises and extends various educational programs through fiscal year 1978; authorizes the President to call and conduct a White House Conference on Education in 1977 to stimulate a national assessment of educational conditions, needs, and goals;

Changes the formula under title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act for allocation of Federal funds through the States to local educational agencies for special programs and projects for educationally deprived children so that grants to a local agency shall be determined by multiplying the number of eligible children by 40 percent of the State's average expenditure per pupil with the stipulation that no State will receive less than 80 percent or more than 120 percent of the national average expenditure, with the number of eligible children ages 5-17 to be counted as follows: (1) all children from families below the poverty level, as defined by the Orshansky Index of poverty—which allows variations for family size, sex of head of household, and whether the family is farm or non-farm; (2) two-thirds of the children from families receiving AFDC (Aid to Families with Dependent Children) payments bringing them above the Orshansky poverty level; and (3) children who live in institutions for delinquent or neglected children; requires an analysis of the measures of poverty used by the Federal government; authorizes use of $50 million from title I funds for part B incentive grants to States whose local financial support of schools is higher than the national average; authorizes $75 million for fiscal year 1975 for part C grants to local educational agencies having a high concentration of disadvantaged children and repeals part C effective July 1, 1975;

Makes three different consolidations: (1) an administrative consolidation allowing a State to make one comprehensive application for Federal funds (under programs administered by the Commissioner of Education) which are to be administered through the State educational agency; (2) a consolidation of categorical assistance programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act—titles II (libraries), III (innovation) and V (strengthening of education) and sections 807 (dropout prevention) and 808 (health and nutrition) and the National Defense Education Act—title III (equipment, other than section 305, loans to schools); and (3) a consolidation of federally operated education programs administered by the Commissioner under discretionary authority, with the Cooperative Research Act rewritten and retitled as the Special Projects Act to authorize the Commissioner to carry out special projects to experiment with new methods, techniques and practices for education and administration, and provide for the creation of seven new programs for education in the use of the metric system, for gifted children, community schools, career education, consumers' education, women's equity in education, and arts in education;

Extends and makes certain revisions in the impacted areas programs whereby local school districts are reimbursed proportionally for the number of pupils whose parents live and/or work on Federal property to make up for revenues lost on tax-exempt Federal property, including a revision of the present categories of A, B, and C to A and B, and makes certain changes in the rates of reimbursement payments;

Includes the authorization of a new national reading improvement program, an extensive revision of the Bilingual Education Act, and an expansion of programs under the Education for the Handicapped Act; contains provisions for the protection of the rights and privacy of parents and pupils, which include inspection of school records and requiring their consent for release of records;

Includes busing provisions, entitled the Equal Education Opportunities Act of 1974, stating that equal educational opportunities may not be denied on the basis of race, color, sex, or national origin; gives the findings of Congress that standards for busing have not been clear and uniform and that it is necessary and proper for the Congress, pursuant to its powers under the Constitution, to specify what are appropriate remedies for the elimination of the vestiges of dual school systems, except that these provisions are not intended to modify or diminish the authority of the courts to enforce fully the requirements of the 5th and 14th amendments to the Constitution regarding the elimination of such vestiges; provides that failure to attain a numerical balance of students on the basis of race, color, sex or national origin does not constitute denial of equal educational opportunity, that no court, department or agency of the United States shall order busing of any student to a school other than the school closest to home, and that school district lines may not be ignored or altered unless they were drawn for, and had the effect of, segregating school children; provides that a parent or guardian of a child being bused under court order may seek to reopen or intervene in the future implementation of the court order if the busing is a risk to the child's health or significantly impinges on the child's educational process; and extends the expiration date of present law prohibiting implementation of a court order until appeals or the time for appeals is ended from January 1, 1974, to June 30, 1978;

And contains other provisions. H.R. 69. Public Law 93-380, approved Aug. 21, 1974. (204, 315)

Environmental education.—Extends to July 1, 1977, the Environmental Education Act and reestablishes the Advisory Council on Environmental Education (which was terminated on May 17, 1973, when the Commissioner on Education published his intent to abolish the Council and Congress did not, within 90 days, disapprove of this action); authorizes therefor $5 million, $10 million, and $15 million for fiscal years 1975, 1976, and 1977 respectively; and permits the Commissioner to abolish the Council only after such intent is published in the Commissioner's annual report to Congress and only if either of Congress does not disapprove of this action. S. 1647. Public Law 93-278, approved May 10, 1974. (VV)

Health professions student loans.—Amends the Public Health Service Act to extend for 1 year, to June 30, 1975, the authorization for Federal capital contributions into the scholarship program for the National Health Service Corps and the loan program for health professions students. S. 3782. Public Law 93-385, approved Aug. 23, 1974. (VV)

Legal education assistance.—Authorizes the Commissioner of Education to carry out a program to assist persons from disadvantaged backgrounds to undertake training for the legal profession. H.R. 15296. Public Law 93-343, approved July 10, 1974. (VV)

ELECTION REFORM

Campaign reform.—Amends the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 and certain other laws relating to the financing and conduct of Federal election campaigns; provides for strict limits on contributions and expenditures; provides public financing of Presidential nominating conventions, Presidential primaries, and general elections, effective January 1, 1976; establishes a Federal Election Commission to administer and enforce provisions of the Act;

Candidate contribution limits.—Limits individual contributions to $1,000 to a candidate for each primary, run-off or general election; limits to $25,000 per year the total contributions an individual may make to all candidates; limits to $5,000 the amount a political committee may give a candidate or his campaign committee; permits a principal campaign committee designated by the candidate to contribute up to the full spending limit; prohibits cash contributions over $100 and bars contributions by foreign nationals; limits candidate contributions to own campaign for entire campaign as follows: President—$50,000, Senate—$35,000, and House—$25,000;

Spending limit.—Limits a Presidential candidate to $10 million total for all primaries; limits a Presidential nominee to $20 million in the general election; sets the following limits: Presidential nominating conventions—$2 million each major political party with lesser amounts for minor parties; Senate primaries—$100,000 or 8 cents per eligible voter, whichever is greater; House primaries—$70,000 or 12 cents per eligible voter, whichever is greater; Senate general elections—$150,000 or 12 cents per eligible voter, whichever is greater; House primaries—$70,000; House general elections—$70,000; provides that Senate limits apply to House candidates who represent a whole state; makes all spending limits subject to cost-of-living increases using 1974 as the base year;

Political party spending limits.—Permits a national political committee and also a State political party to spend $20,000 or 2 cents per eligible voter for each Senate candidate in the general election and $10,000 or 2 cents per eligible voter for each House candidate in the general election; permits a national political committee to spend 2 cents per total eligible voters in the United States for their Presidential nominee;

Exemptions.—Exempts from contribution and spending limits fund-raising cost of up to 20 percent of the candidate's spending limit and certain other costs up to $500 for food and beverages;

Public financing of Presidential campaigns.—Provides public financing from the Presidential Election Campaign Fund (funded by the dollar checkoff); as follows: General Elections: provides that nominees of the major parties are eligible to receive the full $20 million spending limit in public funds in which case private contributions are prohibited or they may elect to receive only private funds under the constraints of the contribution limits of $1,000 and $5,000 for individual and organizational contributions respectively; Nominating Conventions: provides $2 million optional funding to major party conventions and proportional funding for minor party nominating conventions to defray costs; Presidential Primaries: provides Federal matching of contributions of $250 or less to candidates in Presidential primaries after the candidate has qualified by raising $100,000 (of which $5,000 must be collected from each of 20 or more States) in matchable contributions; provides that the candidates of any one party may receive no more than 45 percent of the total amount available in the Fund, and that no single candidate may receive more than 25 percent of the total available;

Enforcement and Penalties.—Establishes a 6-member Federal Election Commission to administer election law and the public the Clerk of the House shall serve as non-voting members; provides that the President, the Speaker of the House and President Pro tempore of the Senate each shall appoint two members who shall be subject to confirmation by both Houses of Congress, with the Chairman to be elected by the members and to be rotated every year; authorizes the Board to issue subpoenas to require testimony and the production of evidence; vests the Board with power to bring civil actions in Federal district courts; charges the Commission with receiving campaign reports, making rules and regulations (subject to review by Congress within 30 days) and serving as a clearinghouse for election information; increases the existing fine to a maximum of $50,000 for violating spending limits and specifies penalties for other violations;

Other provisions.—Prohibits an elected or appointed official from accepting an honorarium of more than $1,000 for a speech or article or $15,000 total per year; permits use of excess campaign funds to defray expenses of holding Federal office; prohibits solicitation of contributions by franked mail;

And contains other provisions. S. 3044. Public Law 93-443, approved Oct. 15, 1974. (139-444)

Overseas citizens voting rights.—Guarantees the right of otherwise qualified private U.S. citizens residing outside the United States to vote in Federal elections in the State of their last voting domicile; requires a citizen, voting under the bill, to state his intent to retain his prior State as his voting residence and domicile if he has not registered to vote and is not voting in any other State, territory or possession of the United States; adopts a uniform absentee registration and voting procedure including the requirement that election officials mail out balloting material as promptly as possible after receipt of a properly completed application; recommends that the States adopt an alternate version of the Federal post card application; assures that Federal and State governments could not seek to impose taxes on a citizen which would cause him to lose any tax exemption solely on the basis of having exercised his right to register and vote absentee; and imposes a $100,000 fine and 5 years imprisonment for willful violations of the act. S. 2102. P/S July 18, 1974. (VV)

Watergate Committee.—Extends for 3 months, from February 28, 1974, to May 28, 1974, the date for the Select Committee on Presidential Election Campaign Activities to make its final report to the Senate of the results of the investigation and study conducted by it together with its findings and recommendations for new legislation. S. Res. 287. Senate adopted Feb. 19, 1974. (VV)

Authorizes the Committee to make available to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) such information requested by that agency and to investigate, receive, and inspect any data, documents, or other information held by the IRS directly related to the investigation being conducted by the IRS and the Committee. S. Res. 288. Senate adopted Feb. 21, 1974. (VV)

Increases the authorization for expenses of the Committee through May 28, 1974, from $1.5 million to $1.8 million, of which not to exceed $70,000 shall be available for the procurement of the services of individual consultants or organizations. S. Res. 288. Senate adopted Mar. 1, 1974. (VV)

Extends from May 28, 1974, to June 30,

1974, the date for the Committee to make its final report to the Senate of the results of the investigation and study conducted by it together with its findings and recommendations for new legislation and provides that the Committee may submit any interim reports it considers appropriate; terminates the Committee three months after the submission of its report provided however that if the judicial action brought by the Committee against the President for certain specified taped recordings of conversations between the President and his former counsel, John W. Dean, is not adjudicated, the Committee shall remain in existence until 30 days subsequent to a judicial determination; and empowers the Committee to report to the Senate an addendum to its final report based on what the taped recordings disclose in the event they are received pursuant to the final adjudication. S. Res. 327. Senate adopted May 22, 1974. (VV)

Increases the authorization for expenses of the Committee from $1.8 million to $2 million of which not to exceed $70,000 shall be available for the procurement of the services of individual consultants or organizations. S. Res. 328. Senate adopted May 28, 1974. (VV)

Authorizes the Select Committee to transfer its records to the Library of Congress; grants the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration complete control over access to and use of the records after the date of transfer; and authorizes the members of the Committee and staff members to testify before any court regarding their activities when requested to do so. S. Res. 369. Senate adopted July 29, 1974. (VV)

Watergate documents access.—Urges President Ford to take all steps necessary to assure full public access to all facts and investigations relating to Watergate including all papers, documents, memoranda, tapes, and transcripts during the period January 20, 1969, through August 9, 1974, except for those matters which are vital to national security interests. S. Res. 399. Senate adopted Oct. 3, 1974. (VV)

Watergate tapes preservation.—Directs the General Services Administration to obtain complete possession and control of all tape recordings, transcripts, and other materials recorded or prepared at the White House or other residences during the Presidency of Richard M. Nixon; provides that such material will be available to the Watergate Special Prosecutor and for use in judicial proceedings; gives Richard M. Nixon, or his written designee, access to the material; directs the GSA Administrator to formulate regulations with regard to their preservation and public access to them; establishes National Study Commission on Records and Documents of Federal officials to conduct a study with a view toward developing legislative or other recommendations regarding the control, disposition, and preservation of documents of Federal officials; and authorizes such sums as necessary to carry out the act. S. 4018. Public Law 93- , approved 1974. (432)

ENERGY

Coal leases.—Amends the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 relating to development of Federal coal resources as follows: (1) requires that leases be issued by competitive bidding only; (2) requires that leases be issued after adoption of comprehensive land use plans prepared in consultation with State and local governments and with ample opportunity for public review; (3) eliminates prospecting permits and preference right leases; (4) directs that leases will be for a 20 year term and as long thereafter as coal is produced; (5) requires the lessee to submit a development and reclamation plan 1 year after obtaining a lease; and (6) broadens the purposes for which States can use their share of coal leasing revenues. S. 3528. P/S July 9, 1974. (VV)

Coal slurry pipelines.—Amends the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920, as amended by the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Act, to make the law governing the issuance of rights-of-way over Federal lands for oil and gas pipelines also include coal pipelines; amends the Interstate Commerce Act to require Commission certification of public convenience and necessity before a coal common carrier may exercise its power of eminent domain granted under the Coal Pipeline Act of 1974 in extending, constructing, acquiring or operating coal pipelines or in abandoning any part of a pipeline certified under this Act; and defines application procedures and Commission powers in granting or denying a request for a certificate. S. 3879. P/S Sept. 18, 1974. (VV)

Daylight saving time.—Amends the Emergency Daylight Saving Time Energy Conservation Act of 1973 (Public Law 93-182) to put the entire nation on non-advanced time for the winter months beginning at 2:00 a.m., October 27, 1974, until 2:00 a.m., February 23, 1975, and changes from June 30, 1975, to July 31, 1975, the date by which the Secretary of Transportation must submit to the Congress his final report on the effects of advanced time in winter months. H.R. 16102. Public Law 93-434, approved Oct. 5, 1974. (VV)

Energy allocation for tourism industry.—Expresses the sense of the Senate that in any allocation of energy supplies or other actions by Federal departments and agencies to alleviate the energy shortage, proper consideration should be given to the provision of adequate supplies of energy to all segments of the tourism industry. S. Res. 281. Senate adopted Apr. 29, 1974.

Energy Emergency.—Declares that current and imminent fuel shortages have created a nationwide energy emergency; calls for proposals for energy emergency rationing and conservation measures and authorizes specific temporary emergency actions to be exercised, subject to congressional review and right of approval or disapproval, to assure that the essential needs of the United States for fuels will be met:

Establishes a Federal Energy Emergency Administration (FEEA) until May 15, 1975, to be headed by an Administrator who will be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate; transfers certain powers and duties of the President under the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973 to the FEEA Administrator; authorizes the promulgation of a rule to order priorities among users of crude oil, residual fuel oil, or any refined petroleum product, and for the assignment of rights entitling certain users to obtain products in precedence to others; requires the President to provide procedures by which any user may petition for review of priorities and entitlements;

Authorizes the FEEA Administrator to promulgate by regulation energy conservation plans to reduce energy consumption to a level which can be supplied by available energy resources through transportation controls, including highway speed limits, or other necessary and reasonable restrictions on the public or private use of energy, including limitations on energy consumption by businesses; provides that no energy conservation plan promulgated by regulation under this authority may impose rationing or any tax or user fee, or provide for a credit or deduction in computing any tax; terminates any such energy conservation plan on May 15, 1975; requires transmission of any plan to each House of Congress, and makes any plan which would become effective before March 15, 1974, subject to congressional disapproval; provides that any energy plan which would become effective on March 15, 1974, and before September 1, 1974, shall go into effect 15 days after its transmission to Congress if neither House disapproves; provides that any energy plan which would become effective on or after September 1, 1974, must be approved by act of Congress; provides procedures for Congressional review of the plans;

Directs the Administrator, to the extent practicable, to prohibit, as its primary energy source, the burning of natural gas or petroleum products by any major fuel-burning installation (including any existing electric powerplant) which, on the date of enactment, has the capability and necessary plant equipment to burn coal;

Directs the Administrator, within 30 days after enactment, to propose a contingency plan for allocation of supplies of materials and equipment for exploration, production, refining, and required transportation of energy supplies and for the construction and maintenance of energy facilities, implementation of such a plan to be subject to congressional approval by a means similar to that for any energy conservation plan;

Authorizes the Administrator, in order to supplement domestic energy supplies, to require production of oilfields to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of the Navy at the maximum efficient rate of production and, in certain cases, in excess of the maximum rate;

Requires the President to specify equitable prices for domestic crude oil, all residual oil, and all refined petroleum products; provides that within 30 days of enactment the ceiling price for all crude oil be the price for that grade of oil in that field at 6:00 a.m., May 15, 1973, plus $1.35, making the average basic price $5.25 per barrel with savings from a price rollback to be passed on to consumers on a dollar-for-dollar basis; provides that the President may establish a higher ceiling price up to $7.09 per barrel, upon proper justification to Congress, that a higher price is necessary for a recovery of costs as in the case of crude oil produced from stripper wells or by secondary or tertiary recovery;

Contains provisions for the protection of franchised dealers; provides, in relation to antitrust provisions, for procedures to achieve the goals of this act while retaining the integrity of the antitrust laws; authorizes the appropriate agencies to take action for conserving energy consumption by regulated carriers; authorizes certain restrictions on exports; provides for employment impact and unemployment assistance to those adversely affected by the energy emergency; directs the Secretary of Transportation to encourage the use of carpools; prohibits the use of limousines by Federal officials in the executive branch below the level of a Cabinet officer except for the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Department of State for diplomatic assignment; prohibits the use of funds for furnishing a chauffeur for individual use to any Federal official; provides for administrative procedures and judicial review; and contains enforcement provisions; authorizes to FEEA to carry out its functions and to make grants to States $75 million annually for fiscal years 1974 and 1975, with an additional $50 million for 1974 and $75 million for 1975 grants to States to carry out conservation measures and $500 million for fiscal year 1974 for grants to States for unemployment assistance;

Amends the Clean Air Act to permit the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to suspend, until November 1, 1974, any stationary source fuel or emission limitation; provides for implementation plan revisions; extends the interim standards for motor vehicle emissions to 1977;

And contains other provisions. S. 2589. Vetoed Mar. 6, 1974. Senate sustained veto Mar. 6, 1974. (34, 53)

Energy Reorganization (ERDA).—Consolidates the Federal government's fragmented and uncoordinated energy research and development functions by establishing the Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA), an independent agency formed from the transfer of the technical staff and national laboratories of the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC)—which is abolished by this Act—and certain research and development programs from the Department of Interior, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the National Science Foundation; provides that ERDA will be headed by a single Administrator, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, who will exercise broad functions to explore and develop all possible sources of energy—both nuclear and non-nuclear; provides safeguards against unwarranted priority being given to any single energy technology; establishes an Energy Resources Council to coordinate energy programs in the Federal agencies and to advise the President on energy matters;

Requires the President to report to Congress by June 30, 1975, additional recommendations for the organization of energy and related functions in the Federal government, including the advisability of creating a Department of Energy and Natural Resources;

Establishes the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, an independent bipartisan regulatory commission which is based upon the Regulatory Division of the AEC but with a revised internal organization and broadens the licensing and regulatory authority transferred to it from the AEC; requires Senate confirmation of the 4-member commission and chairman who are charged with protecting the nation's health and environment by ensuring the safety and the security of the nuclear industry and the weapons-grade and other radioactive materials used to fuel it; provides for three coequal directors, each with direct and independent access to the Commission, and each responsible for separate operations relating to nuclear reactor safety, nuclear materials security, and nuclear safety research; establishes civil and criminal penalties for noncompliance with regulations or failure to report potentially hazardous defects; requires the Commission to make quarterly reports to Congress on details of abnormal occurrences at licensed nuclear facilities and to widely disseminate initial information to the public within 15 days of learning of each abnormal occurrence which it determines is significant enough to be reported;

And contains other provisions. H.R. 11510. Public Law 93-438, approved Oct. 11, 1974. (VV)

Energy supply—clean air.—Directs the Federal Energy Administration (FEA) to prohibit an electric power plant from burning petroleum or natural gas if it has the capability to burn coal and authorizes, but does not require such prohibitions with respect to other major fuel-burning facilities aside from powerplants unless coal or coal transportation are not available or electrical service would be impaired; authorizes FEA to require that powerplants be designed to burn coal as well as other fuels; authorizes FEA to allocate coal to any facility that is prohibited from burning oil or natural gas;

Permits the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to suspend until June 30, 1975, any stationary source fuel or emission limitation as it applies to the Clean Air Act if (1) there is an unavailability of fuels to meet the act's requirements, (2) a plant converted to coal between September 15, 1973, and March 15, 1974, or was ordered to convert to coal by FEA, or (3) the suspensions would result in emissions that exceed the primary air quality standard for a particular region; permits EPA to delay a plant's compliance schedule until January 1, 1979, if (1) emission limits to maintain primary air quality standards could be met, (2) the suspension would not result in emissions that would exceed the primary standards in an air pollution control region, or (3) EPA approved an interim compliance plan; prohibits EPA from using parking surcharges to control air pollution;

Continues emission standards established for 1975 model year automobiles during the 1976 model year and delays until September 30, 1977, final automobile emission standards for carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons and until September 30, 1978, final standards for nitrogen oxides; provides that after January 1, 1975, an automobile manufacturer may seek a 1-year suspension of the statutory standards for hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide applicable to the 1977 model year and requires EPA to establish interim standards for such a suspension; provides for allocation of low sulfur fuel to minimize adverse effects on the public health; clarifies the relationship between the National Environmental Policy Act and the Clean Air Act; extends the Clean Air Act authorizations for 1 year; and provides criminal penalties for willful violations of the act. H.R. 14368. Public Law 93-319, approved June 22, 1974. (VV)

Energy transportation security.—Requires that 20 percent initially, 25 percent beginning after June 30, 1975, and 30 percent beginning after June 30, 1977, of oil for import into the United States shall be transported on U.S.-flag vessels to the extent that such vessels are available at fair and reasonable rates; authorizes the President to temporarily waive these requirements if he determines that an emergency exists; applies the requirements to direct shipments from the original point of production and to and from any intermediate points used for storage, refining, processing, packaging, unloading, or reloading of oil; exempts refiners whose total refinery capacity does not exceed 30,000 barrels a day provided that the total quantity of oil imported by or for such refiner does not in any year exceed the rated refining capacity of such refiner; permits reduction of license fees for imports of oil by 15 cents per barrel of oil other than residual fuel oil and by 42 cents per barrel for residual fuel oil if the oil is carried on privately owned U.S.-flag commercial vessels and the amount of the license fee reduction is passed on to the ultimate consumer;

Requires that not less than 10 percent of funds appropriated or otherwise made available for the foreign-trade requirements of the United States shall be allocated, to the extent that subsidy contracts are approved, to each of the Atlantic, Gulf, Great Lakes, and Pacific range of ports;

And contains other provisions. H.R. 8193. Public Law 93- , approved 1974. (366,528)

Federal Energy Administration.—Establishes the Federal Energy Administration (FEA) as an independent executive agency, to be headed by an Administrator to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate; transfers to the Administration four existing agencies now in the Interior Department—the Offices of Petroleum Allocation, Energy Conservation, Energy Data and Analysis, and Oil and Gas; transfers the Energy Division of the Cost of Living Council into the new Administration; requires policy coordination with the Environmental Protection Agency; authorizes the Comptroller General to monitor FEA operations and make public its reports; authorizes the General Accounting Office to issue subpoenas to obtain information from companies engaged in any phase of energy supply or major consumption of energy; creates an Office of Private Redress and Grievances to handle complaints; requires the Administrator to prepare a comprehensive energy plan mapping out the Administration's proposed course of action for the next two years; and contains other provisions. H.R. 11793 (S. 2776). Public Law 93-275, approved May 7, 1974. (VV)

Federal energy report.—Clarifies the provisions of the Federal Energy Administration

Act regarding the timing, methodology and content of the Administrator's annual report to Congress on the Nation's energy needs. S. 3871. P/S Oct. 10, 1974. (VV)

Geothermal energy.—Establishes a Geothermal Energy Coordination and Management Project composed of the Federal Energy Administration, the National Science Foundation, the Department of the Interior, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and the Atomic Energy Commission, which will be headed by an Administrator to be appointed by the President, and shall have overall management responsibility for geothermal resource inventory, research and development inventory programs; directs the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) to carry out geothermal energy technology research and development programs assigned to it by the Project, including the establishment of an inventory and assessment program and requires the Administrator to carry out a comprehensive program definition with respect to the development of geothermal energy with an interim report to be submitted by November 30, 1974, and the final report by August 31, 1975; authorizes the Project to initiate a research and development program with respect to commercial utilization of geothermal resources and to enter into cooperative agreements with non-Federal entities for the construction, operation, and maintenance of demonstration developments for the production of electric or heat energy from geothermal resources; authorizes the Chairman of the Project to designate the head of a Federal agency to guarantee loans (up to 75 percent of cost) for projects involving geothermal energy development and provides that such loans shall not exceed $25,000,000 for a single project or $500,000,000 to a single borrower; limits the life of the loan guarantee program to 10 years; requires the Chairman of the Project to submit annual reports to the President and Congress; and authorizes therefor for fiscal years 1976 through 1980 such sums as may be appropriated following enactment of the Act plus $2.5 million to NASA for fiscal year 1975 to fund the preparation of the required Program definitions and $50 million annually for the loan guarantee program. H.R. 14820. Public Law 93-410, approved Sept. 3, 1974. (VV)

Natural gas pipeline safety authorization.—Authorizes $2 million for fiscal year 1975 to carry out the purposes of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 which provides for Federal safety standards for those facilities in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce utilized in the transportation by pipeline and storage of natural and other gases, and authorizes $1.2 million for the Federal grant-in-aid programs which, under the act, provides States with the opportunity to assume responsibility for enforcing safety standards for intrastate facilities or assist in the enforcement of Federal safety standards. S. 3620. P/S Aug. 19, 1974. Note.—(Provisions contained in H.R. 15205). (VV)

Authorizes $2 million for fiscal year 1975 and $2.85 million for fiscal year 1976 to carry out the provisions of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 and authorizes $1.8 million for fiscal year 1975 and $2.5 million for fiscal year 1976 for the Federal grant-in-aid program for which States would receive compensation of up to 50 percent of their costs in carrying out pipeline safety activities. H.R. 15205. Public Law 93-403, approved Aug. 30, 1974. (VV)

Nonnuclear energy research and development.—Authorizes $20 billion over the next 10 years to undertake a comprehensive, national program of basic and applied research and development, including but not limited to demonstrations of practical applications of all potentially beneficial energy sources and utilization technologies within the Research and Development Administration (ERDA); directs the Administrator of ERDA to transmit to Congress by June 30, 1975, and annually thereafter, a comprehensive plan for energy research, development, and demonstration designed to achieve solutions to environmental problems which are immediate and short term (to the early 1980's), middle-term (the early 1980's to 2000), and long-term (beyond 2000); provides that such research programs shall include research, development and demonstrations designed: (a) to advance energy conservation technologies; (b) to accelerate the commercial demonstration of technologies for producing low-sulfur fuels suitable for boiler use, for producing substitutes for natural gas, including coal gasification, and for producing syncrude and liquid petroleum products from coal; (c) to demonstrate improved methods for the generation, storage and transmission of electrical energy; and (d) to explore a variety of other nonnuclear energy sources as well as to improve methods for the prevention and clean-up of marine oil spills; authorizes the Administrator to utilize various forms of Federal assistance and participation including: joint Federal-industry experimental, demonstration, or commercial corporations; contractual arrangements with non-Federal participants including corporations, universities and on-Federally owned facilities; Federal purchases or guaranteed prices of demonstration products; and Federal loans and loan guaranteed prices of demonstration products; and Federal loans and loan guarantees; provides that the establishment of a joint Federal-industry corporation must be approved by Congress; contains provisions regarding the patenting of inventions made or conceived in the course of a project; and contains other provisions. S. 1283. Public Law 93-—, approved 1974. (532)

Oil price increase.—States a sense of the Senate the urgent matter of communicating to the governments of Canada, Venezuela, and the Arab oil producing countries that the United States views with the utmost concern the recent oil price increases as detrimental to prices, real income and employment in the United States and that such actions should not be taken by these countries without regard for these effects on the life of the American people and for the possibility of reciprocal economic action by the United States which might adversely affect the economies of these countries. S. Res. 249. Senate adopted Jan. 29, 1974. (VV)

Oil refinery development.—Provides Federal loan guarantees of up to 75 percent for the construction or expansion of refineries owned by independent refiners if the refiner defaults on his obligation as the result of an inability to obtain sufficient crude oil supplies. S. 2743. P/S Nov. 26, 1974. (VV)

Oil shale funds.—Amends the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 to permit each State to use its share of oil shale revenues for purposes other than public roads and schools. S. 3009. P/S May 9, 1974. (VV)

Outer Continental Shelf energy.—Amends the 1953 Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act by setting guidelines for the Secretary of Interior to follow in the exercise of his broad authority under the 1953 Act to provide for the orderly and environmentally safe development of energy on the Outer Continental Shelf (OCS);

Leasing program.—Directs the Secretary to prepare a comprehensive 10-year leasing program by January 1, 1978 for all lands geologically favorable for oil and gas development without undue environmental damage; establishes procedures for a governor to delay issuance of leasing permits; directs the Secretary to conduct a survey of oil and gas resources of the OCS as a basis for the development and revision of the leasing program which requires annual review and approval; includes protection of confidential and proprietary information supplied by each lease or permit holder or applicant;

Research and development.—Directs the Secretary to carry out a research and development program to improve technology of offshore oil operations if such research is not done by private industry;

Oil spill liability.—Puts into law the existing Departmental regulation that an OCS lessee is liable for the total cost of control and removal of spilled oil, regardless of fault; creates a new strict liability rule for damages from OCS oil spills patterned after the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act of 1973; sets a $100 million limit for damages from any one incident with the lessee liable for the first $7 million and the Offshore Oil Pollution Settlement Fund liable for the balance; finances the Settlement Fund by a fee of 2½¢ on each barrel of oil produced from the OCS;

Coastal States fund.—Establishes a Coastal States Fund in the Treasury; provides that 10% of the Federal OCS revenues but not to exceed $200 million per year will be available for grants to assist Coastal States in ameliorating adverse environmental impacts and controlling secondary economic and social impacts stemming from the development of onshore support facilities for OCS development; provides that grant eligibility will be determined by the Secretary of Commerce with the Secretary of Interior managing the program so that the activities under this act will be coordinated with those under the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972;

Enforcement and safety regulations.—Provides civil and criminal penalties for violations of the act and provides for citizen suits; requires annual on-site inspections to insure compliance with safety and environmental regulations;

Revised bidding systems.—Revises the way offshore oil and gas resources are leased; eliminates the royalty rate bid for exploration rights with a fixed cash payment on profits; retains the present cash bid system for exploration rights with a fixed royalty of at least 12½% of the gross revenues from the lease; authorizes lease sales under which net profits from the seas are shared with the U.S. Treasury; requires a National Strategic Energy Reserve to be set aside as part of the leasing program;

And contains other provisions. S. 3221. P/S Sept. 18, 1974. (393)

Petroleum allocation—mandatory.—Extends the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973 which would expire on February 28, 1975, until June 30, 1975. S. 3717. P/S Aug. 12, 1974. (VV)

Extends for an additional 6-month period, until August 31, 1975, the existing authorities under the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973 to assure that the allocation and price control authorities contained in the Act will continue through the ensuing winter and spring and give Congress an opportunity to consider whether the Act should be further extended or whether substantive amendments should be made. H.R. 16757. Public Law 93-511, approved Dec. 5, 1974. (VV)

Petroleum products fair marketing.—Prohibits suppliers from terminating, canceling, or failing to renew a franchise unless the affected distributor or retailer fails to comply substantially with any essential and reasonable requirement of the franchise, fails to act in good faith in carrying out the terms of the franchise, or unless the supplier goes out of business. S. 1694. P/S Aug. 7, 1974. (VV)

Solar energy research.—Establishes an interagency Solar Energy Coordination and Management Project to coordinate and administer the Federal program of research and development of solar energy; directs the chairman of the Project to initiate a solar resource determination and assessment program and a research and development program to facilitate commercial utilization of solar energy; requires the Chairman to initiate a program to construct demonstration facilities or powerplants for the development and use of solar energy; requires the establishment of a Solar Energy Information Data Bank to collect and disseminate information with respect to solar energy technologies; directs the Chairman to cooperate with other nations on solar energy research and projects; delineates the following as the advanced solar energy technologies covered by the Act: (1) solar heat for industrial purposes, (2) thermal energy conversion for electric powerplant generation, (3) conversion of organic materials to energy, (4) photovoltaic conversion, (5) sea thermal power conversion, (6) windpower conversion, (7) solar heating and cooling of housing and of commercial and public buildings, and (8) energy storage; provides that the Chairman may proceed with the construction of any small scale demonstration plant not in excess of $20 million; authorizes $75 million for fiscal year 1978 and such amounts as may be necessary for construction of demonstration projects; establishes a Solar Energy Research Institute to carry out any research, development or related functions assigned to it by the Chairman of the Project; and contains other provisions. S. 3234. Public Law 93-473, approved Oct. 26, 1974. (VV)

Solar heating and cooling.—Authorizes $5 million to NASA for fiscal year 1975, $5 million to HUD for fiscal year 1975 to be used to reimburse the Department of Defense, the National Bureau of Standards, and the General Services Administration for expenses incurred by them in carrying out their respective functions, and an additional $50 million for fiscal years 1976 through 1979 for further development and testing for large scale commercial use of solar systems in heating and cooling residential and commercial buildings. H.R. 11864. Public Law 93-409, approved September 3, 1974. (VV)

Truck fuel prices.—Provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall issue its final order in Docket No. MC 43 (Sub. No. 2) as soon as possible, which shall become effective not later than February 15, 1974, in order to alleviate the threat of a national transportation crisis caused by the requirement that carriers reimburse their owner-operators for all increases in the price of fuel over the base period May 15, 1973. S.J. Res. 185. Public Law 93-249, approved Feb. 8, 1974. (VV)

Washington energy conference.—States as the sense of the Senate that the Washington Energy Conference, called by the President to provide a forum for the discussion of the common problems faced by the oil consuming nations, should consider (1) conservation measures necessary to reduce demand; (2) procedures for the emergency sharing of oil resources; (3) guidelines for bilateral agreements between oil consuming and oil producing countries; (4) coordination of research efforts in developing conservation practices and alternative sources of energy; (5) the responsibility for and the means to help to alleviate the plight of the developing countries in the oil crisis; and (6) closer coordination of fiscal and monetary policies; and further states that the United States should continue to bring about conditions of peace and stability in the Middle East. S. Res. 279. Senate adopted Feb. 6, 1974; Reconsidered and adopted by Senate amended, Feb. 7, 1974. (VV)

ENVIRONMENT

Coastal zone management.—Increases the authorization for program development grants from $9 million to $12 million; removes the 10 percent limitation on the amount an individual coastal State can receive for program management assistance, and would replace it with specific graduated dollar limitations; reinstates, at the level of $6 million per year, the authorization for estuarine sanctuary grants which expire on June 30, 1974; extends both the program development grants and administrative grants authority for an additional 2 years from fiscal year 1977 to fiscal year 1979; and contains other provisions. S. 3922. P/S Dec. 18, 1974. (VV)

Deepwater ports.—Establishes a licensing and regulatory program governing offshore deepwater port development beyond the territorial limits and off the coast of the United States for use to transfer oil and natural gas transported by tanker to and from States of the United States; authorizes the Secretary of the Department in which the Coast Guard is operating (currently the Department of Transportation) to issue licenses to own, construct and operate deepwater ports; requires the Secretary to exercise this authorization in consultation with other Federal agencies (Interior, State, Environmental Protection Agency and the Corps of Engineers) and with the approval of the governor of the adjacent coastal state; requires the Federal Trade Commission and the Attorney General to comment on whether issuance of a license would adversely affect competition, restrain trade or promote monopolization; requires a detailed environment impact statement to satisfy the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act; creates levels of liability for damages for oil spills and a $100 million Deepwater Port Liability Fund which is financed by a charge of 2 cents per barrel of oil flowing through any licensed deepwater port; and contains other provisions. H.R. 10701 (S. 4076). Public Law 93-—, approved 1974. (448)

Environmental data centers.—Authorizes the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to provide financial assistance for the establishment of a qualified environmental research and education center at a university in each State or, at the option of participating States, to establish one regional center to serve a group of States; requires that each center conduct research, training, and environmental activities utilizing the interdisciplinary and interinstitutional capabilities in its area and, where desirable, arrange for a consortium of institutions to conduct these activities; recommends that each center coordinate environmental activities in nonregulatory areas; and provides Federal funding on a State-by-State basis with additional funds available on a matching basis. S. 1865. P/S June 12, 1974. (VV)

Ocean dumping.—Amends Public Law 93-352, relating to ocean dumping, in order to implement the Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter, signed by the United States on December 29, 1972, and ratified by the Senate on August 3, 1973; extends U.S. law to include regulation of the carriage and dumping of foreign-source waste material by U.S. vessels and aircraft; expands the definition of "material" to include oil taken on board a vessel or aircraft for the purpose of dumping at sea; seeks to give guidance to those administering the Act in instances where the standards of the Act differ from those of the Convention; and contains other provisions of a technical or conforming nature. H.R. 5450. Public Law 93-254, approved Mar. 22, 1974. (VV)

Extends the Marine Protection Research and Sanctuaries Act of 1972 for 1 year, through fiscal year 1975, and authorizes therefor $5.5 million to carry out the provisions of title I of the act which provides for the control and regulation of the dumping of land-generated wastes at sea. H.R. 15540. Public Law 93-472, approved Oct. 26, 1974. (VV)

Oil pollution.—Incorporates into statutory law the rights, duties, and responsibilities of the United States under the International Convention Relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casualties, signed November 29, 1969, at Brussels, which permits a coastal nation to take whatever action it deems necessary to prevent, mitigate, or eliminate a threat of oil pollution resulting from a maritime accident beyond that coastal nation's territorial limits by vesting such authority in the Secretary of the Department in which the Coast Guard is operating; gives the Secretary the authority to determine the extent of danger resulting from a collision, stranding, or other disablement of a vessel carrying oil, and to remove and, if necessary, destroy the ship and cargo which is the source of the danger; incorporates general guidelines for determining the permissible scope of intervention actions; authorizes actions against the United States in the Federal courts by persons claiming compensation; creates a mechanism for settling controversies between signatory nations, or between such nations and claimants relating to compensation for excessive measures; authorizes the Secretary to issue rules and regulations to carry out the purposes of this Act; imposes criminal penalties to insure full compliance with the legislation; and extends the right of intervention now inherent in the Federal Government for vessel incidents in territorial waters to incidents on the high seas involving potential oil pollution damage. S. 1070. Public Law 93-248, approved Feb. 5, 1974.

Safe drinking water.—Establishes a program within the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to regulate drinking water whereby the Federal Government will exercise a new responsibility to set standards and provide assistance in order to protect public water supplies from contamination by providing that (1) EPA establish minimum Federal drinking water standards prescribing maximum Federal drinking water standards for the operation and maintenance of drinking water systems and surveillance, monitoring, site selection and construction standards for public water systems to assure safe dependable drinking water; (2) EPA establish recommended standards to assure esthetically adequate drinking water; (3) the States will be primarily responsible for enforcing the standards, with Federal enforcement if the States fail to act or in cases of imminent hazard; (4) there be established a variance and exemption procedure pending compliance to provide relief for those water supply systems less able to afford treatment technology; (5) the States may establish standards which are more stringent than the Federal drinking water standards; (6) primary authority for regulating underground injection of water contaminants will be exercised by the States in accordance with EPA guidance regulations; (7) EPA has standby authority to allocate chlorine and other chemicals essential to water treatment; (8) a National Drinking Water Council be established to advise the Administrator on scientific and engineering matters; (9) EPA conduct and promote research, technical assistance and the training of personnel for water supply occupations; (10) EPA make grants for State supervision programs, with no State to receive less than 1 percent of the annual appropriation for this purpose; (11) EPA make grants for special study and demonstration projects with respect to water supply technology, and guarantee loans up to $50,000 per system for meeting national regulations; (12) EPA conduct a rural water survey within 18 months of enactment; and (13) citizens be authorized to bring injunctive suits against violators of primary drinking water standards and against the Administrator for failing to perform mandatory duties. S. 433. Public Law 93-523, approved Dec. 16, 1974.

Solid waste disposal authorizations.—Authorizes $76 million for each of fiscal years 1975 and 1976 under the Solid Waste Disposal Act. H.R. 16045. P/H August 5, 1974; P/S amended Dec 17, 1974. (VV)

Strip mining control.—Establishes a nationwide program to prevent the adverse effect to society and the environment resulting from surface coal mining; places the authority for the administration of the Act with the Secretary of Interior who shall prepare and publish within 6 months regulations concerning coal surface mining and reclamation operations and a detailed description of actions to be taken by a State to develop an acceptable State program to regulate such operations; establishes the Office of Reclamation and Enforcement in the Department of the Interior which will be headed by a Director to be named by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate; gives States 18 months to submit their regulatory programs for approval by the Secretary which upon approval gives States full responsibility for all regulation of surface mining and reclamation within the State; provides for Federal regulation of strip mining and reclamation in any State which proves unwilling or unable to do so itself; establishes an interim surface mining permit program which is in effect until the deadline for approval of a State program; sets requirements for performance bonds which must be filed before a surface mining permit is issued, such bond to satisfy the costs for reclamation of the land mined; sets criteria to be met by all surface mining and reclamation operations under a State program, a Federal program, and Federal Lands Program or the State or Federal interim permit, including the banning of downslope dumping of spoil, and mined materials in mountainous areas and restoration to the approximate original contour of the land with all highwalls (vertical cuts in the mountainside), spoil piles and depressions eliminated; provides for civil and criminal penalties for certain violations of the act; provides for citizen suits against persons violating the act or against the responsible regulatory authority; establishes a process for designation of areas as unsuitable for surface mining and prohibits new surface mining on National Parks, National Wilderness and National Forest lands; applies the requirements of the Act to public corporations, agencies, and utilities, including the Tennessee Valley Authority, which engage in surface mining; creates an "Abandoned Mine Reclamation Fund" in the Treasury to be funded by a reclamation fee of 35¢ per ton of coal produced by stripmining or 25¢ per ton for underground mined coal or 10% of the value of the coal, whichever is less; provides that 50% of the funds collected annually shall be spent in the State contributing the funds; authorizes an in-depth study by the National Science Foundation and the National Academy of Engineering involving surface and open pit mining for minerals other than coal; provides that where the surface owner is not the owner of the mineral rights, written consent or waiver by the owner must be obtained, or the surface miner must in addition to the performance bond required; places a moratorium until March 1976 on all surface mining of property privately owned where the Federal Government owns the mineral rights; authorizes funds to be used on a matching basis for the establishment of a mining and mineral resources institute or center at one college or university in each State; authorizes grants to States to provide cash payments to persons who become unemployed as a direct result of the administration and enforcement of the Act and who are not eligible for regular unemployment assistance; and contains other provisions. S. 425. Public Law 93-—, approved 1974.

Tennessee Valley Authority pollution control financing.—Amends section 15(a) of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 to provide that TVA may defer the repayment of appropriations investment required in any one of the fiscal years 1976 through 1980 in which expenditures of the Corporation for certified pollution control facilities exceed the $20 million required annual repayment, and allows TVA to credit the difference between the amount expended for such facilities and the amount of the repayment deferred against the amount required to be paid as a return on appropriation investment of the Federal Government during any fiscal year for which a repayment deferral is in effect. H.R. 11929 (S. 3057). Public Law 93- , approved 1974. (VV)

Water Pollution Control Act extension.—Extends until June 30, 1975, those sections of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended, for which authorizations expired at the end of fiscal year 1974. S. 4073. Public Law 93- , approved 1974. (VV)

National Science Foundation authorization.—Authorizes $807,500,000 to the National Science Foundation for fiscal year 1975 and an additional $5 million in foreign currencies which the Treasury Department determines to be excess to the normal requirements of the United States. H.R. 13999. Public Law 93-413, approved Sept. 14, 1974. (VV)

National science policy.—Establishes a White House Council of Advisers on Science and Technology to advise the President and Congress with respect to Federal policies, plans, and programs in science and technology and requires the Council to make annual recommendations regarding the level of Federal investment and allocation priorities among major programs in this area; authorizes the Council to contract with the National Academy of Sciences for a comprehensive 10-month study of the Federal organization for civilian science and technology; redesignates the Federal Council for Science and Technology as the Federal Coordinating Committee for Science and Technology and gives it the statutory authority to coordinate all Federal plans and programs in science and technology; requires the National Science Foundation to aid in the development of national policies and to clarify the policymaking role of the National Science Board and broaden its membership; establishes an Intergovernmental Science and Technology Advisory Committee to advise the Foundation and the States on the application of science and technology throughout the Nation and make grants of up to $100,000 to any State for the establishment of a State Office of Science and Technology; and authorizes therefor $8 million for fiscal year 1975 and $14 million for fiscal year 1976. S. 32. P/S Oct. 11, 1974. (VV)

No-fault motor vehicle insurance.—Establishes a system of nationwide insurance for medical expenses and loss of wages of victims of motor vehicle accidents regardless of fault; supersedes present State law to the extent of the bill by the enactment of a no-fault plan in title III of the bill which applies unless a State adopts a no-fault plan which meets, at a minimum, the standards of the no-fault plan in title II of the bill;

Requires, under the title II plan, insurance which provides unlimited coverage for "allowable expenses" professional medical treatment and care, emergency medical services, and medical and vocational rehabilitation services, coverage for funeral expenses not to exceed $1,000, for work loss— income and reasonable expenses for hiring a substitute to perform self-employment services—with minimum coverage of the lesser of a monthly amount equal to $1,000 multiplied by State average per capita income over nationwide average per capita income or actual monthly earned income up to a total of $25,000 multiplied by the same formula or such total amount as may be determined by the State but not less than $15,000, and for replacement services and survivor's loss subject to reasonable limits and exclusions, and permits a deductible of not over $100 per individual and a maximum 1-week waiting period; permits the offering of greater basic work loss benefits or added benefits for work loss or for noneconomic detriment; requires that the no-fault insurer offer added insurance for collision and upset damage;

Sets other requirements that a State must meet which include making insurance available to all, and the authorizing of the State insurance commissioner to provide an accountability program for medical and vocational rehabilitation services and to take steps to assure the availability of emergency health services and medical and vocational rehabilitation services in the State; permits in section 204(f) entities providing benefits other than no-fault on account of an injury to coordinate such benefits with benefits payable by a no-fault insurer on account of the same injury if this would result in lower cost to the purchaser of such other benefits; makes health insurance the primary coverage for "allowable expenses" (by subtracting health insurance benefits from total loss for "allowable expenses" under no-fault insurance) if it provides unlimited coverage and meets the same obligations unless the State determines with the approval of the Secretary of Transportation that this would affect adversely or unreasonably discriminate against the interests of persons required to provide security covering motor vehicles in the State;

Requires, except as provided in the section on assigned claims, subtraction from net loss of any benefits and advantages from social security, workmen's compensation, any State-required temporary, nonoccupational disability insurance, and all other benefits except the proceeds of life insurance available from any government unless the law providing them makes them excess or secondary to the benefits under this act, and provides for subtraction of up to 15 percent of income tax saving in calculating net work loss where benefits are not taxable income;

Abolishes tort liability for injury under the title II no-fault plan with the following exceptions: (1) uninsured motorist; (2) manufacturer's products liability; (3) intentional injury to self or others; (4) for work loss over the maximum coverage for amounts excluded from work loss for replacement service loss or for survivor's loss; (5) for noneconomic detriment—pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, and other nonpecuniary damage recoverable under the applicable tort law—if the accident results in (a) death, serious and permanent disfigurement, or other serious and permanent injury or (b) more than 90 continuous days of total disability; (6) a person or government if such injury was caused or not corrected by an act or omission not connected with the maintenance or use of a motor vehicle; does not immunize an individual from liability to pay a fine on the basis of fault, and prohibits payment of any such fine by an insurer; permits the State to treat auto damage on a fault basis as it is presently done, or place it under a no-fault system;

Provides greater benefits in the title III plan, which places no limitation on the total benefits payable for allowable expenses, contains the same formula for monthly payments for work loss benefits but does not limit the total amount payable in all; provides benefits for replacement services loss and survivor's loss subject to a $200 per week ceiling, and abolishes tort liability for injury, including liability for non-economic detriment, except with regard to an uninsured motorist, manufacturer's products liability and intentional injury to self or others;

And contains other provisions. S. 354. P/S May 1, 1974. (156)

Patent and Trademark Office.—Changes the name of the Patent Office to "Patent and Trademark Office" and the title of the Commissioner of Patents to "Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks." H.R. 7599. Public Law 93-318, approved July 1974. (VV)

Patents.—Changes the title of the First Assistant Commissioner of Patents to Deputy Commissioner of Patents; provides that the 15 examiners-in-chief in the Patent Office shall be appointed under Civil Service and confirmed by the Senate; empowers the Commissioner of Patents to accept late payment of the patent issue fee if delay in payment is shown to have been unavoidable, and contains provision for and limitations on retroactivity of the Commissioner's new authority to excuse late payment of the issue fee. H.R. 9199. Public Law 93-319, approved July 1974. (VV)

Postal rate adjustments.—Increases the number of years before users of certain classes of mail have to pay higher postage rates as follows: (1) second-class regular (magazines and newspapers), special or book-rate fourth class (books or records), and controlled circulation publications phasing to be increased from the present five years to eight; (2) preferred second-class, non-profit class (circulars from charitable organizations), and the special fourth-class library rates phasing to be increased from the present 10 years to 16. (Under the Postal Reorganization Act, Public Law 91-375, all classes of mail are required to pay postal rates established by the Governors of the Postal Service. For those classes of mail which formerly received reduced or preferential rates by law or practice, the impact of the rate increases is amortized—or phased—over a 5-year period which provides that Congress is to appropriate the revenue foregone by the Postal Service—the difference between the rate actually paid and the rate which would have been paid except for the phasing.) S. 411. Public Law 93-328, approved June 30, 1974. (178)

Presidential pardons.—States the sense of the Senate that the President not grant a pardon hereafter to any individual accused of any criminal offense arising out of the 1972 Presidential campaign and election prior to the indictment and trial of such individual.
